Ruth Lester resigns her position as stenographer in the office of the chief of police owing to his insulting advances. Soon afterwards she secures employment with the district attorney, Anthony Curtis, an upright young man bent on putting the corrupt chief and Mason Clark, a crooked contractor, out of the running. Anthony and Ruth become fast friends and when he is sent to the mountains to rest she accompanies him in her official capacity. One day while they are fishing Ruth slips and Anthony takes her in his arms, then and there professing his love for her. Unluckily emissaries of the police chief have secreted themselves in the bushes with a camera. The embrace is duly recorded on the film and, when published in the papers, the city enjoys the biggest scandal in years.

To Ruth this comes as a terrible shock and none the less to Anthony. In fact, he suspects that Ruth was after all in the employ of the chief. Stunned at his accusation of her, Ruth lays a careful plan and soon afterwards the city enjoys another juicy morsel when Mason Clark and Ruth are arrested for violating the hotel ordinance. On the stand Ruth incriminates herself until, during a short recess, she has the opportunity of talking to Clark alone. She says that if he will write a confession stating that the picture that appeared in the papers was a frame-up she will tell the true story. Clark agrees and then Ruth exonerates him—and herself—letting all the facts in the case be known. Her own good name restored and the corrupt forces put to rout, Ruth finds happiness in Anthony's arms.

SUGGESTIONS

The title of the picture suggests a mystery story and is rather misleading in this respect although it must be confessed it will attract. The big point to play up your advertising is the theme, woman in politics, with the additional bouquet to throw at the female of the species that this particular woman puts in all over her male enemies. A number of advertisements can be derived from such a plan of action.

If you are on the look out for something sensational use the situation in which the heroine compromises herself with her lover's political enemy in order to force a confession of his crookedness. This has a certain amount of appeal and can be presented in a forceful way.

Star, director and supporting cast are well known. Use their names. You can use superlatives in describing Miss Brockwell's emotional ability and you'll come close to the truth of the case.

"SATAN JUNIOR"—METRO

Viola Dana Excellent in New Comedy Role

VIOLA DANA'S ability, personality and evident enthusiasm are qualities that make nearly every one of her screen appearances thoroughly enjoyable. Given a story of fair value she can always be counted on to provide an entertainment of more than merely fair value. And with a particularly amusing and originally written story such as offered her in Van Zo Post's "Diana Ardway" she gloriously succeeds in putting gloom down for the count in the first reel and keeping him there for the other four. The Dana ability and personality have been reinforced by a story, the interest of which is as sure as the tide.

As a result "Satan Junior" takes its place along with the best in picture comedy. The story is laughably original, to the screen at least, in its principal character and general outline. Diana Ardway, rich, and accustomed to getting all sorts of moons when she cried for them, sets eyes on Paul Worden, a much-talked-of playwright, and straightway begins to pursue him. Worden will have none of her, but she persists and persists, pursues and pursues, until finally he just has to capitulate to save himself.

This romantic chase, set in beautiful mountain scenes, tasteful settings and expertly photographed, is the sum and substance of one of the best hour's entertainments we have ever set through. Milton Sills is a personable Worden. Herbert Blache is the star's new director.—Length, 5 reels.—Released March 3.—Peter Milne.

AD TALK

Viola Dana, than whom there is no better comedienne on the screen today, will be seen on the ———— theatre screen on ———— of ———— week when "Satan Junior" is shown for the first time in this city. Miss Diana has a perfectly delightful part in this picture, that of Diana Ardway, the strong-minded daughter of a millionaire, who sets eyes on Paul Worden, supposedly a wicked playright but in reality just a playright, and who determines to have him for her husband. Naturally Paul is taken somewhat aback by Diana's swift decision in his direction and he decides to fight. And fight he does but eventually he must needs capitulate to the charms of the impulsive Diana.

Like all pictures, the story loses all value in the mere telling. We can not include the delightful comedy, the myriad clever touches injected by the star in this brief outline of the plot. But suffice it to say here that Miss Dana was never in a more amusing picture than "Satan Junior." Her forte has not always been considered comedy but no one can consider it anything else after witnessing her performance here. Her support includes such well known players as Milton Sills, Lilie Leslie and Lloyd Hughes.

"Satan Junior" is adapted from the story "Diana Ardway" by Van Zo Post and was produced under the direction of Herbert Blache. Feature comedies are all too scarce these days and it is a pleasure to be able to announce such a completely amusing and prettily set picture as "Satan Junior."

THE STORY

To a pretty resort in the Catskills comes Paul Worden to work on his play. He loves the quiet and peace of the place and enjoys his rides with Marjorie Sinclair, the actress, who is to take the leading part in the piece and who is stopping at a nearby hotel. But Paul's peace is very severely interrupted one day when Diana Ardway pops into his life. Diana hails from Castle Towers and is the daughter of a millionaire. Also Diana is accustomed to having her own way in everything she undertakes and she undertakes to win Paul for her husband! This proves rather difficult as Paul treats her as a child and continually tries to get rid of her. But Diana persists and soon she has the field clear to herself after a hand to hand encounter with Marjorie in which the good lady of the stage goes down to inglorious defeat.

Paul then imports his younger brother who has a record for capturing ladies' hearts but instead Diana captures his, in this instance, and treats it as one would a football. The younger brother retreats in disgrace. Diana sees the time approaching that she will have to act quickly. Her father is coming home and he, being a steel magnate, rules with an iron hand. So she kidnaps Paul one day, drives him over the hills in her automobile and then stalls the car. Her aunt pursues and, on Diana's plea that Paul attempted to abduct her, drags the unfortunate playwright home to the man of steel. Then and there Diana announces that she would never, never marry any man who didn't love her and what is poor Paul to do but to announce his passionate desire to claim the little lady as his wife?

CATCH LINES

To all girls and other unmarried ladies, hark ye! In "Satan Junior" which is now playing at the ———— theatre there is shown an absolutely infallible method to catch the elusive male. You don't have to wait for him to take the initiative after all. The matter is simple. Merely take it yourself. However the best lesson is in "Satan Junior." See it and be enlightened.

Viola Dana in another comedy role—a story altogether different in a setting of rare beauty—a procession of laughs and smiles.

"Man proposes, God disposes" as a general rule. But man is out of it altogether in "Satan Junior." The phrase should be amended, "Woman proposes——" for poor Paul doesn't get a chance to say "boo" when Diana starts after him. See this romantic comedy at the ———— theatre. Your laughing capacity will be increased.

Viola Dana, premier comedienne of the screen, in the most delightful picture of her career. Let her shine your face, the price is small and it'll do you more good than anything else around town just now.

SUGGESTIONS

You can certainly go ahead and advertise this picture as one of the best comedies you have ever played, no matter what you have played before. The idea of the story seems original to the screen and so it should be played up to its fullest extent. Dwell on the fact of the girl chasing the man until he is obliged to surrender himself to her. Interesting sketches, paintings and arguments can be based on just such a line of procedure and if you follow it out well you will certainly have a most novel and interesting campaign. In fact as the idea is so topsy-turvy you can build all sorts of unique little stunts on this basis.. Play with it in your advertising, you ought to have as much fun as Alice in "Through the Looking Glass."

Feature Viola Dana as the best comedienne on the screen. She is. She has ability, personality, is petite, cute, and what not. Let 'em know that "Satan Junior" is a worthy successor to "The Gold Cure" which seems to have gone well all over the country. And then the title. Here again are further possibilities opened up in the way of decorative advertising and word arguments. In fact the picture's advertising possibilities are limitless, all things considered.

"A TASTE OF LIFE"—BLUEBIRD

One That Will Stand Boosting; Story Handled Carefully

WHEN this picture comes around to you, don't be afraid to boost it strong; it is an enjoyable farce, with plenty of laughable as well as exciting situations. As the plot has been constructed intelligently, and as it has been handled carefully, the suspense runs pretty strong throughout the entire length of the picture.

The story deals with a woman who is married to a wealthy man. His wealth brings her idleness, so she becomes discontented and consequently unhappy. The heroine falls an innocent victim to the wealthy man's schemes, who wants to offer his dissatisfied wife manufactured evidence for her divorce. In the course of the story the hero, husband of the heroine, is also dragged into the net by the heroine, to serve as cover for her own innocent misdeeds. But in the end everything turns out happy.

The story at times approaches the danger point. For instance, the heroine becomes intoxicated, not knowing the effects of liquor, never having tasted it before. She only loved the cherries; but as there was too much "fire-water" mixed up with the cherries, the floor soon began hitting the ceiling. She is also taken to a roadhouse. But since none of these acts are done with an evil purpose in view, those amongst you who cater to exclusive family patronage may be able to get by without offending them. The Jonas Collamores are in a different fix. Mrs. Collamore has an idea that she wants to be free and as a consequence her heroic and fat husband decides to let her get a divorce. CATCH LINES

Maraschino cherries started the whole thing—Kitty Dillingham found herself in a hopeless situation with Jonas Collamore—Mrs. Collamore found herself in a similar one with Horace Dillingham—compromised without doubt—divorce action? No just plain comedy action in "A Taste of Life."

Kitty made a mistake—though she was tasting life when he was only biting into a maraschino cherry—such a mistake and such humorous complications—all in "A Taste of Life" now at the ———— theatre.

"A Taste of Life" takes a new and a humorous slant on matrimonial complications—see them wound and unwound in five reels of pure fun.

Edith Roberts furnishes most of the feminine interest and Billy Mason and George Hernandez provide wonderful comedy—"A Taste of Life" is a taste of fun.

AD TALK

"A Taste of Life," a farce comedy with Edith Roberts in the principal role will be the featured attraction at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week. Written by the late Paul West and Maxmilian Foster. "A Taste of Life" tells the amusing story of two married couples. Kitty Dillingham, wife of struggling Horace, a lawyer, a gentleman of fine family but with little money, decides to go to work in his office to help meet expenses. Then one day there comes to Horace's place of business, a little man, quite fat and very excited who looks upon himself as a martyr. Horace is out and Kitty, believing him to be an important client, accepts his invitation out to lunch.

What is her surprise then when later in the day she comes to the realization that the fat gentleman, Jonas Collamore is bent on compromising himself to give his adored wife sufficient grounds for a divorce. Now Kitty does care much about the Collamore matrimonial affairs but she is quick enough to realize that if Collamore uses her to compromise him, the effect will work the other way also. How she manages to wriggle out of the perilous and funny situation and how the tables are turned completely forms a climax, rapid in action, full of surprises and laughs.

Edith Roberts plays her role with fine appreciation of its values while Billy Mason, George Hernandez, May Emory and Harry Todd, comedians all, render fine assistance to the star. The picture was produced under the direction of Jack Dillon.

"HER CODE OF HONOR"—UNITED

Brilliant Star in Exceptionally Powerful Picture

THAT favorite theme of the independent producer, the love affair in which the principals are suddenly shocked into the realization that they are brother and sister, only to discover at the next turning that they are not, has been employed as the basis of "Her Code of Honor," in which Florence Reed appears for the first time on the United program. Of course this type of story finds a welcome audience, but, regardless of its pulling power, it must be said that "Her Code of Honor" presents the story in the most powerfully dramatic form that it has been our privilege to see.

It is skillfully developed. A touch of mystery surrounds the central male character. And this mystery gives a sense of impending danger, a sense that takes a firm grip on the spectator, and when finally it accumulates in the denouement its power is sweeping. Miss Reed also counts as an important factor in the force of the picture. Her performance is always effective. She is one of the ablest of screen actresses, her power of expression, her sense of shadings, are admirable and prominent complements of her most captivating and alluring personality. If Miss Reed gave more generously of her time to the studio she would become a screen figure of tremendous account.

John M. Stahl has handled the picture with care and a real sense of the ever accumulative force of his theme. The picture is laid in extravagant settings, appropriate backgrounds for extravagant action. William Desmond's hero is a worthy foil for Miss Reed's heroine, while Robert Frazer and Alec Francis handle prominent parts with skill.—Length, 6 reels.—Released March.—Peter Milne.

AD TALK

Florence Reed, that talented actress who shines with equal brilliance on either stage or screen, will appear at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her first United photoplay entitled "Her Code of Honor." This has been termed one of the strongest of recent productions by those in the trade thoroughly familiar with a wide diversity of subjects and its exhibition at the ——— theatre is considered an event of importance by the management. Miss Reed is an actress of sure ability, captivating personality, compelling beauty. Her performances go deep, her characterizations always ring true, sincerity and a real feeling are qualities inseparable from her scenes before the camera or the footlights.

In "Her Code of Honor" she has what is without doubt the most difficult role of her screen career. The story is a succession of startling scenes, startling because of their realism, scenes which build to a climax of tremendous power. Alice Davis loves Eugene La Salle. It is a love deep and profound on both sides. They are supremely happy in anticipation of their coming marriage when, on a certain night, a terrible revelation seems to banish all possibility of such a union! The story rises to a wonderful denouement in which the capabilities of the players are strained to their utmost and when it is done—well, that is to be seen in "Her Code of Honor."

Miss Reed receives sterling support from William Desmond, Robert Frazer and Alec B. Francis, players of ability and individual popularity. The picture was made under the direction of John M. Stahl.

THE STORY

Helen studies art in the Paris Latin quarter. She gives her love to Jacques and is heartbroken when she discovers that he is married. Afterwards she turns to Tom Davis, another American art student, as the only friend she has. Davis inherits a fortune and returns to the United States to take up his position.

Years later he is happy and content on his Long Island estate with Alice, the very image of Helen, who looks upon him as her father. Alice falls in love with Eugene La Salle, and the two plight their troth. On the night of Eugene's return from the trip abroad the engagement is announced before a party of their friends. One of the guests proposes a marriage rehearsal and the game is soon under way. As Eugene takes a ring from his finger Alice gazes at it in abject horror and runs upstairs.

It appears that that very day Davis had told her her history, that Jacques was her father. In a deathbed note from her mother she is told that a certain ring will identify Jacques or someone related to him as he prized the ring highly. Eugene then is Jacques' son. The lovers are of the same flesh and blood!

This news she communicates to Eugene. The only way out as they see it is to take their lives, but as they are about to do so a whispered oath of Alice's convinces Eugene that there is some mistake. He turns away his pistol and then reveals the fact that Jacques was only his stepfather, that he had taken his name as a matter of course because he had never known his own father. And so the lovers find the dreadful barrier removed.

CATCH LINES

"Her Code of Honor" directed that both she and the man she loved should die! There was a falsity somewhere in that code—on its discovery depended their happiness, their very lives! Was that falsity discovered? See "Her Code of Honor."

A barrier of flesh and blood reared itself between Alice and Eugene—they had loved but found that this barrier insisted on intruding itself—what was it? The answer lies in one of the strongest photoplays of the season, "Her Code of Honor."

A secret kept for twenty years brought tragedy into two lives when finally revealed! On that secret is based "Her Code of Honor," a startling, compelling photoplay.

Florence Reed, brilliant actress, in a wonderful role. Her performance gets under the skin. William Desmond, also a star, is her leading man. And the picture, "Her Code of Honor," bristles with dramatic moments and reveals a denouement the force of which is incalculable.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is another picture based on the lovers who for a time think they are blood relations. In the catch lines on this page it was the idea to include a note of mystery. Why not follow out this idea in your newspaper and lobby advertising? Don't give your plot away, for with the case of this picture the relations of the two are kept secret until only a short time before the denouement. To tell the story, then, would be to subtract from the suspense generated by the picture itself. Strive for a touch of mystery, talk of the separation of the lovers—leave the why and wherefore to the imagination.

Go strong on Florence Reed's acting. She is certainly capable and in the few pictures she has done has gained many friends. Her recent Broadway play "Roads of Destiny" was probably seen by numbers of out of town people and one might be mentioned with profit to the exhibitor.

Another card in the picture is William Desmond, who sandwiched in a picture as leading man when he was in New York. He is a star himself and a comer, so don't neglect him.

"THE SCARLET SHADOW"—UNIVERSAL SPECIAL

Fans Will No Doubt Like This One; Comedy Is Entertaining

PICTURE goers should derive enjoyment out of this clean dramatic offering. The light comedy touches that are well distributed throughout the picture add to the entertaining values.

The fundamental idea of the plot is formed upon the fact that the Puritanical relatives of the heroine consider a second marriage a disgrace and a sin. Whatever act the heroine does in the story is attributed by her aunt to the Scarlet Strain that runs through the veins of the heroine, due to her mother's "disgraceful conduct." When the fact that the heroine's great sin, her second marriage, is disclosed to the spectator, the surprise is relieving and its source amusing.

The plot is free from objectional features, the kind that jar as well as leave a bad taste. An extensive review was published in last week's issue, on page 1377.—Released March 3.—Length, 6 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

Edith Presby, Van's mother....Clarissa Selwynne
Joseph Fleming.....Williard Louis
The Gardener.....J. Edwin Brown

By Lorne H. Fontaine and Katherine L. Roberts.

Directed by Robert Z. Leonard.

THE STORY

Elena Evans is kept under the rigid surveillance of her aunt, who insists that as long as her (Elena's) mother showed the "scarlet stain" the daughter shall be kept safe. All her precautions are to no avail, however, as Elena insists on sneaking out to the movies with Van Presby. When they return Aunt Alvira surprises them and insists that they get married. When they are on their way for a license the next morning, Van's uncle, Harvey, sees them, and, learning the situation, refuses to let the foolish ceremony proceed. He takes Elena to the home of Van's mother in the city and leaves her there.

The interest that Harvey shows in Elena annoys Mrs. Van Presby, as she hopes to marry him herself. As a consequence she schemes to marry Elena off as soon as possible. To this end she fosters the interest of Joseph Fleming in Elena and tells the girl that as she is in the way and possessed of a bad reputation through her mother, she had better marry Fleming. As a consequence Elena accepts his proposal of marriage.

At a dinner given to announce it, however, she revolts at the whole affair and throws her ring in Fleming's face. She retreats to her room and is there attacked by Van, who is tipsy. She throws him out of the room, flings a few things into her bag and determines to leave. As she is rushing out of the house she runs into Harvey, who hastens to explain that the whole scheme was none of his and that he wants Elena to marry him. And Mrs. Evans' "scarlet stain" turns out to be the deadly sin of marrying a second time!

AD TALK

Mae Murray, the star of so many Universal attractions, will be seen again on the screen of the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week, when "The Scarlet Shadow" is shown for the first time in this city. This is the story of a young woman who is ejected from her aunt's home over a perfectly innocent escapade with a college youth. The youth's uncle, a wise man and a good-hearted fellow, takes her to the boy's mother and gives her a home there. The mother takes an immediate dislike to her, as she sees that Harvey, her protector, is considerably interested in her and she wants him for her second husband.

How she contrives to get rid of the girl by marrying her off to a disreputable millionaire and how she rebels and finds, to her joy, that Harvey wants her as his wife, are events which are set down in "The Scarlet Shadow" to the tune of thrills and comedy. The picture keeps moving rapidly from beginning to end and there's never a dull moment. Miss Murray appears to her usual attractive advantage and has the support of a cast of capable screen artists.

"The Scarlet Shadow" was written by Lorne Fontaine and Katherine Roberts, done into scenario form by Harvey Thew and produced under the direction of Robert Leonard, who has been Miss Murray's director in all her Universal attractions.

Reference to the title both in pictures, art decorations and catch lines and arguments will have the result of building up the interest created by the display of the title itself. "IT'S A BEAR"—TRIANGLE

Should Give Substantial Satisfaction; Grins Aplenty

WHILE the plot is not very strong, the picture is as delightful as you wish to run in your theatre. It starts easy, but gradually works up to a climax, comical enough to satisfy the senses of the greatest majority of picture goers.

The hero of the story is the son of wealthy parents living in the East. He is an entomologist, or in plain English, a Bug-hunter. His father thinks him worthless, but when need arises for some one to go West and look after his father's sheep interests, the hero does not hesitate to go. The ranch boys take him for a tenderfoot, but he soon puts one over them. In the end, he finds a real girl with whom he becomes united.

There are not many situations that will cause hard laughs, nevertheless, the satisfaction the picture will give is none the less substantial. It belongs to the class that make a person grin and otherwise feel happy inwardly without the outward visible demonstration in the form of noisy laughs.

The picture is clean and should appeal well, especially to high class audiences.—Released March 16. —Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

SUGGESTIONS

If you played the Taylor Holmes-Essanay comedies make the exhibition of "It's a Bear" in the way of a gala return of the star. Recall his past successes at your house, dwell on his personality and his particular style of comedy. People will remember him from past performances and will doubtless make it a point to see him in this production if you work along these lines.

As for this picture it concerns the tenderfoot in the west; his triumph over tricks and villains. Bring out the comedy element. A light comedy, well done, is the spice of life these days. The conventionality of the theme matters little if you put pep, humor and originality into your advertising of it. And mention the authors. They are well known in the fiction world. Their Saturday Evening Post stuff is popular.

There are many funny moments in the story that you can work your advertising around. A glance at the synopsis will reveal them to you. Dos't tell them all. One or two will suffice. They get the curiosity up which is your main consideration.

AD TALK

Taylor Holmes, who will be remembered for the many fine comedies he turned out while with the Essanay company will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his first Triangle picture "It's a Bear." This is one of the most amusing stories ever written by that clever team, Nina Wilcox Putnam and Norman Jacobsen and tells the story of a young Bostonian's adventures in the far west whither he journeys to look into matters pertaining to the conduct of his father's sheep ranches. Orlando is the gentleman's name and he arrives in the western town with all the marks of the tenderfoot sticking to him.

Of course, the villain's henchmen think they are going to have an easy time of it with Orlando. With the treatment they will accord him, they reason, he will return to Boston within the week. But such is not the case. Invited into a poker game with all the experts of the place Orlando winds up with all the cash, invited to partake of liquid refreshment he proves himself able to stand up to the bar with the most hardened citizen of the lot, invited to ride a bucking broncho guaranteed to throw a tenderfoot several yards, he accepts the challenge and masters the animal.

In fact, every way the villain and his men turn they meet their Waterloo. It is all accomplished to the tune of excellent comedy. Mr. Holmes plays his role with a sincere appreciation of it and gets the most out of the comedy situations in which he is the center. The support is of the best while the direction was in charge of Lawrence Windom, the man responsible for Mr. Holmes' Essanay pictures.

THE STORY

No one ever thought much about Orlando Winthrop. His only reasons for attracting attention were that he was a son of the wealthy Winthrops of Boston and that he entertained queer ideas about bugs. But when word came east that the Winthrop sheep ranches in the West were being robbed by the foreman, Cogney, Orlando seemed to take a new lease on life as he packed his grip and took the flier for other climes.

Once in the west Orlando was the butt of the ranchers' jokes. At least they thought he was to be. They got him in a poker game with the purpose of removing all his spare change and when they got through they found out they didn't have any change themselves. They thought to teach him how to drink "crude likker" and he drank them all under the table. He even mastered the bucking broncho which the boys gave him with the hope that he would go sailing skyward and as suddenly earthward.

All Orlando's triumphs Cogney watched with distastes. He found, however, that Orlando was a man to be reckoned with and not a milksop as he had at first thought. So Cogney hires two villains to kill off some of the Winthrop sheep. But this plan too is frustrated by Orlando. Warned by a friend he catches the plotters redhanded. Then it comes to a fight and even in this manly art Orlando proves himself somewhat the superior of Cogney. At its conclusion a party from the east arrives, including Orlando's fiancee. But when she sees him ease his teeth into a large chunk of tobacco she decides that Orlando is altogether too rough and she leaves him, much to his pleasure, as there is a girl in the west who has won his heart.

Taylor Holmes returns to the screen in a whirlwind comedy in which a tenderfoot from the east proves successful in the west. It is written in the most humorous style of Nina Wilcox Putnam and Norman Jacobsen, and that's saying a lot.

"It's a Bear" of a picture, this "It's a Bear" in which Taylor Holmes, the distinctly unusual and clever comedian makes his return to the screen.

They thought the bean-fed Bostonian couldn't play poker but he extracted their loose change in a very painful manner. They thought he couldn't ride but he got the better of a bucking broncho. They thought he couldn't fight but he packed a nifty wallop in each fist. They were too startled by that time to think about his lovemaking but he showed them something in that line too. His demonstrations make one of the cheeriest comedies it has ever been our pleasure to show. Don't miss it.

follow to the roadhouse. Collamore to make everything easy for his wife, removes his collar, coat and vest and is all ready to be compromised when Kitty recognizes her husband's voice and the general seriousness of the situation. Out the window she goes and when the detectives break into the room all trace of feminity that they discover is a peculiar hair pin. They set to work on this clue but then Kitty with Collamore's aid, decides to turn the tables, with the result that they set a trap for Horace and Mrs. Collamore and compromise them. Of course all ends happily, both couples straightening out their domestic affairs at the last minute.

SUGGESTIONS

A farce-comedy with a dual matrimonial mixup such as is presented in "A Taste of Life" should be advertised with a lot of snappy copy. You will note by reading the synopsis that many of the situations have recurred time and again in features of dramatic character. Here fun is derived from them. You might describe these situations, to all intents and purposes with the utmost seriousness, ending up any of your arguments with a line that throws the whole thing into comedy.

Follow the same line of work in pictures and special drawings. But get life and zest into your copy whatever you do. Farce-comedies are always welcome and if you present such products to your patrons in a brisk and easy style they will be attracted.

Productions Like This Make an Art of Producing

IT is pictures of the caliber of " A Heart in Pawn " that raise picture production to the level of art. It is contributions of this character that you can shake before the eyes of would-be reformers and make them take a back seat. Barring the stage, there is hardly an agent in existence that can drive truth home more vividly or more impressively than screen entertainments of this worth.

One remarkable thing about the acting of Mr. and Mrs. Hayakawa is the absence of all gestures; and yet, in that motionless starring of theirs, one could read whole books. Young aspirants to stardom would do well to see this picture and study it closely. They can learn a great deal out of it.

THE STORY

Toyama, an ambitious Japanese youth, secretly marries Sada. It is his fond desire to go to America to study but his drink-sodden father refuses to grant him the necessary funds. By working in a tea house as a Geisha girl, Sada raises enough money to permit Toyama to make the trip. She tells him it was a legacy and he departs satisfied while Sada goes back to her dancing and singing. In the States Toyama makes a fine record at college and soon becomes the valued assistant of Dr. Stone, who works in his laboratory on a cure for inherited vices. Stone's daughter Emily, half Japanese, grows to admire Toyama and he looks with favor on her.

Sada, in repulsing the advance of a guest at the tea garden, kills him. She is sentenced to die, but when her child is born in prison the sentence is commuted to life imprisonment. Toyama's father writes to his son immediately the first sentence is made known. The news so affects him that he takes to drink and for a time forgets all that is decent in his life. Stone eventually finds him and restores him to his old self. Shortly afterwards he dies, leaving Emily in Toyama's care, and expressing his wish that they marry.

With Emily as his wife, Toyama returns to Japan, not knowing that Sada is still alive. When he discovers this he is torn with emotion. Emily adopts his child not knowing its parentage. Sada escapes from prison and comes to see Toyama. In his dire predicament Toyama determines upon harakari to remove the stain of dishonor from his name. But Sada, seeing the prison guards approach the house, leaps into the nearby lake, so saving the man she loves his life.

AD TALK

Sessue Hayakawa, the distinguished Japanese actor, will be seen at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week in his latest dramatic production, entitled "A Heart in Pawn." Written specially for him by Frances Guihan and Thomas J. Geraghty. "A Heart in Pawn" tells the story of Toyama, a young and ambitious Japanese, who secretly marries Sada. It is his fond hope to go to the United States to study, but his inebriated father isn't at all in sympathy with this idea. Sada, however, is, and by dancing in a tea house she secures sufficient funds to enable Toyama to make the trip and presents the money to him, saying that it is a legacy from her father.

Toyama makes a brilliant record at college in the United States and becomes fast friends with Dr. Stone, one of the professors at the institution. Dr. Stone's daughter, Emily, half Japanese, looks with favor on Toyama and he grows very fond of the girl. When he hears that his love in Japan has been executed for murder he feels justified in making Emily his wife, particularly as it was the last wish of Dr. Stone.

The two are married and return to Japan. What transpires in the far-off land of the cherry blossom constitutes a climax of tremendous power and effect. Hayakawa appears to distinct advantage in the stellar role and receives fine support from his wife, Tsuri Aoki as Sada, and from Vola Vale as Emily Stone. The picture was produced under the direction of William Worthington and shows artistry in every one of its scenes.

"THE TWO BRIDES"—PARAMOUNT

An Artistic Production That Also Has the Punch

AS an artistic piece of work, there are few of those released that can equal this contribution. As an entertainment, opinion will undoubtedly vary. Those who like art, irrespective of such elements as make a picture popular with the majority, may be well satisfied with it, while those who look for a "punch" in a picture may be highly disappointed.

Miss Cavalieri is a beautiful woman; she is also as good a dramatic actress as there is on the screen today. With a good story to back her up, she ought to make a hit with the picture going public.

CATCH LINES

Prince Marko saw the statue for which Diana posed and stated that he would make the model his wife. His boast accomplished, Diana discovered what led her to believe her husband had paid for her—a climax of unusual power closes this story.

Diana discovered that her husband had bought not the man she thought she loved—she resented being a mere chattel in his hands—she did not know that her husband's love for her was boundless and her ignorance of this forced her into a great mistake—see "The Two Brides."

Diana was of flesh and blood—her counterpart was stone with a heart of marble—see "The Two Brides" at the ———— theatre today.

Lina Cavalieri in what is without doubt her greatest picture—a part exactly suited her in a story of unusual dramatic crises.

The story of two brides and one bridegroom!

AD TALK

Lina Cavalieri, the renowned operatic and motion picture star, will come to the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week in her latest Paramount photoplay entitled "The Two Brides." This feature offers her a singularly appropriate role, that of the daughter of an Italian sculptor who serves also as his model. Prince Marko sees the statue that the clever artist has carved from her pose and expresses himself as desiring to marry the original—whatever the cost. Diana, the daughter, overhears this and decides to teach the prince a lesson by snubbing him, but whatever her conclusions they are soon after altered by the sudden death of her father and the disappearance of the man with whom she believes herself in love. She then accepts Prince Marko's offer of marriage.

But it is not long after this that she learns that the Prince literally bought her—bought off Count Gabrielle, the man she had previously fancied! Anger and rebellion rage within her and she flees back to the distant island where she spent her early days. The dramatic climax which then caps the story puts the finishing touch of merit on "The Two Brides." In every respect it is a picture of merit—merit in dramatic construction, acting, directing and scenic investiture.

Mme Cavalieri appears to stunning advantage in the role of Diana, while Courtenay Foote as Prince Marko and Warburton Gamble as Count Gabrielle contribute generously to her support. Produced under the direction of Edward Jose from Margaret Turnbull's scenario of Alicia Ramsey's story, "The Two Brides," makes its appearance on the screen here as one of the artistic achievements of the Paramount program.

SUGGESTIONS

"The Two Brides" appears like a very good title—one which will lend itself well to advertising that will carry out its significance. A good idea would be to use two figures in your advertising, one a picture of the star in some striking pose, the other a duplicate, only obviously designed as a sculptor's work. Under these employ one of the catch lines printed elsewhere on this page and, supplemented by the routine of the announcement, you will have an advertisement that will attract notice.

The title is also one which will attract attention in itself alone, particularly if you use a line to the effect that there is only one husband in the case. You might dwell on the fact that in this feature the star has a role exactly suited her talents and that she appears to unusual advantage. Courtenay Foote should also be mentioned because of his performance and his past work which has always attracted favorable comment.

THE STORY

Prince Marko, patron of the arts, sees the statue of an island goddess done by Donata di Marchesi, for which his daughter, Diana, posed. He falls in love with the work of art instantly and when Donata introduces him to Diana, his affections are transferred to the living, breathing goddess. Di Marchesi lives on an island in the Mediterranean and one day there comes there his profligate nephew, Count Gabrielle. Diana falls in love with him and Prince Marko realizes that to save the girl for himself he must get rid of the Count. Knowing that he is desperately in need of money he makes him an offer of a large sum if he will but leave the island, never to return. To this Count Gabrielle agrees.

Shortly afterwards Donata dies and Diana accepts the Prince's offer of marriage. It is not until considerably later at a reception in Rome that Diana discovers that her husband literally bought her. She is unable to realize his motive and thinks that he does not love her. She breaks the statue for which she posed to bits and returns to the lonely island, but is shortly afterward joined by both Prince Marko and Count Gabrielle. The two men fight on a high cliff and Count Gabrielle uses a knife, lacerating Marko's shoulders. Diana watches her husband, by an almost superhuman effort, gather his strength and push the intruder from the cliff. Then he faints. Diana rushes to his rescue, realizing then that it is her husband she loves.

For days Prince Marko lies in a critical state. His brain is affected. Diana brings the pedestal on which Donata made the statue to her husband's bedside and, donning the proper draperies, poses as the goddess of the island again. The sight of her restores Prince Marko's health and Diana goes to his arms.

With Montagu Love as the star, the picture tells the story of an ambitious man who, when his wife sustained an accident which prevented her from bearing him an heir, divorced her and married a young girl who had given herself to a man of her own age. The son is born and years later, when he is to be married, the ambitious one discovers that he is not his own. AD TALK

Montagu Love, the distinguished star of the World Film forces, will be the main attraction at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in "The Hand Invisible," his latest picture. Film lovers will find this production of special interest in that besides offering the star a role which brings his full versatility into play, it introduces a new director to the films in the person of Harry O. Hoyt, long one of the World Film's foremost scenario writers. His work in the picture will no doubt be received with interest by all those who have enjoyed his many Carlyle Blackwell-Evelyn Greeley comedies, which have added considerable fame to his name.

Aside from the new director, the picture offers a highly intense variety of dramatic fare. Mr. Love is cast as Rodney Graham, a steel magnate who, in the latter years of the nineteenth century, becomes discontented because an accident has incapacitated his wife and has put all chance of her bearing him an heir to rout. But instead of treating her kindly the business leader determines upon divorce, so that he may marry again and gratify his fondest ambitions. No sense of kindness enters into the case, and when he achieves his heart's desire he has left a tragic trail behind him. His divorced wife suffers with a broken heart while his second wife died when she presented him with Rodney Graham, Jr.

How retribution finally overtakes the man of might is a story grippingly told in the five reels of "The Hand Invisible." Mr. Love has the support of such capable players as Virginia Hammond, George Le Guere, William Sorrelle, Marguerite Gale, Martha Mansfield, Muriel Ostriche and Kate Lester.

THE STORY

Rodney Graham, high in the steel industry in the latter part of the nineteenth century, divorces his wife after an accident has rendered her incapable of bearing him an heir. He seeks the hand of Katherine Dale, a debutante of the day, who has given of her love to Dick Allen, a young engineer, subsequently killed in a mine cave-in. She marries him and dies after the birth of a son, but Rodney Graham's ambition is achieved. He has an heir, and it matters little to him that the way to the fulfillment of his desire was strewn with tragedy for others. Graham's stepbrother, an author, Arthur Haynes, had opened the door of his house to Mrs. Graham after the divorce. In a denunciation of Graham he had prophesied that some day he would live to repent his cruelty.

Years later Rodney Graham, Jr., graduates from college. He meets Haynes' daughter,

"THE LIGHT OF VICTORY"—UNIVERSAL SPECIAL

Holds Interest Throughout; Hero Drunk Most of Time

THERE is no doubt in my mind that quite a number of picture goers will enjoy this picture well. For one thing, it holds the attention, because the end cannot be foretold; for another, the star has a following that like him, no matter what the story. But discriminating picture patronizers, especially families, may not fall all over themselves on account of it.

From their point of view, the objectionable feature will no doubt prove to be the fact that the hero, from the beginning of the story until the end, is drunk; and when towards the last he redeems himself with his death, he dies drunk. To such picture goers, the fall of a hero and his becoming a derelict for a scene or so for the sake of contrast, may be excusable, but to have him under the influence of strong liquor all the way through the picture may not prove very appealing.

The picture is built around the American navy, the hero being a Naval Officer himself. The naval atmosphere is realistic and adds to the picture certain impressiveness, especially at the beginning. So far. it is the first time since the first days of the war that the American Navy has been used as the basis of a picture plot, and had the story been of the pleasurable sort and the kind that appeals to the better emotions, the picture no doubt would have made a universal hit.—Released March 17.—Length, 5 reels.—*P. AD TALK

Monroe Salisbury will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his first Universal Special attraction, entitled "The Light of Victory." This is one of the most unusual pictures which has been produced with this popular star in the leading role. As is the case in "The Man Without a Country," it tells the story of a man embittered toward the United States, ready to do it any harm he is capable of. On an island in the southern Pacific, the man, once an honored officer in the United States Navy, lies a victim of perpetual drunkenness. All sense of honor, of home, of country is gone from him. He lives cursing the land of his birth in a drunken stupor.

But there comes a time, a great emergency, that regenerates the man. The sight of the flag under which he had served, which he had honored and protected, kindled that little spark of decency that remained, and with an heroic effort he rose above the low station in life to which he had sunk, only to be killed by an enemy bullet thereafter. But he died with a prayer for his native land—not a curse.

A big, appealing story is this, and presented with all care to detail, to dramatic construction and characterization. Mr. Salisbury is splendid in the role. His acting ability is afforded wide scope and he rises to every situation with a surety of emotion and conviction of expression that make his performance one of the best, if not the best, that he has ever contributed to the screen. Betty Compson, Beatrice Dominiguez and Norval MacGregor are among those in the cast who contribute most effectively to Salisbury's support.

THE STORY

Lieutenant George Blenton, U. S. N., is a heavy drinker, and for this reason his fiancee, Jane Ravenslee, breaks her engagement with him. Aboard the U. S. S. Victory in water of the southern Pacific, Blenton is sent ashore to one of the islands, entrusted with an important commission. He becomes intoxicated and his companions find him later in the gutter. With no defense to offer before the ship's court, he is put ashore on the desolate island of Tafofu. After a year he becomes known as Keoki, the beach comber. There is only one other white man on the island, Andy, the lighthouse keeper, who attempts to straighten Blenton up, but to no avail. He is constantly drunk, and when he finds that Lehua, a half-caste, keeps a large supply of liquor he makes his home with her.

But in time Jane feels that she treated Blenton too harshly and takes ship to find him. The boat is torpedoed by a German submarine and Jane is made the captive of the captain. The craft puts in at Tafofu and awaits the coming of the Victory, when it will let loose a torpedo. Lehua learns of this and rushes to Andy with the news. Knowing the ship will stay out of the harbor when the light is gone, he smashes the mechanism. Blenton, who constantly curses his country and who has made friends with the German captain, takes him to the lighthouse, as he knows how to operate the light by hand. But the sight of the Victory regenerates the man, and he flashes the signal of danger, informing his ex-mates that a submarine lies in wait. The guns of the Victory destroy the submarine, and at this the captain and Blenton fight, the former being killed. But Blenton is mortally wounded by another German. He dies saluting the flag under which he served while Jane and the officers of the ship are happy that he died a patriot after all.

CATCH LINES

"BOOTS"—PARAMOUNT

Dorothy Gish Attractive and Comedy Dominates This Picture

AFTER her retirement from the screen for quite a while Dorothy Gish has been coming back strong, beginning with her appearance in "Hearts of the World." She has followed this with several delightful pictures, but she has never been seen in anything in which her personality is more appealing than in "Boots." Here she is a slavey in a London inn, her life wrapped up in romance which she knows from the books she reads, until a young Scotland Yard detective, posing as a student, comes to the inn to frustrate a plot by Bolshevists to blow up the hall where the King of England, President Wilson and other dignitaries are to meet. It is "Boots" herself who has the larger share in frustrating the villainess, and the fight between the two women is one of the unique incidents of the picture. While there is plenty of heart interest, it is the comedy that counts. There is a strong supporting cast, including Richard Barthelmess as the young detective. Miss Gish and her tomboyish character are the points to be played up.—Released Feb. 16.—Length, 5 reels.—R. E. Pritchard.

CATCH LINES

"Boots" frustrates a Bolshevig plot in "Boots." Boots! Who is she? Where did she get the name? See the picture and find out, incidentally you're in for one of the best laughs and one of the best thrills that have come along this season.

Dorothy Gish, one of the heroines of "Hearts of the World" in another Paramount comedy-drama.

A story of a little London slavey, a little girl who thought her sweetheart enmeshed by a Bolshevik adventuress. She formed a different opinion after a whirl of exciting and funny incidents.

Bolshevik Menace Romance! Forget about 'em in Russia for once and see how Cupid put 'em to rout—a humorous and exciting story told in "Boots."

AD TALK

Dorothy Gish comes again to the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest Paramount photoplay entitled "Boots." Great things were promised by the producers as regards this production. It was heralded as a really unusual feature and after a private exhibition before the management it came to the same conclusion. Not since her appearance in Griffith's great work "Hearts of the World" has the vivacious little actress been seen in such a thoroughly congenial role. She is life itself as the little London slavey caled "Boots" because one of her important duties is cleaning up the footgear of the boarders.

Her romance with a Secret Service agent and the manner in which she helps him frustrate a Bolshevik plot form a story filled with excitement, incident of an original character and humor. The story has a number of unusual twists and the development of the character of the slavey is as interesting as it possibly could be, made so by the wonderful performance of Miss Gish and the careful treatment of the scenarist.

"Boots" is the work of Martha Pittman, a new author, whose maiden effort promises a great future for her. It was done into scenario form by M. M. Stearns and produced under the direction of Elmer Clifton, the same man responsible for Miss Gish's two previous Paramount successes, "Battling Jane" and "The Hope Chest." The combined talents of these three results in an offering worthy indeed to take rank with the best of Paramount pictures.

Imaginative, emotional, impulsive and charming, "Boots" is a slavey living in the London slums. She is employed in a boarding house where she shines shoes for the boarders, among them being Everett White, but "Boots" is unaware that he is attached to the Secret Service, and is trailing a band of Bolshevist conspirators. The leader of the malcontents, who aim to destroy with bombs a building in which a peace conference is to be held, is a woman whose acquaintance White assiduously cultivates for the purpose of obtaining from her the details of the Bolshevist plot. "Boots" loves White and he treats her with such consideration as to inspire belief in her that he returns her affection. But when "Boots" finds him one day kissing the woman, her love romance is wrecked.

She has a garden in the rear of the house where she works during her leisure hours and she goes there to forget her troubles. She begins to dig when suddenly the earth gives way and she is precipitated into a tunnel where White is struggling with several Bolshevist agents. They overpower and gag him and after placing a time bomb near him, make their escape. "Boots" rescues White, who tells her of the bomb. "Boots" picks it up, carries it out and throws it into the river where it explodes without inflicting damage. "Boots" faints without realizing that she has saved the peace delegates and her sweetheart as well, but when she is revived she finds herself in the arms of the man she had believed a traitor to her faith.

"A GENTLEMAN OF QUALITY"—VITAGRAPH

Earle Williams in Novel Dual Role

IN a dual role with mystery the predominating element of the sustaining interest in plot, Earle Williams is seen again in Vitagraph's screen version of Frederic Van Rensselaer Dey's novel "A Gentleman of Quality," produced under the direction of James Young, and prepared for screen adaptation by Edward Montague. The imagination is called upon to stretch itself a bit, but inasmuch as most mystery dramas when produced for either stage or screen call upon the imagination for a stretch or two, this cannot be said to be a failing of Earle Williams' latest Vitagraph feature. The mystery is there strong—strengthened in part by cutting to quick action, in part by the scenarioist and in a measure by the direction of Mr. Young who played strongly in the directions to the mystery element.

Suspense, always predominating in mystery drama of the excepted brand, has been sustained to a marked degree from beginning to end, particularly in respect to the real identity of the dual characters of Ashton and Hertford. In his characterization of Lord Hertford, Mr. Williams gives one of the best flashes of character acting seen on the screen. Although his role calls for a comparatively few feet of film to bring it out, its quality stands out as one of the strong points of the entire production. Mr. Williams' make-up in this role is exceptionably good as make-ups go. It is the other role in which the audience will see the Williams that they know best, and to his many followers the picture will appeal. Its mystery element will hold the interest of others who may not hold themselves out as Williams' fans. Katherine Adams, Joyce Moore, James Carpenter, Robert Bolder, George Pierce and Ronald Byram are in support. —Length 5 reels.—Joseph L. Kelley.

SUGGESTIONS

Of course your dual role is the big thing about advertising this picture. No ordinary dual role here! Glance over the catch-lines. They have been written with the idea of incorporating them in advertising, either newspaper or special lobby. They suggest the mystery of the plot, its extravagance, its undeniable sensationalism. Of course others can be written, but it appears to us that they should hold to these lines. You'll have the people guessing about the picture if you adhere to the course advised. They'll guess, they'll come to the box office, which is a direct result of the guessing.

AD TALK

In one of the most fascinating dual role pictures ever released, Earle Williams makes his appearance on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. Entitled "A Gentleman of Quality" and released by Vitagraph, this picture tells the story of John Ashton, who, after a quarrel with his guardian in New York, makes his way to London. As he walks along the street he is clutched by a man—obviously a servant—who addresses him as Lord John Hertford and his master. Ashton tries to brush the fellow aside, but the other is insistent in his demands. He speaks of Lady Mercy and the terrible shock it was to her when he, her husband, disappeared!

Hardly knowing whether he or the servant is suffering from some mental aberration, Ashton finally consents to accompany him home. And so he makes his entrance into the home of Lord Hertford. Lady Mercy is greatly concerned and, her arms around his neck, weeps over his sudden disappearance and again over his happy return. Ashton is nonplussed, but decides to get out of the situation by having them cable his guardian as to his identity. The guardian, peeved at Ashton's actions, sends back word that he never knew him!

Now indeed does Ashton begin to doubt his identity. But there is none to turn to, to corroborate his own statement as to who he is! A pretty situation this for a gentleman to be in. Of course it is responsible for a number of intense dramatic moments and laughable incidents and is worked out to an unusual climax. Patrons of better pictures should mark the date of the showing of "A Gentleman of Quality" in red letters.

In New York City John Ashton quarrels with his guardian, Hollister, and leaves him, believing him dead. He makes his way to London and is surprised and amused one day when an excited man-servant grasps his arm and addresses him as Lord John Hertford. To the humor the fellow who will not be denied, John accompanies him to the Hertford home, where Lady Mercy addresses him as her husband and expresses great consternation regarding his long absence. All this is a mystery to John, and he begins to doubt his own identity. He wavers and questions himself when, after his truthfully told story and a cable inquiry sent by Lady Mercy, a wire comes from Hollister to the effect that he never knew a John Ashton!

The facts of the case are these. After his wedding Lord John Hertford went to the door of his home and never returned. His mind a blank, he had wandered to India and there one day his brother finds him. He decides to hurry home with the news, but his boat is shipwrecked and he remains on an island for full seven years. In the meantime Ashton, convinced that Lady Mercy's real husband is dead, accepts his identity and lives with her after a marriage ceremony. When Hertford's brother finally returns he accuses Ashton of being an imposter. After a struggle Ashton decides to leave and give up the place that rightfully belongs to Hertford. But a cable on the brother's desk is discovered saying that the real Lord is dead, and so the imposter stays on, happy with his wife and using the title, which, it develops after all, is rightfully his.

"SIS HOPKINS"—GOLDWYN

CONSIDERING all factors, "Sis Hopkins" is not a bad picture. Although a few of your patrons might think that it does not come up to the standard of her former contributions, most of them will consider it satisfactory and worth while the money and time spent.

The story is not as strong as most of those furnished Mabel Normand in the past, but her matchless impersonation of her role makes up for the plot's deficiencies and raises the picture to above the average standard.

An oil can full of oil furnishes the cornerstone of the plot. While the heroine, on her way home from the grocery store with a basketful of provisions, allows the grocery clerk to make love to her, a dog overturns the basket. The oil can rolls into the little pool below in her father's property. The villain, unaware of the cause of the oil's presence, takes it as a sure surface indication of rich oil deposits. He tries to get the old man to give him the heroine as his wife, but the heroine refuses to marry him. In the end he buys the property, but his disappointment is great when he discovers the can.

Miss Normand is extremely comical as a country girl. The supporting cast is good. Direction, photography and artistic effects are all up to the Goldwyn standard. — Released Feb. 16. — Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

CATCH LINES

A swindler swindled, but in one of the most humorous ways you ever did see. The famous "Sis Hopkins" of Rose Melville's on the screen.

Here is the Mabel Normand picture that you have been waiting for. The comedy that suits her from nose to toes.

Just because a dog upset a can of oil into a well—well just because of that the fun started. It's only a little thing at the start, but it increases until titters become a gale of laughter. See "Sis Hopkins," the laughing hit of the season.

AD TALK

Mabel Normand as "Sis Hopkins," the role made famous on the stage by Rose Melville, makes her appearance in the Goldwyn picture of that name at the ———— theatre, beginning ————. Why she has not done it before is one of the mysteries of the cinema. The part is completely a part of her. She obliterates her own personality as she never has done before, and the story told is as absorbing as a drama.

Sis Hopkins' dog really starts things. He overturns the family oil can. It rolls into the spring on the Hopkins farm and its contents permeate the hitherto undefiled water. Vibert, the town's financier and schemer, by accident tastes the water and concludes that the simple-hearted Hopkinses have an oil well on their worthless land. Whereupon his manner becomes oil itself. He sends Sis to the local educational fount—a funny seminary—and vaguely mentions ultimate marriage.

But this can't go on. Not only does Sis prove an intractable pupil, but her real sweetheart suspects Vibert of an ulterior motive, and when Sis takes a drink from the spring and makes a wry face the boy follows suit. Then they realize the miser's scheme and proceed to foil him in a clever and amusing manner.

Miss Normand receives good support from such popular players as John Bowers, Sam De Grasse, Thomas Jefferson and Eugenia Ford. The picture was produced under the direction of Clarence Badger, who has brought out the comedy of the play with fine appreciation.

THE STORY

Sisseretta Hopkins, called Sis for short, because it is a name that most of the inhabitants of New Harmony stumble on, is loved by her father and Ridy Scarboro, clerk in the general store. Everyone else takes her as something of a joke, even Vibert, wealthy man of the town, but in time he sees it to his advantage in courting the attentions of Sis. It all starts because of Sis's dog. He knocks an oil-can into the well and Vibert tastes the water. He thinks there's an oil strike on the land, and because of his stinginess he plans to marry Sis to secure it. To this end he sends her away to boarding school, hoping to make a lady of her. But it doesn't do much good. Sis sets the place in pandemonium and makes it frightfully difficult for Miss Peckover, the principal, who has her cap set for Vibert.

Eventually Vibert gives up his matrimonial plans, realizing that Sis will never measure up—or down—to his standards of a lady. So back she comes from school, and Ridy is glad, for while she was away he was obliged to suffer the terrible pangs of jealousy. Vibert inveigles Pa Hopkins into agreeing to part with the property for a small sum, and he is about to sign the deed when Sis, having also tasted the water, comes in and succeeds in tripling his figure. Pa is happy, so's Sis and so's Ridy. The only one who isn't is—Vibert, for the oil experts tell him that he can't get very rich on plain water!

SUGGESTIONS

Your old patrons are familiar with the title of the play even if they have never seen it. It was one of the biggest successes of its time. Supposing that you believe your younger clientele is unaware of the previous career of "Sis Hopkins," inform them of it in a line beneath the title and then state that in the picture the star goes back to the eccentric comedy role which she was seen in in the old Keystone pictures. In advertising it get small-town atmosphere into your newspaper and copy, your lobby decorations and any special drawings or paintings you may care to make. And show the star in eccentric dress and pose.

In the Goldwyn press sheet a number of exploitation devices are given which should be noted by exhibitors wishing to get the full value of the picture. These suggestions are mostly for the larger theatre. The smaller ones should follow out the suggestions given above.

Improbable Plot, But Should Be Enjoyed by All

PICTURE goers will no doubt enjoy this picture, in spite of the improbability of the plot, because they can not take it seriously. The story consists of a series of adventures, in which the heroine is the principal. These incidents are presented in a manner which, besides holding the interest, causes good, hearty laughs.

A rich gold claim forms the nucleus of the story. The father of the heroine leaves for the West to look over the ground where gold strikes have been reported. The heroine, a young athletic girl, follows him there. She meets the hero, but when the villain, secretary to the father of the heroine, who wants her for himself, notices that a love affair is about to result, starts his secret machinations against the hero. In the end, however, his schemes are defeated, and a union between the hero and the heroine results.

In some of the situations the star appears dressed as an athlete, wearing only B. V. D.'s. While broad-minded people may think nothing wrong of it, some would-be reformers might be "shocked." In such a case, you can trim down the scenes, thus sparing the feelings of such objectors.

The action of the plot is rapid, while the construction of the story is such as to create fairly strong suspense.—Released in March.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

CATCH LINES

She preferred a boxing match to an afternoon tea any day in the week and shocked the minister and her mother's guests by staging one for their benefit! When she landed in the West she found a land to her own liking and she gave the inhabitants some anxious moments. See her activities in "Put Up Your Hands," the latest American comedy-drama with Margarita Fisher in the stellar role.

Leonard Hewitt couldn't get money to develop his mine, "Highball" Hazelitt couldn't get a drink, Peter Barton couldn't manage his daughter, Olive, Olive couldn't get enough excitement, "Three Gun" Smith couldn't get enough villainy, Alvin Thorne couldn't get Olive to marry him. But there's one thing that can be gotten by you—and that's a series of wonderful laughs, punctuated by a number of thrills in "Put Up Your Hands," an American comedy starring Margarita Fisher.

"Put Up Your Hands," Margarita Fisher's coming to the ——— theatre and is going to take all the extra laughs you have right away from you in her latest American comedy.

AD TALK

Margarita Fisher, the bright and vivacious American comedienne, will come to the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest comedy entitled "Put Up Your Hands." This has to do with a tomboy girl's adventures in the broad West and provides Miss Fisher with a most congenial and amusing role, and one which she makes the most of. As Olive Burnam she is loathe to attend very proper teas and one day shocks all her mother's friends by starting a boxing match when the minister is sipping oolong. The penalty for this is that she shall not accompany her father on his western trip but "shall not" has no meaning in Olive's vocabulary and she secrets herself in one of the compartment's of her father's private car, only making her presence known when it is too late to turn back.

Then begin her adventures in the West, adventures thrilling and amusing enough for all, adventures made romantically interesting by the presence of a handsome young mining engineer and villainously interesting by the presence of a secretary to Barton bent on marrying his daughter. Of course, everything comes out ideally for the two lovers before the picture is done, but not before some excellent entertainment has been provided.

Miss Fisher derives her support from a particularly able cast that includes Emory Johnson, William V. Mong, George Periolat, Hayward Mack, Gordon Russell and Kate Price. Edward Sloman directed the production from an original story and scenario furnished by L. V. Jefferson.

Olive Barton doesn't fit at an afternoon tea. She prefers a boxing match and one afternoon shocks her mother's friends, including the minister, by turning the tea into a fight. So naughty is she that her father refuses to take her on his trip west, but when, after he has started, Olive pops out of the cupboard of the private car, he has to consent to her accompanying him. Alvin Thomas, Barton's secretary, is not in the least sorry over Olive's sudden appearance, for he looks with favor on the capitalist's daughter. Olive, however, doesn't look with favor on him.

Arriving at their destination, the party starts across the desert in an auto. They lose their way and water gives out. Stranded in an ocean of sand they welcome the appearance of Leonard Hewitt, a young engineer, and his old partner, "Highball" Smith, even though they do look like bandits. The prospectors, for such they prove to be, lead them into the town. Hewitt and "Highball" have struck it rich and the town has gone dry, which irritates the latter not a little. However, Olive undertakes to show the women how to make the ex-saloon attractive to the men by turning it into a gymnasium.

At the grand opening "Three Gun" Smith attempts to break the party up but is repulsed by Hewitt. There then follows a battle between Smith and Thomas on the one side and Hewitt and "Highball" on the other, the two conspirators hoping to gain possession of the mine without paying for it. But the right triumphs, with Olive's assistance, and in the end Barton gets a rich and handsome son-in-law.

SUGGESTIONS

Here you have another Margarita Fisher comedy with a catchy title. Advertising should be light, full of "pep" and designed to bring out the fact that an eastern girl plays more or less havoc with the West.

It has been suggested before on Margarita Fisher pictures that you advertise her name as synonymous with light comedy. This form of entertainment always has been one of the most popular. People like a comedy-drama or a farce comedy every once in a while for a change from the serious type of subjects. Create a Margarita Fisher type of advertising. Standardize it and the results should show on the profit side of the ledger.

"THE HAND INVISIBLE"

Helen, and they fall in love. Telling Graham of their engagement, young Rodney is terrified when his father goes into a paroxysm of rage. He refuses to permit the marriage until his former wife visits him and tells him that he should not let an old antagonism stand in the way of the young people's happiness. So Graham consents. Then a few days before the wedding, when old quarters are being renovated, Graham discovers a photograph and a letter, possessions of his second wife, that bring him to the realization that Rodney Graham, Jr., is not his son. During his fury a stroke of paralysis strikes him dumb and deprives him of the use of his limbs. So he is obliged to watch the wedding of the boy and the girl. Haynes' prophecy has come true. Graham dies without ever revealing the secret that might have blighted the happiness of the young people.

CATCH LINES

Rodney Graham was a steel magnate and thought that he could employ business methods in his home to gratify his personal ambitions. He left a trail of broken hearts, but twenty years afterwards retribution overtook him and demanded its toll. Just how can be seen in "The Hand Invisible."

Wrongs committed by man are bound to overtake him and exact retribution at one time or another. Rodney Graham laughed when he was told this but the Hand Invisible struck and he learned. A dramatic photoplay with a powerful characterization by Montagu Love is "The Hand Invisible."

A story of two generations, how the evil done by one man caused tragedy and how retribution finally overtook him.

"HEART IN PAWN"

Mention also that his wife, Tsuri Aoki, plays one of the principal roles in the production. The story is a dramatic version of the eternal triangle and has numerous possibilities for strong advertising, particularly if you center your arguments about the fact that the hero marries, believing his first wife dead, only to discover her still alive.

Scenes both in Japan and the United States offer a welcome contrast which could be brought out in sketches, special drawings and lobby advertising.

CATCH LINES

Sessue Hayakawa in his latest dramatic offering, "A Heart in Pawn," a vivid story of the Orient and the Occident.

He married, believing his first wife dead, but found later and to his horror that she was still alive. The way out? See it told in gripping fashion in "A Heart in Pawn."

Sessue Hayakawa has been termed the best dramatic actor on the screen today—see his latest work, "A Heart in Pawn," in which his wide range of expression is given full play.

A story of tragedy and romance laid in the land of the cherry blossom and on our own west coast.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released previous to December 15, 1918.

Heard in Detroit

CHARLES H. MILES, who operates the Regent and Orpheum theatres in Detroit and the Miles and Grand theatres in Cleveland, and who recently obtained a long-term lease on the Majestic theatre, Detroit, has closed negotiations in Toronto for the purchase of the controlling interest in ten of the leading vaudeville and picture houses of Canada.

MR. MILES plans to operate the Canadian holdings in conjunction with his Detroit and Cleveland theatres. In announcing the purchase of the Majestic lease, Mr. Miles said he has made elaborate plans for the future operations of that theatre. Charles G. Branham will be retained as manager, while Henry Santrey, soloist, and J. Ward Hutton, orchestra conductor, will continue.

GEORGE BROOKINS, of Hillsdale, Mich., will begin at once to construct a new theatre in that city that will seat 800 people and be equipped to handle vaudeville, traveling shows and feature films, he has announced. He expects to have it completed by July. He will then close his Victory theatre, which seats 250 people, but will continue to operate the Washington, which leaves him in control of the theatre situation in Hillsdale.

THE Detroit Board of Motion Picture Exchange Managers has opened a permanent office at 606 Film Building, which will be in charge of George Wilkinson, secretary, and a stenographer. Exhibitors having grievances against exchanges are invited to refer them to the secretary in order that the proper attention can be given complaints by the grievance committee. Two complaints were investigated last week by the board and adjustments were made to the satisfaction of both parties.

ROYAL BAKER, Detroit police film censor, says there are 151 theatres in Detroit, including legitimate and motion picture houses, with a total seating capacity of 94,428. This means that nearly one-eighth of Detroit's population goes to the theatre every day.

THE Schram Amusement Company, Detroit, have sold the new Farnum theatre to Siegel and Feigensen. Recently the Schram company sold the Bernhardt theatre, a flourishing East Side house. Extensive improvements are planned for the Farnum. The stage will be enlarged to accommodate vaudeville and musical productions, and a big organ has been ordered.

Seeing Shows Around Dubuque

TOM MIX was featured at the Cozy theatre at Dyersville, Friday, February 21, in "Cupid's Round Up." On Saturday and Sunday he was featured in "Mr. Logan, U. S. A." Both pictures were very well attended and drew capacity houses.

THE Orpheum theatre at Lancaster, Wis., presented the great Nazimova film, "Eye for Eye," on Tuesday and Wednesday, February 25 and 26. The picture was shown at slightly increased rates.

"THE SHUTTLE," with Constance Talmadge, was offered at the Star theatre at Decorah, Ia., Thursday, February 20. As Friday was "Song Night" no pictures were shown. On Saturday William Rogers was starred in "Laughing Bill Hyde."

ON Tuesday and Wednesday, "Tarzan of the Apes" was featured at the Star theatre at Decorah, Ia., as the big special of their anniversary week, February 23 to March 1. This week marked the sixth year of the showing of pictures in Decorah.

THE Friday, February 21st picture at the Palace theatre at Waverly, Ia., was "Come Through," the picture made famous by Herbert Rawlinson. On Saturday, Clara Kimball Young played in "The Road Through the Dark."

"WE CAN'T HAVE EVERYTHING," the Artcraft special production, was the bill at the Palace theatre at Waverly, Ia., on Sunday and Monday, February 23 and 24. On Tuesday and Wednesday Enid Bennett played in "The Keys of the Righteous," and on Friday and Saturday, "Viviette," with Vivian Martin, was presented.

MARY PICKFORD in "The Little Princess" proved a good drawing card at the Grand theatre at Anamosa, Ia., on Saturday, February 22, when it was shown in conjunction with a Mack Sennett comedy, "Her Screen Idol," and a reel of Pathe News.

THE Sunday bill at the Blende theatre at Benton, Wis., was "The Shell Game," starring Emmy Wehlen. On Monday a Frank Keenan film, "More Trouble," was shown.

ON Monday evening, February 27, "The Yellow Dog," a six-act Jewel production, was shown at the Normal Auditorium at Platteville, Wis.

Waupun Theatre Shows Films that Draw

IT is reported from Fond du Lac, Wis., that the Davison theatre in Waupun is showing great judgment in choosing its programs. Following is the array that drew during the week beginning Saturday, February 22: Saturday matinee—Charlie Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms"; Sunday, February 23, Sessue Hayakawa in "The Honor of His House," the Jap's best picture; Monday and Tuesday, February 24 and 25, Billie Burke in "The Pursuit of Polly"; Wednesday and Thursday, February 26 and 27, Marguerite Clark in "Out of a Clear Sky."

The Scenic theatre, Waupun, presented its patrons with a fine line of attractions for the week beginning Saturday, February 22, as follows: Saturday, February 22, Viola Dana in "The Only Road"; Sunday, February 23, Fanny Ward in "A Japanese Nightingale," supplemented by War News pictures; Monday, February 24, Boy Scouts Special; Tuesday, February 25, Nell Shipman in "The Girl from Beyond"; Wednesday, February 26, Carmel Meyers in "A Society Sensation"; Thursday, February 27, Ruth Rowlands in "Hands Up."

Draws Well in the Theaters of Dubuque

"THE SHEPHERD OF THE HILLS," the Harold Bell Wright production, drew enormous crowds at the Majestic in Dubuque during the three days of its engagement—Thursday, Friday and Saturday, February 20, 21 and 22. The attendance the first day was splendid and the other two days were even better. The picture set a record for matinee crowds at this theatre. The prices were raised considerably, but this seemed to enhance the drawing power of the picture, for Dubuquers attend a high-priced picture much better than if the picture were shown at reduced prices.

The photoplay itself was all and more than it was claimed to be. The scenery was magnificent; attention was paid to details; the cast was splendid—it was, in truth, a masterpiece. The player who enacted the role of Young Matt was a specimen of manhood that is seldom seen, and the other players were equally good in their respective roles.

The coming of the picture caused a great demand for the book. A week before its engagement every copy was loaned from the Public Library and there were dozens of reserves. The book was prominently displayed at the bookshops, where its sale increased tenfold.

Picture Prosperity Visits City of Racine, Wisconsin

THE city of Racine is passing through one of the most successful and profitable periods in the motion picture business in the history of this city. Ever since the "flu" scare has left the public, there is seldom an evening passes by in favorable weather that all four of the leading movie theatres in town are packed to capacity. Good pictures and lots of them is the slogan of the theatre managers in this city today. Competition between them is still keen, which is to the advantage of the "fans," who are shown the very best pictures on the market.

The Rex theatre is doing a fine business. Manager Tom Norman is booking some of the best plays money can purchase and he is being well rewarded by a full house nearly every evening and a good matinee. Nor is the Rex the only house doing a flourishing business. The Bijou theatre under the capable management of Owen McKivette is not taking a second row seat. "Mack" prides himself on his "class of picture," which are for a big part western plays, which seem to be just the thing the people want after several weeks of "society." The Bijou is playing a series of "The Lure of the Circus," featuring Eddie Polo, which is a sure winner. William Russell in "When a Man Rides Alone" will be shown there next week. Charlie Chaplin in some of his latest comedies is a frequent visitor at this theatre also.

The new stunt at the Rialto is meeting with a wonderful success. This new stunt is a combination of motion pictures and vaudeville. Manager Blumberg is putting his new project forth with a kick that is winning. About 5 acts of first class vaudeville and the same number of reels of motion pictures constitute a "show" at this new theatre which has gained an enviable reputation of being "a house of beauty."

"Out of the Fog" will be shown at the Rialto on Tuesday and Wednesday, March 4 and 5. Other pictures of equal significance are being shown at this play house.

A symphony orchestra, composed of 20 of the best musicians in this section of the state, are heard at this theatre every Monday and Tuesday in connection with the regular pictures. Each performance lasts approximately two hours. The vaudeville with the exception of a single act, is shown here only on Friday, Saturday and Sunday. There is a change of program between Saturday and Sunday.

The Palace theatre, under the new management of Mr Beecher, a returned S. A. T. C. Student, is making a comparatively good showing. The management has brought about several changes in the policy of the house with the result that nothing but A1 up-to-date pictures are being shown there.

Mr. and Mrs. Sydney Drew will be thrown on the screen at the Palace next week in their first "dramatic" play of five reels, entitled "Pay Day." This picture contains lots of "tragedy," which, it is a foregone conclusion, movie patrons will turn out in large numbers to witness.

Rumors will have it that Racine is to have another theatre which should compare favorably in beauty and size with the Rialto. The Asher Brothers of Chicago had a checker on the job for the past few days, although nothing definite has as yet been announced.

Happenings in Madison

A QUIET week in filmland has been recorded on the books of the Madison motion picture houses. The continuance of storm weather and the lack of big features is accountable for part of the slump.

THE Fuller Opera House has issued invitations to a select few to a private exhibition of "The Heart of Humanity" to be given Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock. The invitation list embraces the name of Gov. E. A. Philipp and other state officials. Several exhibitors throughout the state will see the picture.

"SILVER KING," which showed for 3 days at the New Strand, drew the largest crowd of the recently screened pictures. In second place is Wallace Reid in "Too Many Millions." Wm. S. Hart in "Breed of Men" with "East Lynne with Variations" is among the coming attractions.

THE GRAND THEATRE showed Harold Lockwood in "The Great Romance," May Allison in "In for Thirty Days," and Clara Kimball Young in "Road Through the Dark." J. J. Sherwood, for twelve years connected with the Grand theatre is now located in California.

AMONG the pictures screened at the Majestic theatre the week were "Kultur" and "Restless Souls."

On the Screens of Dubuque

THE surprising ending of "Too Many Millions," the Wallace Reid feature which was shown at the Grand on Sunday, February 23, captivated the audiences. The picture was most interesting all the way from the start to the finish, and the unexpected ending added the last touch. Mr. Reid had a role which won the sympathy of the audience; his leading lady, Ora Carew, was very good.

A BERNSTEIN production, "Loyalty," was shown at the Star theatre Saturday and Sunday, February 22 and 23. Betty Brice was the star.

THAT delightful comedienne, Constance Talmadge, was featured at the Family theatre in "The Lesson" on Sunday, February 23. Miss Talmadge is becoming a better drawing card with her every appearance; her plays are of a light, interesting nature that appeal to all classes.

MANAGER WILBUR of the Liberty theatre advertised Tom Mix as the "man who never fakes," when the star's late photoplay, "Treat 'Em Rough," was billed for showing on Sunday, February 23. His advertising was correct, for there was never a more daring player. "Treat 'Em Rough" went big; people from all parts of the city were in attendance.

THE Family theatre has a new assistant operator, Mr. Henry Stuber.

THE manager of the Star theatre is making a specialty of showing western features, because he found that during the past two weeks, a westerner drew almost twice as well as another picture. He has a fine line-up of gun men, including William Hart, Roy Stewart and Harry Carey, whose pictures are shown once or twice a week.

"MR. FIX-IT," with Douglas Fairbanks, was presented at the Family theatre Tuesday, February 25, to large houses. The picture was voted to be first rate by Family patrons; they declared it to be quite a novelty to see the agile comedian cavort in a dress suit. His next picture, "He Comes Up Smiling," is being eagerly awaited.

THE second appearance of Lila Lee in this city proved that she had come into pictures to stay. The people who had seen her first picture, "The Cruise of the Make-Believes," all came back to see her second, "Such a Little Pirate," which was shown at the Grand on Monday and Tuesday, February 24 and 25. Her leading man, Harrison Forde, and that noted character man, Theodore Roberts, added to their laurels by their splendid acting.

"HOBBS IN A HURRY," with William Russell, was presented at the Dreamland theatre Tuesday, February 25th.

Harry Weis Holds Reception

BILL BEYNON, the only exhibitor in Divernan, Ill., spent an evening with Harry Weiss, manager of the First National Chicago office in St. Louis, recently. Mr. Beynon is building a new house that will seat as many people as there are in the town. Other exhibitors contemplating new theatres, and who came to St. Louis at Mr. Weiss invitation during his two weeks' visit in the city of St. Louis are: A. W. Barth of Carbondale, Ill., who has broken ground for his new theatre, the "Barth"; J. H. Marlowe, of Herrin, Ill., who has finished building an 1,800-seat house, known as the "Hippodrome," and who is about to build the new "Marlowe" theater at Murphysboro, Ill.

Interesting Items of Elgin

THE STAR offered an innovation February 25 in a Variety Day. The bill comprised three famous stars in three good pictures: Charlie Chaplin in "A Dog's Life," Tom Mix in "Hearts and Saddles," and Shorty Hamilton in "Pipe Dreams."

FLORENCE REED in "A Pipe Dream" was billed for Saturday, February 22, at the Star, and played to good holiday house, despite snow and slush. Saturday night is invariably one of good crowds, and weather appears to make little difference.

MARY MILES MINTER, in "Wives and Other Wives," was booked for Sunday and Monday, February 23 and 24, at the Star. Stan Laurel in a comique, "Love," completed the bill.

DUSTIN FARNUM, in "The Light of the Western Stars," led the Star's bill on Wednesday and Thursday, February 27 and 28. The Sidney Drews, in "The Agreement," completed the bill.

TOM MIX in "Western Blood" and Pearl White in "The Lightning Raider" made the Friday night—juvenile night—attractions. On Saturday came Margarita Fisher in "Molly of the Follies," and the comedy, "High Spots." The picture on the Sunday following was William Russell's "Where the West Begins."

THE STAR announces for coming specials Harold Lockwood in "The Great Romance" and Alice Joyce in "The Lion and the Mouse."

THE bill at the Grand in the last February week divided itself into two parts, with the greatest of these the showing of the big screen feature, "The Shepherd of the Hills." The first three days of the week were given to it. A promising advance seat sale was assurance of good houses. The last three days were given to showing of the Douglas Fairbanks Artcraft special, "He Comes Up Smiling." An extensive advertising campaign through newspapers, billboards and other medium preceding the showing of the first ipcture.

THE Temple also offered special attraction in Mabel Normand in "Mickey" the week of February 24, billing it for three days —Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. The plunge with a picture of the "Mickey" sort was a deep one for an Elgin house, and Manager Fay was awaiting results with fear and trembling. It is his plan, if the venture is successful, to offer as frequently as possible such films as this, and offer them while they are new and creating a sensation in Chicago.

OTHER pictures billed for that week at the Temple included "Eight Bells," Harry Carey in "Roped," Eddie Polo in "The Lure of the Circus," Houdini in "The Master Mystery," Hans and Fritz in "Crabs is Crabs"; a comedy, "No Man's Land"; a Wolfville story, "Talky Jones," and the Universal News Weekly.

Here and There in Fond du Lac

THE benefit performance of "The Goat," featuring Fred Stone, and put on at the Bijou in Fond du Lac, Monday and Tuesday, February 24 and 25, under the auspices of the Grant School Mothers Club, proved a success in spite of the adverse weather conditions. The organization disposed of more than a thousand adult tickets and better than three hundred children's tickets. What is more, the youngsters had a perfectly good time.

WISCONSIN'S belated winter weather put a crimp into the picture house business during the week ending March 1. A program featuring Charming little Vivian Martin in "Viviette" with an extra feature "Katzenjammer Comedy" thrown in for good measure, drew only fair business Wednesday and Thursday, February 26 and 27.

"THE GOLD CURE," starring Viola Dana, a play taken from the story "Oh, Oh Annice" in the Woman's Home Companion, was presented at the Idea Monday and Tuesday, February 24 and 25. Wm. Farnum, a Fond du Lac favorite, was seen at the same theatre in "A Soldier's Oath" Wednesday and Thursday following.

"THE LURE OF THE CIRCUS" is taking a firmer hold in Fond du Lac every week according to Manager Vollert of the Idea. Young America, which always has a warm heart for the circus parade and the attractions under the "big top," assembles at each showing and cheers lustily.

THE sensational film, "Are You Fit to Marry," was shown at the Henry Boys Thursday, February 27, to a fair business.

F. R. SMITH, manager of the Bijou theatre, was one of the two Wisconsin winners in a national advertising contest with all the theatres in the United States that showed the "The Romance of Tarzan" as contestants. Mr. Smith drew down a prize consisting of a $50 Liberty bond on the strength of a full page newspaper advertisement of this picture. The advertisement was published in a local newspaper December 2.

THE CAMPAIGN was staged by the First National Exhibitors association the various theatre contestants being classified on the basis of the seating capacity of their respective houses. The first class consisted of theatres seating 2,000 or more; the second seating from 1,000 to 2,000; the third seating from 750 to 1,000 and the fourth with a seating capacity of less than 750. Mr. Smith won third place in Class 4.

ONLY one other Wisconsin theatre got a place, the Alhambra, Milwaukee, capturing second place in Class 1.

THE publicity contest included lobby displays, novelties, circulars and newspaper advertising. Mr. Smith went the limit on the latter and won out.

picture end of the business, were never better than at the present time.

Other new houses mentioned to Mr. Weiss recently are as follows. Two new theatres in Moline, Ill., the New House for Ruebens Bros. in Joliet is ready for opening. Ground has also been broken for a two-thousand-seat house in Joliet by the Ruebens Bros. Aurora is about to have a new theatre constructed for Messrs. Theilen Ruebens and Burford; DeKalb, Ill., is soon to see work on a new theatre while in East St. Louis there is a race on between two exhibitors to see which one of them can get their theatre completed first. The new theaters for East St. Louis will have a combined capacity of 3,000 seats.

News and Gossip of Springfield Theatres

SUNDAY, February 23, was a balmy spring day, following three days of snow and rain. As a consequence big crowds were out and the motion picture theatres enjoyed good patronage.

W. S. HART came to the Gaiety February 23 for four days in "Breed of Men," and started out to do big things right off the reel. The picture proved a treat, and as everyone here has been in Chicago at some time or other, the picture had a sort of local flavor. Seena Owen is quite a favorite here and drew many to the Gaiety. The comedy on the bill was "Rip and Stitch," and it was one of the best the big playhouse has ever had. Mabel Normand in "Sis Hopkins" followed "Breed of Men" for three days, together with "My Valet," a re-issue of the first Sennett comedy made under the Triangle banner.

ELLIOTT DEXTER and Ethel Clayton in "Maggie Pepper" drew big crowds to the Vaudette for four days, starting February 23. The picture version of the play in which Rose Stahl appeared was better than the original production in the estimation of many who had seen it. For the last half of the same week the Vaudette had Wallace Reid in "Alias Mike Moran."

"THE LION AND THE MOUSE" turned almost as many away from the Princess as it played to on February 23. Alice Joyce repeated the success she scored in "Within the Law" with the play and gave Princess patrons two hours of pure, unalloyed screen entertainment. "The Lion and the Mouse" played for three days and did well. Bille Rhodes followed in "Hoop-La" for two days, and Dustin Farnum comes for two more in "A Man in the Open."

BESSIE BARRISCALE in "A Trick of Fate" came to the Princess the week of March 2.

THE Gaiety took Mae Marsh's "The Bondage of Barbara" off after one day's showing, though the picture was booked for three. Manager Thornton said his patrons considered the story a trifle weak. Mary Boland was substituted in "A Woman's Experience," and the Film Clearing House special was nicely received. Billy Armstrong in "Call the Cops" was on the same program.

MANAGER LOPER had two poor days with Charlotte Walker in "Every Mother's Son," and took no chances on his Saturday business with a war picture by replacing it with Tom Mix in "Hell Roarin' Reform."

THE Princess had Bessie Barriscale for two days, Friday and Saturday, February 21 and 22. The weather was bad, so business was only fair. "Two Gun Betty," the title of the picture, drove many away, especially women, who figured they didn't want to see anybody killed. This was a splendid comedy.

MANAGER WATTS had to look over his books to see if he ever had poorer business than he had with Shirley Mason in "The Winning Girl." The weather was bad and the star an almost unknown quantity, so the Vaudette had many empty seats for three days.

MARGUERITE CLARK had four cracking days at the Vaudette with "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" on February 16, 17, 18 and 19.

W. W. WATTS had Pauline Frederick at the Vaudette for four days, starting March 2, and had the same star at the Gaiety the same week for three days in "The Woman on the Index." Mr. Watts is the owner of both theatres.

ED. MAISEL, owner of the Capitol theatre, is the father of a baby boy. Sure, he's going to be a film man, and a good one. The mother and youngster are O. K. and Ed. is all smiles and grins.

THE following pictures are the kind that bring big business to the Capitol. They were shown the week of February 23-March 1: Sunday, "Beware of Boarders" and the eighth chapter of "The Lightning Raiders;" Monday, Mabel Normand in "Joan of Plattsburg," a Christie comedy and Gaumont Weekly; Tuesday, Barney Sherry and Belle Bennett in "Reckoning Day" and "A Bath House Tangle;" Wednesday, Will Rogers in "Laughing Bill Hyde;" Thursday, Marguerite Clark in "Wildflower;" Friday, Sessue Hayakawa in "The Temple of Dusk," and "Beans for Two," Strand comedy; Saturday, fourth chapter of "The Terror of the Range," with Betty Compson and George Larkin, and "Shorty" Hamilton in "Shorty Gets a Greaser;" also Pathe News; Sunday, "Shoulder Arms" with Charlie Chaplin, and No. 9 of "The Lightning Raiders."

AT this writing "The Heart of Humanity" has not been booked by any theatre, but it is understood that it will either be shown at the Gaiety or the Princess. Next week will give the exact dates and name of theatre.

LOUIS KERASOTES reports business as being quite satisfactory at the Savoy. Louis is now on the fourteenth chapter of "A Fight for Millions," it being the attraction on Sunday, February 23, with Neal Hart in "The Husband Hunter" and a two-reel L-Ko comedy; Monday the Savoy had Gladys Leslie in "The Nymph of the Foothills;" Tuesday, "Ashes of Love" with all-star cast; Wednesday, Robert Warwick and Elaine Hammerstein in "The Accidental Honeymoon;" Thursday, Monroe Salisbury in "Hughon, the Mighty;" Friday, Episode 14 of "The Iron Test," and other features; Saturday, Dorothy Phillips in "The Mortgaged Wife."

THE Royal had Annette Kellermann in "The Queen of the Sea" for Friday and Saturday, February 28 and March 1. Other attractions for the same week at Gus Kerasotes' Sixth Street playhouse were: Sunday, "The Lure of the Circus," and Helen Gibson in "The Fast Mail;" Monday, "Out of the Night," with Catherine Calvert; Tuesday, Lois Wilson and George Fisher in "Alimony;" Wednesday, a special attraction; Thursday, Montagu Love in "To Him That Hath."

"FALSE FACES," Louis Joseph Vance's story, produced by Ince, with Henry Walthall, came to the Gaiety March 2 for four days' run. "East Lynne With Variations," Sennett comedy, was on the same program.

EMMY WEHLEN in "The Bonded Wife" had two good days at the Lyric. Metro pictures have become great productions of late and Manager Loper is proud to show them. Constance Talmadge followed for three days in "Sauce for the Goose," Select feature. The Lees, Jane and Katherine, came on March 2 and 3 in "Smiles," a Fox play.

With Dubuque Exhibitors

ANITA STEWART came to the screen in "Virtuous Wives." The picture opened a three days' run at the Grand on February 20, and ran extra big every day. The catchy title was responsible in a measure for the crowds; then, too. Manager MaClay advertised the picture very heavily. A good reading notice was given the picture for several days before and during its engagement and that helped.

THE Wednesday, February 19, program at the Family theatre was "Men Who Have Made Love to Me," starring Mary McLane. A large crowd turned out to see in pictures the six love affairs of the famous vampire.

"THE COMMON CAUSE," J. Stuart Blackton's masterpiece of the war, played at the Princess theatre for four days, start ing February 17th. The picture could safely lay claim to the description of wonderful, for no other word could express it. The battle scenes, where the tanks advanced on the enemy, have never been equalled. Herbert Rawlinson and Sylvia Breamer, the stars, were very well liked.

THE Liberty presented "The Crisis," the great story adapted from the novel by Winston Churchill, for the Wednesday, February 19th, program. A special matinee was given, which was well attended, as was the evening performance.

"THE STOLEN OPTION," starring Edith Roberts, was the feature at the Star theatre on Thursday and Friday, February 20 and 21. In addition to this play a two-reel comedy with Billy West was shown.

"LITTLE MISS HOOVER," with Marguerite Clark, will be shown at the Grand during the early part of March.

"LOVE'S PAY DAY" marked the appearance of Rosemary Thebe in her first starring role at the Liberty theatre. The picture was shown there Thursday, February 20th, in conjunction with a Chaplin comedy, "His Million Dollar Job."

WILFRED LUCAS and Elaine Hammerstein were seen to advantage in "The Co-respondent," which played at the Family theatre Thursday, February 20th. Miss Hammerstein is quite a favorite at this theatre.

THE program at the Dreamland theatre, Friday and Saturday, February 21 and 22, was "The Divorce," with Ethel Barrymore. The noted actress proved a better drawing power than ever.

ALICE BRADY displayed her talents as a dancer Friday and Saturday, February 21 and 22, when she appeared at the Princess theatre in "The Death Dance." Miss Brady's plays are always liked, and of late the attendance at her pictures is surprisingly large.

WILLIAM HART drew full houses to the Family theatre Friday, the 21st, when his picture, "The Cold Deck," was shown. The cast of the picture was very good, especially Alma Rubens and Mrs. Charlie Chaplin.

"THE HEART OF A LION," the William Fox adaptation of Ralph Connor's novel, "The Doctor," played at the Liberty theatre Friday, February 21st, to capacity houses. William Farnum as "the fighting doctor" was more than pleasing and Liberty fans seemed to like him better in this than in numbers of his previous successes.

WALLACE REID and Charlie Chaplin shared the honors of the day at the Family theatre, where they appeared Saturday, February 22. Wallace Reid was seen in that famous picture, "Rimrock Jones," while the inimitable comedian played in "Triple Trouble." Manager Yount reported very good business.

BEAUTIFUL Virginia Pearson was presented at the Dreamland theatre Sunday and Monday, February 23 and 24, in "The Love Auction." Dramatic to a degree, the picture found favor in the eyes of Miss Pearson's large train of followers, who always put a picture over big. The Sunday attendance was very good, while the Monday houses ranked a little above average.

THE Princess offered "The Dawn of Understanding," with Bessie Love, for the Sunday, February 23rd, program. Dainty Bessie made a favorable impression on Princess fans by her work in the picture—her charm was very apparent.

"GOOD NIGHT, PAUL," with Constance Talmadge, made a hit with the patrons of the Plaza theatre at Manchester, Ia., where it was shown on Sunday and Monday, February 23 and 24. Tuesday's program was "Hidden Fires," with Mae Marsh, and on Wednesday Vivian Martin was featured in "Unclaimed Goods."

Happenings in Northern Indiana

AFTER playing the Oliver theatre in South Bend for several days, Gaby Deslys in "Infatuation," returned to the Auditorium this week and drew a record crowd. This much talked of woman proves a big drawing card. Mrs. Vernon Castle in "The Mysterious Client," and Harold Lockwood in "The Great Romance" featured a good week's bill at the Auditorium.

E. M. NEWMAN, travel lecturer, opened his tenth season at the Oliver theatre in South Bend last Friday night when he chose for his subject Paris, 1918.

AMONG the stars to appear on the La Salle bill in South Bend during the week were Bessie Love in "The Dawn of Understanding," Bessie Barriscale in "All of a Sudden Norma" and Geraldine Farrar in "Shadows." The coming bill includes Pauline Frederick, Elsie Ferguson, Mae Marsh, Mitchell Lewis, Earle Williams and Bill Russell.

DOROTHY PHILLIPS in "Heart of Humanity" had a meteorical run at the Art theatre in Gary during the past week. The large crowds made it necessary to lengthen the engagement. A symphony orchestra of well selected artists added materially to the picture.

THE THOMAS H. INCE production, "The Midnight Patrol," was subjected to heavy advertising during its showing at the Grand in Gary last week. It was hailed as a super feature.

BRYANT WASHBURN reached the zenith of his popularity in his picture, "The Way of a Maid With a Man," which played at the Cosmo during the week in Gary. The versatile young man carried the part of a clerk in the popular Saturday Evening Post story with a naturalness that charmed his followers as much as any of his previous features.

"THE ROMANCE OF TARZAN," the final chapters in the story of Tarzan, were shown before a large crowd at the Orpheum theatre in Gary. The many readers of Edgar Burroughs were all acquainted with the story and anxious to see it in pictures.

PRISCILLA DEAN as Collette in "The Wildcat of Paris" was played at the Broadway theatre in Gary with great success.

MARTIN JOHNSON'S remarkable picture of the South Seas have drawn large crowds to the Starland in Michigan City. Among the attractions shown during the week was Bert Lytel in "Unexpected Places," "Virtuous Wives," Nazimova in "An Eye for an Eye." Theda Bara will play in her famous picture "Salome" within a short time at the Starland.

¶ We have often thought though—What a wonderful Central States Edition we could get out, how much more money we could spend, how much more Service we could give—If every theater manager in the Central States territory sat down one night and wrote a twenty word note to his exchanges and the New York offices telling what the Central States Edition meant to him because of its crisp, human, local items. Has it ever occurred to you? Why we could break speed limits in Service!

Three Injurious Bills Pop Up in California

THE film industry is confronted with three bills introduced in the California Assembly which will be detrimental to the industry's interests, according to reports made at the weekly luncheon of the exhibitors of Los Angeles, Wednesday, February 26.

One bill provides it will be a criminal offense to sell a ticket to anyone if the seats of a theatre are all occupied. Another of a censorship nature makes it a felony for any theatre to show a film which will cause race or class hatred. There are two bills, one in the California senate, and one in the lower house, which provide for the prevention of what is termed unnecessary work on Sunday. This bill makes it lawful for the conduct of theatres and places of amusement on Sunday, but provides that film exchanges, producing studios, and other similar industrial organizations and places of business shall be closed on Sunday.

Report was made at the meeting by C. J. Marley, manager of the Triangle and Los Angeles exchange, in which he told of the work being done by the Los Angeles Film Exchange Board of Trade to compete this intolerant legislation, and President F. A. MacDonald suggested the organization of a protective league, with a small membership fee which should look after matters pertaining to the industry of a political nature. Inasmuch as there are approximately 50,000 in Los Angeles dependent in one way or another on the film industry, it was suggested that a membership of fully one-quarter of this amount cound be secured. This matter will be taken up with the heads of all studios, Film Exchange Board of Trade, and all organizations of the film industry.

At this meeting there was a discussion of the proposed protective league, and those who spoke were W. J. Reynolds, secretary of the Producers' Association, Seymour Hastings, financial secretary-treasurer of the Players' Union; Fred Bennett, scenario writer for Roscoe Arbuckle; Director James Young of the Vitagraph Company, and others.

Miss Lilie Leslie, of the Metro Company, was a guest at this meeting, and made a short and pleasing talk to the exhibitors.

A committee composed of Exhibitors O'Connell, Young and Walker, were named to meet with the Film Board of Trade for the purpose of discussing further ways and means of fighting this undesired bill.

Film Exchange Building to be Built in Denver

AT a recent meeting of the board of directors of the Rocky Mountain Screen Club the following officers were elected for the fiscal year:

President, Harry T. Nolan; vice-president, H. E. Huffman; secretary-treasurer, H. Bradley Fish; assistant secretary-treasurer, George Brown.

The following committee appointments have been announced:

Legislative—Harry T. Nolan, chairman; William E. Foley, District Attorney, and Homer E. Ellison.

House and Entertainment—H. E. Huffman, chairman; H. T. Nolan, F. B. Culp, Ward E. Scott, H. D. Cassidy, A. G. Edwards, H. M. Isler, J. B. Broughton, Milton Cohen, John Thompson and Joe Ashby.

The Entertainment Committee is planning a smoker, to be given at the Denver Athletic Club at an early date.

At the last regular meeting of the club Chairman Nolan briefly outlined the plans for the erection of a film exchange building in Denver, on which he has been quietly working for some time. The idea is to construct a fireproof building large enough to house all of the various exchanges and to reserve one floor for the exclusive use of the Screen Club. Their clubrooms would then include a cafe, a ballroom, and also a first-class projection room. The latter is badly needed and would probably be in use almost constantly.

It may be said that the proposition is meeting with united support in local film circles and that the movement has progressed sufficiently to be considered as almost a certainty.

Rialto in Butte Announces Programs Ahead

THE Rialto theatre, Butte, last week made announcement of its bookings for the season, and that the house is literally "snowed under" with a great galaxy of features and stars, as its full page advertisements in local newspapers proclaimed, is indicated by a perusal of the names given in its list of first-run franchises for Butte. The stars booked include Chaplin, Mary and Jack Pickford, Hart, Fairbanks, Ray, Ferguson, Bara, Marguerite Clark, Stone, Barrymore, Arbuckle, De Mille and Griffith productions and Sennett comedies as well as many others.

On February 23 a performance was given at the Majestic in honor of the visitors, and in the evening another banquet was provided. The Mayor of Reno was the guest of honor. The party went to Truckee the next day and then back to 'Frisco.

It was later announced that Mrs. Nixon intends to extend this invitation to San Francisco film men each year.

In and Around Denver

DISTRICT MANAGER CHARLES R. GILMORE, in commenting on the rapid growth of business enjoyed by United Picture theatres, announces the beginning of a campaign to increase the membership from 1,800 to 2,500 exhibitor customers. He states that the second Dustin Farnum picture scheduled for a first run on Curtis street, "The Man in the Open," has been booked by H. E. Ellison of the Rialto, beginning March 2. Mr. Ellison is putting out fifty 24-sheet stands.

C. F. PARR, until recently a Select salesman, who came to Denver from Dallas, has left for Salt Lake City, where he will have charge of United's business in that territory.

HARRY B. HURST, who recently sold his theatre at Deadwood, has arrived in Denver and is making his headquarters at the William Penn Hotel. He is looking for a new location and is strongly inclined to Idaho territory.

AMONG recent Denver visitors were T. A. Bucy of the Lyric, and Mrs. A. M. Ashburn of the Princess, at Sterling. They state that C. M. McIntyre of Sterling has purchased ground, had blueprints drawn, and will start the construction of a $25,000 theatre as soon as the weather will permit.

R. H. McCLUSKEY is covering the western slope for Exhibitors-Mutual, and Whitney Young, also an E.-M. salesman, is visiting eastern Colorado exhibitors.

CHARLES DECKER, former manager of the Majestic at Grand Junction, has severed his connection with the Swanson & Nolan interests and is now manager of the Sterling theatre at Greeley, owned by the Moore & Greaves Amusement company.

THE "flu" is on for a second run at Montrose and also at Ordway. D. J. Mooney writes that he has on this account closed the Princess at Ordway for an indefinite period. The epidemic has also broken out again at LaSalle, and C. E. Miller has closed the Crystal there.

W. J. LINN, who runs the Morris Grand Opera House at Hot Springs, S. D., was a recent visitor at Pathe and Exhibitors-Mutual, arranging new service.

G. F. KENNEDY has severed his connections with the Alcott theatre, Denver, and is now on the road for Triangle.

M. H. HEISMAN has reopened the Ozz theatre, near the Denver stockyards. The Bronx in South Denver has closed again.

Palmer Photoplay Grows to Huge Proportions

FROM a suite of three offices and five employes eight months ago to fourteen offices and tewnty-five salaried offices today, is announced as the record of the Palmer Photoplay Corporation, the new Los Angeles institute for the training of photoplay writers.

The Palmer institute met with immediate and universal support, and its officers are now casting about for a site in Hollywood upon which to erect a building spacious enough to accommodate its rapidly expanding business.

"Foreseeing the inevitable dearth of good story material for motion picture production, Mr. Palmer and I set out two years ago to perfect a plan of training and co-operation that would enable ambitious men and women of creative talent to master the elementary essentials of photoplay plot construction without studio experience," said Roy L. Manker, general manager of the Palmer institute.

"We met with expected scepticism at the beginning, but we knew that we had perfected something of intrinsic merit and were determined to keep on fighting for the recognition that we knew was due us.

"As a result of our national advertising, together with the splendid encouragement we have received from many of the foremost producers and editors, the Palmer institute is now supplying the studios with more than its quota of acceptable stories. Hundreds of talented persons in all parts of the world are now training themselves in the fundamentals of the art of screen writing through our Advisory Bureau, and some exceptionally promising material has come from most unexpected sources. A number of our members already have won success, and others are about to 'arrive.'

"Our Manuscript Sales Department is meeting with extraordinary success under the management of Ruth S. Allen, who resigned as scenario editor for Douglas Fairbanks to take up our work. Miss Allen not only represents our own members but serves a large number of the country's foremost authors."

Heard in Los Angeles Town

"MICKEY," the seven-reel super-comedy, in which Mabel Normand is the star, has been booked for a week's run at the Kinema theatre beginning March 2. According to Louis Hyman, of the All Star Feature Distributors' Exchange, through whom the picture is being released, the play enjoyed a remarkable run at the California theatre in San Francisco. In fact, he said, so great was the run that Eugene Roth, proprietor of the California, transferred the picture to his other house, the Portola, where it continued to smash records for attendance. Following the showing of "Mickey" at the Kinema, Mack Sennett's "Yankee Doodle in Berlin" will be shown at that theatre. One of the features of Sennett week at the Kinema will be the personal appearance of the Mack Sennett diving girls, directed by Bothwell Browne, who has an important role in the play as a female impersonator.

ALL STAR FEATURES announce that soon they will begin releasing every two weeks Billy West comedies.

TAKING advantage of the wonderful record established at the California theatre for attendance during the run of "The Hell Cat," with Geraldine Farrar, the Goldwyn exchange is sending out notices in postal form to the exhibitors of this territory showing the crowds that attended the showing of the Farrar subject. Manager Ben Fish said that an actual photograph of the crowd was the best evidence that the picture really attracted the people. The legend on the postal card says: "Showing the crowd trying to get in to see Geraldine Farrar in 'The Hell Cat' at the California theatre, Los Angeles. Lengthen your run on this picture and cash in. Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, 912 South Olive street, Los Angeles."

F. E. SAMUELS, district representative for General Film, returned on Tuesday, February 25, from an extended trip to San Franciso, Seattle and Portland.

C. E. ELLIOTT, handling Select special attractions, including "The One Woman," by Thomas Dixon, Julia Arthur in "The Cavell Case" and "The Midnight Patrol" by Thomas H. Ince, has returned from a trip to Santa Barbara and other coast cities. He says that business is getting back to better than normal. The theatres are playing to larger crowds, he learns, than for many months prior to the influenza ban.

New Theatres Spring Up in the West

THE State of Washington is fast adding to its supply of motion picture theatres, according to reports from that section. Western Washington exhibitors show their faith in the industry and their towns by erecting new houses.

At Cle Elum, Wash., the population of which is 3,000, C. M. Dunn opened his new Victory theatre recently to success. It seats 500 and is entirely fireproof throughout. With this theatre Mr. Dunn now has control of Roslyn, Cle Elum and Mabton, Wash., it is said.

At Sunnyside, population 1,200, R. N. Barnett recently opened his new American theatre, with a seating capacity of over 600. The American is said to be the last word in theatre construction throughout and would do justice to any city.

At Grand View, 700 population, Van Winkle & Sutton, under the active management of Mr. Van Winkle, have built and equipped a new 260-seat house, called the Grand. It has two machines of the latest make.

At Toppenish, population 2,500, Dr. Johnson, proprietor of the Lois theatre, has an 800-seat house under construction. It is brick and cement throughout. It is expected to be ready for opening in April.

Writers Should Be Good Readers

By WILL M. RITCHEY

I WONDER how many of the good people who write scenarios and send them in to long-suffering and patient studio editors are well-read people? Here, to my mind, is one of the necessary qualifications for a writer of photo-plays, and for that matter, a writer of anything.

I do not only mean reading the short stories of today; we all do that. I advise every aspiring scribe to delve into really good literature; it not only improves the mind, but it breeds a desire for better style.

So many people write "any old way," and carelessness in style leads to brevity of ideas. A well-read man or woman has a tremendous advantage over those whose reading is confined to the current short stories and up-to-date novels, no matter how good they may be. Read these, too, but don't overlook the masterpieces of literature.

I also advise all those who have real writing ability to turn part of their time and talent to short-story writing because it leads to a more careful analysis of character and demands originality of plot as well as a careful unfolding of a story. Many short-story writers earn an added income by selling the photo-play rights to their stories after they are published, and every writer should be careful to reserve dramatic and motion picture rights when submitting a story to a magazine. This is a point which should not be overlooked.

Ince Enlarges Activities to Meet Demands

ADVICES from Los Angeles carry the news that Thomas H. Ince is busily engaged these days enlarging activities at his new studio in Culver City to meet the production demands made under his new releasing contract with the Paramount Pictures corporation. It is expected that the great producer will shortly announce two new stars to be featured in his photo-plays during the coming year in addition to Dorothy Dalton, Charles Ray and Enid Bennett, who are now working every day under the big glass tops.

Mr. Ince has signed up for a long period to play juvenile parts Lloyd Hughes, a young man of 21 years, who hails from Bisbee, Ariz. For the past few years he has been attending school at the Los Angeles Polytechnic and broke into pictures doing juvenile bits. Mr. Ince saw his work on the screen back in the atmosphere of a picture. His keen eye was quick to catch the ability of the youth and he sent for him. A nice contract for the young man was the result and he will make his debut as a leading man in a picture now nearing completion in which Enid Bennett has the lead.

Another new contract signed at the Ince studio is by the well-known William Conklin, who has appeared for many years on the screen as a leading man and in strong supporting parts. Mr. Conklin has a dramatic career that includes many seasons on the speaking stage. He was in the Broadway production and on tour in "Arizona," "Pierre of the Plains," "Soldiers of Fortune," "Dan," and "In Missouri." Later he played lead for Julia Dean in "Law of the Land." He was the juvenile lead in the screen serial, "Neal of the Navy." He played in the de luxe production of "The Tale of Two Cities," and with Dustin Farnum in "North of Fifty-Three." He was cast by Mr. Ince in Louise Glaum's "Golden Rule Kate," with Frank Keenan in "The Edge of Sin," and with Dorothy Dalton in "The Price Mark." He has just completed work in support of Enid Bennett in a new production in which he appeared so favorably that Mr. Ince gave him a long contract for regular appearance in the Ince pictures.

Other players now under contract to appear in the Ince productions are Douglas MacLean, Dorris Lee and Otto Hoffman.

With Los Angeles Producers

OLIVE THOMAS, having finished her latest picture, "Upstairs and Down," has begun production on a new play entitled "The Spite Bride." The story was provided by Louise Winter. Charles Giblyn will be the director.

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG'S new picture, called "The Love Quest," now being produced at the Brunton studios, will have a notable cast, it was announced this week. Besides two directors, W. P. S. Earle, and his brother, Fred P. Earle, there will be two other stars besides Miss Young in the play. They will be Lillian Walker and Kathryn Williams, it is understood.

A NEW story for Frank Keenan has been selected, and production will begin at an early date, it was announced this week at the Brunton studios.

ALMA RUBENS and Bessie Barriscale, who are now producing for their own companies, are on a shopping trip to New York.

"THE MIRACLE MAN" is the title of a picture just completed at the Brunton studios by George Leone Tucker, it was officially announced this week. Mr. Tucker has spent several weeks in the production of the subject.

CONFIRMATION that Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle has signed a contract with Famous Players-Lasky company for three years at $1,000,000, or for $3,000,000, as reported on February 23 from Kansas City, where he went to meet Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky company, was verified a few days later by a telegram from Mr. Zukor to Jesse L. Lasky. Arbuckle went from Kansas City to New York. His new contract, it is understood, calls for twenty-four pictures. It has not been announced where he will produce, but it is assumed that he will continue work at his studios near Edendale. Arbuckle has been in Los Angeles for more than a year, and during that time he produced at the former Balboa studios at Long Beach, later going to Santa Ana, and then to his present location.

WALLACE REID was injured in an autmobile accident while working on location this week. The car in which he was riding turned over, and the star suffered a number of scalp wounds. Production was suspended for the day, but he is now back at work.

MABEL NORMAND, Rex Beach and Pauline Frederick productions are progressing nicely at the Goldwyn studios.

THE first animal comedy subject made by Universal is now ready for release, it is announced, and the releasing date will be announced soon. It is a picture in which many prominent members of the Universal Zoo family appear, and was directed by William S. Campbell.

THE James J. Corbett and Eddie Polo serials are under way in excellent shape, while other Universal productions now in the process of filming are moving swiftly to completion.

ALICE MOORE, three-year-old daughter of Tom Moore and Alice Joyce, has arrived in Los Angeles, accompanied by her grandmother. The first thing Tom Moore did after the daughter arrived was to go on a shopping expedition in Los Angeles. Production work on Moore's present picture, "The City of Comrades," is progressing rapidly. This week Tom Moore has been going around with a well-developed beard, because somewhere in the play he is supposed to play the part of a very poor man who has a beard.

CHARLES RAY has completed the picture that was known during production work as "Hay-Foot, Straw-Foot." It was directed by Jerry Storm, and is a comedy drama. Doris Lee was his leading woman. Ray is planning to start a new picture to be directed also by Storm, the story of which was provided by Louis Zellner. The scenario was written by Julian Josephson.

Propaganda in the Motion Picture

By Douglas Fairbanks

SOME people seek publicity, others have it thrust upon them. It's about fifty-fifty with me, I guess. But here's something that's been running through my mind for many a day, and I'm passing it along to you.

"Propaganda" is a much misused word. It means information. Nearly every film carries some sort of propaganda, and many manufacturers, not realizing this, have unwittingly conveyed harmful, destructive and dangerous impressions to the entire world because instead of conveying the true information they have followed what they believed to be a popular conception of characters. For instance, their tendency has been to use the national characteristics of a character for purposes of comedy or heavies (villains). In my opinion it is unsportsmanlike, undemocratic and un-American to cast a Japanese for the part of a villain in a play, giving him therein no possible excuse for a good action and having him gloat continually at white women, using the characteristics of his features to stimulate in the audience feelings of horror, when, as we all know, a Japanese is as capable of a good action as a bad one.

Then again. Englishmen, in the true meaning of the word "men," have been dying side by side with our boys on the fields of France. As an American I ask you, is it fair to continually portray upon the screen and stage representations of Englishmen as gaping fools, wearing monocles and absurd moustaches, when you know as well as I know that the average Englishman is as husky and as democratic as we are. In my opinion it is a poor comedian or actor who cannot get laughs or thrills legitimately, and the sooner we eliminate the tendency to indulge in national personalities the sooner our rapidly expanding and significant art of film-playing will find itself. We must do away with tricks and tell the truth in a healthy and characteristic American fashion.

I am quite sure that films have taught small boys to steal successfully, and that they have shown young people standing on precipices the clean and straight path. If it is capable of doing either of these two things, it will certainly be my policy to seize the latter opportunity to make every production of which I am personally concerned typical of American ideals and of friendship and admiration for OUR ALLIES.

Jack Pickford Uses Aeroplane to Land Him on Mountain Location

IT is reported that Jack Pickford and company, the latter including a number of well-known players in the film colony, have left for a two-weeks' stay in the mountains back of San Jacinto, Cal., where Pickford's second First National production will be filmed.

Jack Pickford started on the trip by aeroplane, racing against the others of his company in automobiles.

Pickford has secured Gloria Hope as his leading woman for the production. He also has with him Russell Simpson, George Nicholls, Lizette Thorne, George Drumgold, Robin Williamson, Philip Gastrock and Edward Butterworth, all of whom are playing important roles in the production, which is being adapted by Harvey F. Thew from a Hapsburg Liebe magazine story.

THE Liberty has booked first-run Kinograms and is showing second-run Sennett-Arbuckle comedies at matinees only in an effort to build up the matinee business. Butte has never been known as a good matinee town.

THE American had "The Heart of Humanity," opening February 24. Business was good at admission prices of 50 cents for adults.

A. L. SCOTT has sold the Nob Hill theatre, a prominent Portland suburban house, to R. Mallott.

What They Say in Seattle

F. V. FISHER, manager of the Exhibitors' Film exchange, has returned from a successful trip through Montana, where he covered the larger towns and closed contracts for the new Mary Pickford and Anita Stewart series with the leading exhibitors. Mr. Fisher reports the booking of "Virtuous Wives" and the new Pickford pictures for eight days at the Victory, Tacoma; one week at the Clemmer, Spokane; five days at McKee's Orpheum, Everett, and at the Liberty, Bellingham, and also at the following theatres: Rialto, Bremerton; Empress, Missoula; Alcazar, Great Falls; New Marlo, Helena; Babcock, Billings; Iris, Mills City; Orpheum, Haver; Liberty, Salem; Page, Medford; Binning, Ashford; Liberty, Astoria, and a great many other places.

C. H. FELDMAN, roadman for the Exhibitors' Film exchange, is now covering Oregon in the interests of the new Pickford-Anita Stewart series, as well as the latest First National release, "Our Teddy," all of which he reports are going very well.

S. B. PECK, recently honorably discharged from the army, and who before joining the colors was booker for the Exhibitors' Film exchange, has taken a position as roadman with the old firm. Mr. Peck will cover Eastern Washington and Montana, where he will handle the First National releases.

ANITA STEWART in "Virtuous Wives," a First National release, made a hit at the Liberty, Seattle, where this film was shown for a week. The theatre was crowded at every performance the latter part of the week and people were standing in line for half a block, which proved that those who went the first two days told their friends to go.

MR. FOSTER of Pateros, Wash., has advised the Famous Players-Lasky company in Seattle that their plan of introducing educational and other films in their community has proven very satisfactory and that this plan will undoubtedly be a permanent one in Pateros.

SECOND LIEUTENANT DOUGLAS JARMUTH, military aviator, has been employed by the Famous Players-Lasky company, Seattle, as a booker. Before entering the army Mr. Jarmuth was the owner of two theatres in California. One was the Colonial at Los Angeles and the other the Strand at San Barnardino. Mr. Jarmuth is a Seattle man, having been raised there and having graduated from the Broadway high school in 1910.

T. HUME, formerly owner of the American at Arlington, Wash., has purchased the Edmonds at Edmonds, Wash. The American has been purchased by the Barney Bros.

ED. HUDSON, who was recently honorably discharged from the army, has gone on the road for the United. Before enlisting Mr. Hudson was connected with Select.

MR. HILL, formerly manager of the Goldwyn office in Seattle and more recently owner of a couple of theatres in Oregon, has just recovered from a bad attack of the "flu."

JOSEPH BRANDT, assistant treasurer of the Universal Film company, was recently in Seattle, Portland, Tacoma, Spokane and other cities, scouting around for ideas. While in Seattle Mr. Brandt was the guest of the Northwest Film Board of Trade at a dinner given in his honor at the new Washington Hotel. Mr. Brandt emphasized the fact that his company, the Universal, desires to produce what the people want, and while the public likes individual stars, he firmly believes that no company can live on the "star system" alone, as the story is the thing the people want. Mr. Brandt is recognized as one of the biggest men in the industry. He recently spent two months in Universal City, Cal., where he prepared two big serials, one of which will star James J. Corbett.

HARRY CAREY, a Universal star, appeared in person at the Mission, Seattle, and in other cities in the Northwest, where he was starring on the screen. Wherever he appeared, the houses were packed.

A. H. HUOT, manager of the Film Clearing House at Seattle, announces that he has made contracts with exhibitors in all of the larger towns in his district for the "10-20-30 Series." Mr. Beals, who has covered Oregon and Mr. Dobbs, who has covered Montana, with this series, both report splendid business.

R. E. CHARLES, honorably discharged from the army, and who before entering the service was with Select, has been employed as booker and office manager for the Seattle branch of Film Clearing House.

NORTHWEST Universal manager, Sol Baum, was a recent visitor to the Seattle office where he was in conference with Mr. Mead. Mr. Baum has announced that after this he will spend about two weeks at his home office in Portland and the balance of the time in the Seattle and Spokane branches. HEPBURN, branch manager of the Vitagraph exchange, says that he and his party were royally entertained at Rockwell Field last week when a special showing of Earle Williams' latest picture, "The Highest Trump," by H. H. Van Loan, was given at the Y. M. C. A. auditorium at the aviation school near San Diego. The Vitagraph party were the guests of Col. H. B. S. Burwell, commander of Rockwell Field, and after a dinner tendered in their honor by Colonel Burwell, the special exhibition of "The Highest Trump" was given. When the picture was being filmed, the military authorities at Rockwell Field assisted Mr. Williams in every way consistent with military rules to get his airplane scenes.

"THE FIGHTING ROOSEVELTS," a First National picture, had an excellent run at Tally's Broadway theatre for the week beginning February 17, Mr. Tally announced. An aggressive advertising campaign was conducted in connection with the showing of the picture in order to convince the public that it was a really dramatic story instead of a biography of Colonel Roosevelt.

THE Rosebud theatre, at the corner of Central avenue and East Twentieth street, reported record attendance during the run of "Tarzan of the Apes," a First National release.

"THE MIDNIGHT ROMANCE," Anita Stewart's latest release, will be shown in Los Angeles the latter part of March. MANAGER DAVE SCHUMANN, of the Florence theatre in Pasadena, reported that for the week of February 17 his house was packed at every performance of "Hoop-La," the big comedy-circus feature starring Billie Rhodes. During one of the evenings of the picture's showing, William Parsons, under whose personal direction the picture was presented, was the guest of the theatre management, and Miss Rhodes made a personal appearance on the stage.

"CHEATING CHEATERS," a Select release starring Clara Kimball Young, was booked at Tally's Broadway theatre for the week beginning February 23.

A. ARONSON, the new district manager for the Pacific Coast for Goldwyn, whose headquarters have been established at the Los Angeles offices of Goldwyn, is on a trip to San Francisco, Seattle, Portland, Salt Lake City and Denver. Since establishing his office in Los Angeles, Mr. Aronson announces this is one of the livest territories in the United States. "The exhibitors are a wide-awake people and know how to put over their pictures so that the public will come to their shows," he said. He has already made a host of friends in Los Angeles.

"THE WOMAN IN THE INDEX," starring Pauline Frederick, was given a special pre-view for a number of Los Angeles exhibitors this week. The film was pronounced by them as one of the snappiest, fastest and most interesting detective stories released in some time.

GEORGE KING, one of the officers of the Stoll company of England, visited the Goldwyn exchange in Los Angeles for several days before leaving for New York on February 22. He expects to sail immediately for London. While in Los Angeles he was entertained by Ben Fish, A. Aronson and Walter S. Rand.

"THE BORDER LEGION," Goldwyn's production of Zane Gray's story of the same name, was booked for a week's run at the Alhambra theatre beginning February 23. "The picture is being booked heavily throughout the territory," said Ben Fish, Goldwyn Branch manager. "It is one of the best pictures we have, and will no doubt prove one of our best box office attractions."

STEVE BLACHLEY, road representative of Goldwyn, has reported that the Cabrillo theatre at San Diego has signed for a week's run of "The Border Legion," the picture from Zane Gray's story.

FOLLOWING its great run at the Kinema theatre under the direct supervision of the Universal Company, Branch Manager David Bershon reports that "Hearts of Humanity," starring Dorothy Phillips, has been booked in the following cities: Phoenix, one week; San Diego, one week; Bakersfield, four days; Taft, two days; San Bernardino, four days; Venice, three days; Whittier, two days. Branch Manager Theurkauf of Universal said he believed all three prints of the subject will be booked solid in this territory within the next sixty days.

Heart to Heart

Showing how ten minutes of your time can help us —and help you.

¶ The West Coast Edition of Motion Picture News costs us a lot of money. It costs just as much as would a separate publication published locally in Los Angeles or San Francisco. But it's worth it to us—Because it enables us to say that NO OTHER FILM PUBLICATION covers the West Coast as thoroughly, and with such intimate news and gossip as does Motion Picture News.

¶ We have often thought though—What a wonderful West Coast Edition we could get out, how much more money we could spend, how much more Service we could give—If every theatre manager in the West Coast territory sat down one night and wrote a twenty word note to his exchanges and the New York offices telling what the West Coast Edition meant to him because of its crisp, human, local items. Has it ever occurred to you? Why we could break speed limits in Service!

¶ Will you do it? Will you let us know about it? And then watch our smoke!

Everyone was willing but the bride.

So when it came to "Do you take this man?" Sylvia shouted "No!" and fled.

When she changed her bridal gown for a bathing suit, things began to happen.

Especially to the three young women-haters in the woods, when Sylvia appeared.

I APOLOGIZE

And I know you are going to accept my apology.

I expected to be able before this to talk business with the thousands of exhibitors who have been telegraphing and writing for SELZNICK PICTURES franchises.

But I am working out a plan of publicity, service and cooperation on a scale never before attempted. It is original and stupendous. It cannot be imitated. It will be used exclusively for SELZNICK PICTURES.

I will be ready to announce this plan shortly. Meanwhile I must ask exhibitors who have been looking for these pictures to accept my apology and be patient a little longer.

SELZNICK PICTURES would go over big anyhow. This new idea will make them a tremendous sensation.

The Timely Sensational Psychological Labor Story of the Year

THE BOOMERANG

with HENRY B. WALTHALL

A NATIONAL SUPER FEATURE

27,000 columns of reading matter was printed on the front pages of newspapers throughout America last week regarding the League of Nations. 500,000 people lined Broadway trying to hear Woodrow Wilson and William Howard Taft discuss a League of Nations. Italy, France, England, Holland, Belgium, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, the Slavs of Austria - Hungary, the Slovenes and Croats of Central Europe, the hordes of Russia, the down-trodden peasants of the Balkans, the oppressed races of Mesopotamia and the Turkish provinces—all the peoples of the earth are wildly awaiting the efforts of the greatest thinkers in the world to bring forth from the parley at Versailles some form of Society of Nations which will prevent war and make the world a safe and decent place to live in.

"WHOM THE GODS WOULD DESTROY" is a motion picture play begun one year ago at Los Angeles, California, under the direction of Ollie L. Sellers with Frank Borzage directing. It is a romantic picture which opens with the manger scene, the birth of Christ. Then the period of Atilla, the hun, is seen in kaleidoscopic rapidity. The rise and fall of Napoleon is shown and then an instant's showing of the World War—just an instant.

A piece of paper flutters from the sky. A German soldier lying out in No Man's Land picks it up. Reads it.

It says:

Woodrow Wilson offers the German people membership in a League of Nations.

This soldier's eyes are opened and he returns to Germany and secretly addresses the peace meetings. Soon a little flame is kindled into a mighty conflagration.

The armistice follows.

Through seven reels in fascinating continuity a romantic story is told:

Unwinding in one surprise after another the story "WHOM THE GODS WOULD DESTROY" sets forth Woodrow Wilson's ideas of a League of Nations. It is put in vivid and potent dramatic fashion. It entertains while it enthralls. It startles while it talks in a language the world is waiting to hear.

It is pictorial pleasure and giant rhetoric, at one and the same time. It is timely. It comes when all the world is up on its toes ready to rush right at the subject every time it is uttered and soon "WHOM THE GODS WOULD DESTROY" will be shown under the auspices of the Macauley Photoplays, Inc. and the ardent exhibitor who seeks novelty and sensation will find solace for his conventional flow of films in one of the one hundred prints which will sweep the country like a hurricane.

ARTISTIC ACCESSORIES TO THE MOTION PICTURE

THE INTRODUCTION OF ARTISTIC ACCESSORIES TO THE MOTION PICTURE, AND THE ARTISTIC DEVELOPMENT OF THE MOTION PICTURE ITSELF, ARE SIGNIFICANT OF THE GROWTH OF THE FILM INDUSTRY.

AMONG THESE IMPROVEMENTS ARE THE ELIMINATIONS OF THE DARK THEATRE BY THE DEVICE OF "DAYLIGHT PROJECTION," THE EMPLOYMENT OF COLOR ACCESSORIES, LIGHT AND SCENIC CONTRIVANCES TO HEIGHTEN AND BRING INTO MORE EFFECTIVE RELIEF THE ACTION PORTRAYED ON THE FILM AND THE SYNCRONIZATION OF THE MUSIC TO THE ACTION AND THE SPIRIT OF THE PLAY.

THESE THINGS TAKEN IN THE AGGREGATE, HAVE ACCOMPLISHED MARKED RESULTS IN THE ARTISTIC ELEVATION OF THE MOTION PICTURE AS A MEDIUM OF ENTERTAINMENT. THEY HAVE RAISED THE MOTION PICTURE ENTERPRISE FROM THE LEVEL OF AN INDUSTRY TO THE PLANE OF AN ART, COMPARABLE TO THAT OF THE SPOKEN DRAMA.

IN ALL THESE MOVEMENTS, SAMUEL L. ROTHAPFEL WHO HAS RESIGNED AS MANAGING DIRECTOR OF THE RIVOLI AND RIALTO THEATRES HAS BEEN A PIONEER AND A LEADER. MR. ROTHAPFEL'S INNOVATIONS HAVE INFLUENCED THE ENTIRE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY.

NOT THE LEAST AMONG HIS HIGHLY SUCCESSFUL EXPERIMENTS IS THE EMPLOYMENT OF MUSIC—IN MANY INSTANCES ORIGINAL—TO HEIGHTEN THE EFFECT OF THE SILENT DRAMA. THE ORCHESTRAS WHICH HE ORGANIZED AT THE RIVOLI AND RIALTO ARE THE HIGHEST TYPE OF THEATRE ORCHESTRAS THAT HAVE BEEN HEARD IN AMERICA. THE COMBINATION OF ARTISTIC PICTURES, ARTISTIC ACCESSORIES AND ARTISTIC MUSIC IS PRACTICALLY A NEW FORM OF ENTERTAINMENT—SOMETHING BETWEEN DRAMA AND OPERA THAT IS EFFECTIVE IN THE HIGHEST DEGREE.

THE PUBLIC HAS THE RIGHT TO EXPECT FROM MR. ROTHAPFEL FURTHER ARTISTIC CONTRIBUTIONS IN THE LINE WHICH HE HAS ALREADY MARKED OUT IN THE PAST.

"THE BETTER 'OLE"

Read This Comment

"The Better 'Ole"

"We sat in the Strand, New York, the other night, watching a British film. It was 'The Better 'Ole,' and it was well done. And what interested us most of all was that the audience liked it immensely.

"'The Better 'Ole' is a good picture. Its quaint humor is like a breath of fresh air. We are glad to say a good word for it here, for its own sake as well as for the augury it brings."—Exhibitor's Trade Review.

"It's the Picture That Counts"

"The lines outside the Strand Theatre this week waiting to see 'The Better 'Ole' point several morals.

"But most important of all is that picture patrons will go out of their way these days to seek a cheery, whole-hearted laugh. That comedy-drama has all the pulling power that 'sensational punches' ever had.

"And that delightful old codger, 'Old Bill,' is some star himself even if he isn't in the 'big four.'"—Motion Picture News.

This is added proof that "The Better 'Ole" is a great picture—added proof that it is the greatest audience picture of to-day.

It is selling fast—all the "big fellows" want it—first come, first served—prices fair.

That is the way WORLD does business—that is fair play.

Now! Play fair with yourself—your audience—your box office—investigate "The Better 'Ole" to-day! Wire or write WORLD'S nearest branch NOW!

A Free Field

THIS is going to be a wide-open year in motion pictures.

And so—even more so—will be next year, and next.

This is going to be a big and prosperous year in motion pictures. And so—even more so—will be next year and next.

We have, first of all, a big buying public this year. Theatres—most everywhere—are drawing a bigger patronage than ever before. Country-wide prohibition; the return of more than a million soldiers, all of them wage-earners and theatregoers; the inevitable period of industrial and agricultural activity facing us; all these great forces turn people to picture theatres. Labor troubles, should they arise, will not keep people away; rather they will increase attendance. Bigger and better theatres are going up. There seems no cloud upon the picture theatre horizon—so far as public attendance is concerned—provided picture theatres, through their own power, and that is plentiful, see that the reformers do not restrict their normal and rightful appeal through censorship, Sunday closing and other unjust regulations.

On the Right Track

ALL of which means that the industry is facing a future never before so secure, because it will have, as a foundation to build upon, a volume of box office cash never so large and substantial.

By wide-open, we mean a year wide-open in picture value—a year, and a year plus other years, in which theatres will have more good pictures offered them from more sources without strings attached, and at live and let live rentals.

Wide-open means freedom from monopoly; and by monopoly we mean producer monopoly, distributor monopoly, exhibitor monopoly—separately exercised, or all three under the same roof.

There are some mighty good things about monopolies, and some mighty bad things. The worst thing is that monopoly isn't fair to all elements in a business and it's apt to be fatal to itself, let alone to the true development of such a product as the motion picture.

* * * * *

You Can't Monopolize Brains

MONOPOLY, in any business, is mighty difficult to achieve; in motion pictures it is seemingly impossible and so the wiser heads well know. The making of motion pictures is a purely creative matter; and in order to monopolize creative effort you have got to monopolize brains—which has never been done.

You may, at any given time, aim to monopolize all the raw materials there exists for the making of pictures—star values, story values, production ability, experience and fame; and you may accomplish—for a while—this considerable task.

We will even take it for granted that such a producer monopoly will be exercised beneficently—in the best interests of the distributor and exhibitor—which may or may not occur.

But so long as new stars can be made with a half dozen good pictures; and so long as the human brain is constantly creating new stories, books and plays—for the screen itself, perhaps; and so long as producing ability isn't confined to a comparative few; and so long as independent capital is always willing to back the ventures—well, your monopoly can be no more permanent than a house built upon the sands.

* * * * *

The Natural Way Best

A MONOPOLY of theatres, through outright ownership or backing control looks easier, but picture theatres differ from the vaudeville and legitimate theatres to a very considerable degree, a degree by which the appeal and field and entertainment of the film differ from that of the stage; and here again the wiser and more experienced ones say that consolidation will never go far beyond sectional groups, or perhaps, a comparatively limited chain of large city theatres.

What does monopoly try to attain, after all?

Monopoly is simply an attempt to short cut the natural growth of the industry.

We see all about us waste—a great deal of it, overproduction, abuse, chaos; and we decide that control, part way or all along the line, will eliminate all this, and make for economic order and soundness.

But after all, the industry, if left alone, will do all this of itself.

It will take much longer.

* * * * *

Bright Days in Sight

BUT just the ordinary simple law of economics, the law of supply and demand, will straighten the wrinkles all out in time. In the meantime bad guesses will be made, overproduction will exist, abuses will rise—and as a result fingers will be burned and toes stepped upon; but the corrective process will go on, slowly and inexorably, just the same.

Monopoly strives to hurry it up; but in so doing you are

Dealing in Personalities

"Here's the Follow-up of Our Tip in Last Week's Issue"

REMEMBER a little tip we tried to slip you in last week's "Personalities"? When we mentioned C. F. Zittel and Whitman Bennett, of the Zukor forces, in the same breath? And the possibilities of a Hearst-Paramount embrace?

Right after that issue was on the newsstands we rushed a photo of C. F. Zittel to the engraver.

And here's the halftone—just in time for the news of the Hearst-Zukor association.

We first made "Zit's" acquaintance through the columns of the New York Evening Mail.

Then we followed his "vaudeville chart" to the Evening Journal.

And we've watched his preliminary sparring in the film arena.

But, boy, while those passing years have shown this same "Zit" to be a fast-moving person, we're here to lay a bet that he considers this week's news announcement the real clanging of the gong for a slam-bang, smashing battle to the finish in the motion picture ring.

Lewis J. Selznick has been reported slightly under the weather for a few days.

James E. McBride, of Fox, playing the role of "advance man" journeyed to Albany several days ago to look over the legislative ground.

Harry Rowson dropped a hasty word to us as he ran for the Acquitania that no parties here were authorized to act for his company regarding the rights to "The Life of Lloyd George."

Lo and behold! After threatening to descend on us week after week, Watterson R. Rothacker blew into town Wednesday. A few days hustle and bustle about town and then he'll be off to join the family in the South for "a well earned rest." It's tough to be one of those birds going South for "a much needed vacation."

"The best handled legislative appearance the industry has ever made" are the words we heard quoted from William A. Brady on the affair in Albany last Wednesday. And exhibitors did it! The credit for the dignified and effective presentation goes to Sydney Cohen and his able lieutenants. And take it from any person present at the Senate hearing—too much credit cannot be given them.

Captain William Harrigan, the man who led the rescue of the Lost Battalion, gave a military touch to the Albany hearing though the picture men refused to admit that they were a Lost Battalion.

Judging from the accounts in the Tribune, Herald and Times, the son of the famous Ned Harrigan was the hit of the day. His aid was secured through the cooperation of our old friend Edward MacManus, who is sending the Captain out on a whirlwind lecture tour, after which there may be a motion picture.

Jos. L. Kelley, for two years of Motion Picture News staff, is now doing publicity for Hopp Hadley. Go to it, Joe. We're with you.

Frank Powell arrived in town on Saturday with a breezy San Antonio air. Frank is a bit mysterious but we have a surmise that after hanging around a laboratory for a few days he'll have some good pictures to show.

From Los Angeles comes the definite word that the latest Chaplin, "Sunnyside," will be shipped East on March 22. If you don't believe this is an event ask Watterson Rothacker about the dozens of telegrams from exhibitors received at his laboratory every day.

Lee Ochs, who journeyed West to confer with President J. A. Berst, of United Pictures, announced in Los Angeles on Wednesday that two new stars would soon be announced by that circuit. "And probably a third," he added. Friday will tell the tale.

Have you ever heard the Harry Schwalbe Boosters Club in action? Watterson Rothacker, Harry Reichenbach, and William A. Johnston were at a table in the Astor the other day and the name of Schwalbe came up. They needed a brass band to complete the atmosphere after that.

That pioneer of "fewer pictures, better pictures, longer runs," W. W. Hodkinson, comes to bat with an exclusive statement in this week's News which you will enjoy reading. It's on page 1783.

Hiram Abrams arrived in town on Tuesday. Simultaneous with his arrival came the news that, after disposing of all territory on "Yankee Doodle in Berlin" within ten days, Abrams is selling "Hearts of Men" the big George Beban special on state rights.

The first gun being fired in an interview issued Thursday, also carried the information that Oscar Price, Assistant Director General of Railroads, will become active in the new organization on April 1.

The Abrams interview stated that the first comprehensive announcement of the "Big Four's" plans would be ready within a few weeks.

After looking over the Cash Register Town in Ohio for purposes of future reference T. O. Eltonhead returned to town last Friday.

That combination of the four essentials, Leah Baird, George Irving, Augustus Thomas, and Harry Raver, is booming along. This week's news pages chronicle an important event in their linking up with W. W. Hodkinson for releasing arrangements.

apt to break the backbone of the business—and most likely your own.

So the future looks good because it looks wide open; wide open in the effort to make and market good pictures.

More good pictures will be made.

We know now that good pictures are a matter of supervision and organization, not merely a question of hit or miss direction; that concentrated and specialized ability—of a high order—is necessary.

We know that there's no chance for a profit in the mediocre picture; nor the highly extravagant one.

The story has at last come into its own. Look at the advertising pages of Motion Picture News—how the story is featured, listen to producers, who declare that they are going to make good pictures because they've got hold of good story material. Listen to exhibitors who say: we don't care so much about the stars as we do about the vehicle they will appear in.

Theatres are learning how to advertise, and are advertising—which, in itself, demands—and will inevitably evolve a quality product.

All this is healthy progress; and out of it will survive the best elements among producers and exhibitors; and there will be evolved slowly perhaps but surely, that coordination of the industry will be best for these best elements.

It's slower, but it's sane; and it beats monopoly all hollow.

William A. Johnston

Exhibitors Triumph at Albany Hearing

Sunday Motion Pictures Opposed by Ministers Who Fear Competition—Captain Harrigan Declares Soldiers Want Sunday Shows—Cohen Arranges Campaign of Defense

CONTENDING that motion pictures on Sunday was too strong a competition for the church, a group of ministers and Sunday school workers appeared before the legislators at Albany on March 12 in opposition to the proposed law which would extend local option to the cities and towns of the state and allow them, if they so desired, to permit motion pictures to be shown on Sunday after the hour of two p. m.

Because of the well planned sensible campaign fathered by Sydney S. Cohen, president of the New York State Exhibitors, only one man financially interested in motion pictures came before the committee.

This was William A. Brady. When one minister said that they would not be against clean pictures, but that motion pictures were generally rotten, this aroused Mr. Brady, who declared that while the opponents of the bill had laid stress on the commandment to keep holy the Sabbath Day, they had overlooked the Commandment, "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor."

Mr. Brady also quoted President Wilson's eulogy of motion pictures. Prominent labor representatives also urged that the bill be passed and Captain William Harrigan of the United States Army made an eloquent plea for clean Sunday recreation, such as motion pictures, for the returning soldiers.

Copeland Makes Plea

Dr. Royal Copeland, health commissioner of New York City, also made a strong plea for the passage of the bill allowing Sunday motion pictures.

Roscoe Mitchell, attorney for the exhibitors in Buffalo and vicinity, urged that the bill be made into law.

From all reports the legislators were very much impressed by the representative spokesmen of so many diversified interests urging the Sunday opening bill be adopted. Sydney Cohen is given great credit for his foresight in planning a most effective campaign, and by having representative interests, other than the motion picture industry, make the fight for the privilege of Sunday pictures.

Opponents of the measure included the Rev. W. H. Bowlby, General Secretary of the Lord's Day Alliance of the United States: Canon William S. Chase and the Rev. O. R. Miller of the New York Civic League; the Rev. John R. Straton of the Baptist Conference of New York and Mrs. Stephen Y. McNair of the Woman's National Sabbath Alliance.

Association Lends Hand

A comprehensive program has been mapped out by the Legal and Legislative Committee of the National Association in co-operation with the New York State Exhibitors in the campaign to legalize Sunday opening in this State, which it is expected will be productive of big results.

At a meeting of this Committee held recently Max Spiegel of the Strand Theatre Circuit, who is Chairman of the Exhibitors' Publicity Committee, was present when plans were made for adding trailers to all releases in the State during the next few weeks and which are to be supplied by the producers. In addition to this, the news weeklies including Pathe, Universal International, Gaumont and the Pictograph are incorporating some of the suggestions in each of their releases.

A new feature of the Committee's campaign will be the organization of the film salesmen in each of the districts in the state through the meetings which are to be held at central points.

Kane Helps in South

A wire received from Arthur S. Kane, general manager of Select Pictures Corporation, conveys the information that he has interrupted the trip which he is making to cities containing Select Exchanges, and other prominent cities in the South and Middle West, in order to spend a day or two at Austin, Texas, and render assistance to the Texas exhibitors who are fighting to maintain the Sunday opening privilege which they are now enjoying in leading Texas towns, and to kill a bill which is now pending in the Texas State Legislature which would close all Texas theatres on Sunday.

The Sunday closing fight in Texas has latterly centered in and around Fort Worth. This town, up to the last two years, was always a closed town as regards the moving picture theatres.

Editorials Against It

The Buffalo Enquirer is unable to understand why there should be any opposition to Sunday motion pictures and in an editorial published Tuesday, March 11, the day before the hearing in Albany, declared that Buffalo wants to retain "movies" on the Sabbath. The editorial follows:

> Buffalo wants to retain Sunday "movies" and the people urge the assemblymen and senators from the city to vote for the bill providing for local option elections on the question. A hearing will be held on the bill tomorrow and leading motion picture representatives, along with others who favor the measure will go to Albany to present their arguments in its behalf.
> Just why there should be opposition to a measure that is so clean-cut and fair to all the people is not apparent. The voters of the cities and towns may decide for themselves whether or not they wish the motion picture theatres open on Sundays. Now that women vote in New York state every eligible voter is given the opportunity to go to the polls on all important questions. The majority should rule in all cases and men and women of voting age should be competent to pass sanely upon the question of Sunday "movies" without interference from the pestering crape hangers of the reform element. Buffalo will not object if Lockport or East Aurora or Hamburg do not favor Sunday "movies" but Buffalo feels that its citizens are capable of handling their own affairs and particularly this question in which the majority is so vitally interested.

Pictures as Examples

The World Film Corporation is in receipt of a telegram from the management of the Stanley Corporation of Philadelphia in which they ask permission to show to a group of the most prominent and influential men in Pennsylvania "The Better 'Ole," Prizma Natural Color Pictures and Kinograms. To use these features as an illustration of the kind of pictures that are being distributed and which are worthy subjects for entertaining whether it be on Sunday or a week day. With the support of influential men, who are a power in social, church and business affairs of the Keystone state, it is hoped that the legislature of the State of Pennsylvania will listen to reason and give the much desired recreation on Sunday to those who cannot find it on week days because of their inability to spare the time.

Ohio Feels Optimistic

The fight to O. K. Sunday motion picture shows in Cincinnati is bearing fruit. The Sunday Rest and Recreation League, while it is against groceries, meat shops, confectioneries and similar places being open on Sundays, is out with this declaration:

"It is the belief of the League that public sentiment would not favor the prohibiting on Sundays of movie shows, theatrical performances, baseball playing, bowling, nor any other form of clean and wholesome recreation or amusement. And this league will do all in its power to prevent the enforcement of these laws in any manner that will hinder or make difficult or impossible amusement or recreation on Sundays. It will do all it can to secure the repeal of present laws or the enactment of modern and up-to-date laws on these subjects."

This league also will work for the passage of the bill introduced by Representative Banker, which would legalize Sunday shows by giving all cities and towns the right to decide the Sunday question by local option elections.

Goldstein Sentence Commuted

The sentence of Robert Goldstein, convicted in Federal Court of Southern California for promoting motion pictures purporting to show massacres by British soldiers in the American Revolution and alleged to have been financed by pro-German interests, has been commuted to three years, with remission of fines.

Keefe in the East

William E. Keefe, who has been associated with the publicity department of the Griffith studios for several years, has resigned to take up work in the East.

"Political Propaganda"

THE heading used above is also the heading used on a recent editorial in Senator Harding's Marion, Ohio, Star, which is reprinted below in full. It fits our purpose as ideally as it does the Senator's.

We could write a page editorial about the mess of bile reprinted below. We could drive several teams of horses abreast through the holes in its arguments. We could point out how it twists its evidence. But it is all so foolish and so funny that we prefer to let you read it yourself, laugh at it yourself—and boil over if you take any such thing as a Senator seriously.

"The publicity campaign to float the next Liberty, or Victory, loan will offer opportunities for political propaganda seldom approached in the past. The minds of the people will then be thoroughly saturated with the idea of a league of nations; the president will have returned to Paris and will be hard at work trying to get his colleagues on the peace conference into line behind his unconstitutional and highly-impractical dream of universal peace; senators, perhaps even then in extra session, will be giving their closest attention to each new development in the international conspiracy to take away the independence of America; and the necessity for the Democratic party to mold the public mind so that it will absorb without hesitation the new and revolutionary theory of government will be imperative.

"That the Democrats are alive to the situation is plainly indicated. Next to the press, the most potent agency for reaching the public is the moving-picture theatre. We have recently seen formed an all-star combination of movie actors, including in its organization Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks and Charlie Chaplin. We now see Mr. McAdoo engaged as counsel for the concern at a salary of $100,000. Gone to southern California, ostensibly for a much-needed rest, the ex-secretary combines business with pleasure with a vengeance and annexes himself to a salary more than eight times what he received from the government. But it is evident that, although Mr. McAdoo is no longer on the federal payroll, he has by no means lost interest in national politics.

"We gather from the newspapers of the West that Secretary Tumulty and Mr. Frank R. Wilson, pictorial director of Liberty loan publicity, will assume charge of the political department of this new movie association. They are to get in some of their best work through Mr. Fairbanks, who already is contemplating a scenario representing himself as the 'official fool killer.' A Los Angeles paper quotes Mr. Wilson in a telegram to Fairbanks as follows:

"'There are possibilities of a short picture in which you would start out some morning as the official fool killer, and as you hear complaints uttered by various individuals, you turn upon them, giving them a lecture on real Americanism and then wallop them as you did the kaiser.'

"The same paper tells us that this film will be used 'to stem the tide of popular criticism which Tumulty and Wilson admit amounts to a storm of attack against the national administration.' With that explanation we see that 'real Americanism' consists in lauding the administration, and one who hesitates to prostrate himself at the mention of the Democratic regime will be soundly 'walloped' on the screen by the strenuous Fairbanks, precisely as he served the kaiser.

"Mr. McAdoo's part in all this is not hard to imagine. As the confidant of the president he will be able to render many an intimate touch to the pictures that will subtly convey to the movie audience just the impression desired. While his advertised role is that of 'counsel,' we suspect that his chief activity will be that of political censor of films, and from his master guidance the country may expect to see in the early spring some of the most sinister political propaganda of the present administration disseminated, innocently enough, through the thousands of moving-picture theatres of the country."

Cleveland Enjoys Great Activity

Big Attendance at Theatres and Also Burglary Excitement Reported —Increased Interest in Sunday Opening Bill

CLEVELAND'S claim to be one of the foremost film distributing centers in the country is being pressed more every day and one exhibitor said that they have to face the burglars and also the ministers opposing Sunday opening, at the same time.

One of the boldest robberies in this era of crime was pulled off Saturday afternoon, March 1, at 5:30 o'clock, when two men pointed a loaded revolver at Miss Daisy Heyman, cashier of the Strand theatre, Cleveland, and took $99.23 from the cash box. To appreciate the daring of the robbers, it is necessary to know that thousands of people are constantly passing the Strand theatre. Located on Phospect Avenue near East Ninth Street, it is in a direct line of the Winton Hotel and the railroad ticket office, which are just a few doors east of the theatre.

The Strand theatre, which is one of the leading first-run motion picture theatres of the downtown section, belongs to Paul Gusdanovic, owner and manager of a string of local photoplay houses.

Fred Desberg, of Cleveland, secretary and treasurer of the Ohio State Screen League, went down to Columbus to attend a meeting of the Cities Committee, before which the Sunday Movie Opening Bill is scheduled to come up.

Definite action in regard to the local license tax and local censorship was postponed by the City Council to the twelfth of March. This is the recent proposition which provides for an annual license tax of twenty-five dollars for every legitimate and motion picture theatre in the city, to cover the cost of building inspection. The local censorship idea springs from the ministerial association of the city.

All of the theatrical men in any way connected with the business are going to fight this additional and superfluous supervision to the last ditch. Cleveland is one of the few cities which is not taking an active part in abolishing state censorship. Members of the motion picture industry here are agreed that intelligent supervision over films is necessary.

With occasional exceptions here and there, the Ohio Board of Censors have rendered just criticisms and only in a very few instances have their criticism been considered drastic or unjust. For this reason, principally, the trade is opposed to having another censorship board rammed down its neck. Beside which, the proposed local censors have already announced that it is not their intention to interfere with the work of the State Board, but to supplement it.

Ohio Film Classics Company, 318 Sloan Building, is another new independent motion picture exchange which has been opened at Cleveland.

Gude Joins Hands with Poster Company

An association of two selling organizations in the outdoor advertising field was effected this week when the controlling interest in the O. J. Gude Co., N. Y., was purchased by K. H. Fulton, president of the Poster Advertising Co., and his associates in that company.

O. J. Gude will retain a large invested interest and a majority of the bonds of the O. J. Gude Co. and will act as chairman of the Board of Directors.

Mr. Fulton's associates in the purchase of the controlling interest in the O. J. Gude Co. are, Mr. A. M. Briggs, Mr. S. J. Hamilton, Mr. M. F. Reddington and Mr. D. G. Ross; all men of pronounced sales ability—the best in the Poster field.

May Move Departments?

Report is circulated in Los Angeles film circles that departments of the Universal pertaining to distribution will shortly be transferred from New York to the coast. No statement could be secured from officials now in the west, for it is understood the plans have not been fully formulated and that it depends upon the outcome of conferences to be held in Los Angeles within the next few days as to just what action will be taken and what departments of the distributing section of the company will be transferred.

President Carl Laemmle, who has been in the West for ten days, has taken a home in Sycamore Drive, Hollywood.

Ruth Allen, East, to Sign Up Writers

Ruth S. Allen, manager of the manuscript sales department of the Palmer Photoplay Institute, Los Angeles, has come to New York, where she will close negotiations for the exclusive handling of the photoplay output of a number of authors and playwrights. Miss Allen will spend two weeks in New York.

Mrs. Kate Corbaley, well-known Los Angeles photoplay author, has been engaged by the Palmer corporation to look after its sales department during Miss Allen's absence.

Diggs Assigned to Exploitation

Harry P. Diggs, formerly director of publicity, Independent Sales Corporation, and Film Clearing House, has been assigned to the exploitation department where he will assist Lynn S. Card, general manager of Independent Sales, and will give his personal attention to exploitation work in co-operating with the exhibitor in putting on Independent features.

Rothacker in New York

Watterson R. Rothacker, president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company of Chicago, left the Windy City on March 11, bound for New York City and the Hotel Biltmore, where he expected to spend four or five days.

Cosmopolitan Productions Enter the Field

THE Cosmopolitan Productions is the title given the name of a new combination effected last week, in which International Film Service will produce and Famous Players-Lasky will distribute.

It is made known that the title comes from the fact that the productions will be filmed from stories which appear in the Cosmopolitan magazine, and that the entire staff of writers who supply material to the Cosmopolitan will be available. The pictures will be classed as special features.

International announces that Cosmopolitan Productions will in no way conflict with the news reels or other features released through International Film Service.

C. F. Zittell, of International, said:

"Next year and the year thereafter we will be producing twelve special features and probably three spectacles of the most elaborate and imposing character. This year we will produce nine of the former and possibly two of the latter types of great feature conceptions.

"The arrangement whereby the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will release our special features involves a contract covering a period of years. Our first great production will be the presentation of "The Dark Star," by Robert W. Chambers. We have leased the entire Paragon Studios in New Jersey for the taking of this picture. The story will require about seventy-five specially built scenes. A crew of the best talent along this line has been procured to build the sets. Of an elaborate nature, these scenes will be constructed on the three great stages of the studios.

"To give to the public the Cosmopolitan Productions we will begin building our own studios, the largest in the country, while initial leases for our opening masterpieces are being enjoyed. The site for the studios will be announced later. All details have been planned for every angle of the great combination which has brought together the highest class productive ability with the highest class distribution agency which serves the highest class playhouses."

Cowling Returns from Two-Year Trip

Herford Tyne Cowling, chief cinematographer for Burton Holmes, has returned to New York from a two years' trip in which he has been taking motion pictures in the Orient and the islands of the South Sea for the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travelogues. He left New York February 2, 1917, accompanied by Mr. Holmes, and since then has covered over 200,000 miles in his travels.

Mr. Holmes and Mr. Cowling went first to Canada where they filmed the popular Travelogue series, "Winter Sports in Canada." Crossing the continent to Vancouver they went first to Hawaii and thence to Fiji, Samoa, New Zealand, Australia, Tasmania, China and Japan. After a few weeks' sojourn in Japan Mr. Holmes returned to this country, leaving Mr. Cowling to continue the work alone except for the help of native assistants.

Metro Takes Back Nine from Army

Transplanted from the Metro service flag to the new Metro studios in Hollywood, nine service stars now stand for nine positions restored by Metro Pictures Corporation to that number of its employes who responded to Uncle Sam's call to the colors and have again taken up their peace time occupation. Men who wore the khaki of the Army and the blue of the Navy comprise the nine whose positions came back when they came back.

Richardson Improves

The many friends of F. H. Richardson, editor of Projection news of the Moving Picture World, are glad to learn that Mr. Richardson is recovering from the illness which has confined him for some time past to his bed.

Mr. Richardson writes that he is well along the road to recovery.

Hodkinson for Fewer Pictures

Considers It Distinct Mark of Progress and Recalls Prediction of 1910—Believes Solution Has Been Achieved

W. W. HODKINSON, president of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, made the statement this week in an interview with a representative of the Motion Picture News that he regarded it as a distinct mark of progress in the film industry that several producers have recently come out on the platform of fewer and better pictures.

"This is one of the most definite advances that have been made in some time," said Mr. Hodkinson. "It is particularly gratifying to me because it embodies the principle for which I have been fighting for eleven years, the principle which has been reflected, I believe, in the policy of every organization with which I have been connected.

"As early as 1910 I made the statement—it was published in the Film Index for March 26th of that year—that fewer and better pictures and longer runs were an inevitable development of the motion picture industry. This statement at that time was considered ridiculous, so ridiculous that it was scouted and opposed all over the country. Here is part of the statement just as it was printed—and it is interesting to see how the industry has developed mentally since that day:

"'You will see picture theatres, showing pictures only, running all evening performances, programs changed weekly, pictures accompanied by orchestra, lecturers, effects, in every large city; prices up to 50 cents, and attended by people in evening dress—no, not yet for a while—the baby must learn to creep before he walks.'

"This was in 1910. We have come far since then.

"The history of the development of the distribution machinery which first made fewer and better pictures possible in a day when they seemed absolutely impossible," Mr. Hodkinson continued, "is one of the most interesting stories of the industry. A few of us were able to build this machinery against what seemed like absolutely overwhelming opposition.

"The most disheartening thing about it, however, has been the fact that this opposition has in a measure continued right up to the present day—even on the part of those who have now been forced by circumstances to come out on the fewer-and-better-picture platform. There is stme satisfaction at least, however, in the realization that the principles for which one has fought have at last received open recognition. That is something gained anyway."

Mr. Hodkinson went on to say that in his big new lines of product, the announcement of the first of which—the Augustus Thomas—Harry Raver "Four Star" pictures—is made in this issue, his own solution of the fewer-and-better-pictures problem has at last been achieved.

"We have been selecting and aliminating," he said, "accepting only what we considered the best and rejecting all indifferent product, and with our new lines of product we are now able to put into operation the policy of fewer pictures and better pictures for which we have so long been working. And let me say this, if we have to cut ourselves down to only one release a month—or one a year—it will be a picture worth releasing. From now on our pictures will be of the highest quality and of the highest quality only. That is our platform, and we are going to stick to it."

Pat Dowling Changes His Job

Pat Dowling, until recently publicity promotor for Jack Pickford and his pictures, has shifted his labors over to the Christie Film Company in Los Angeles, where he is in charge of the mimeograph for Al and Charlie Christie. He took up his new duties on March 3.

Dollman in East

Henry Dollman, president of the Doll-Van Film Corp., has arrived in New York on an extended business trip in the interest of this concern. Mr. Dollman has not visited the metropolis in some time and undoubtedly his stay will be a very busy one, as it is intimated that he is going to close pending negotiations of considerable magnitude.

"Unpardonable Sin" Captures Detroit

Garson and Neilan Production, Starring Blanche Sweet, Boldly Smashes All Precedents by Making Tremendously Successful United States Premiere in Middle West City

"THE hard, cold figures tell the tale, and the proof of the pudding is in the eating," declared Harry Garson when asked for some of the reasons that would even partially account for the tremendous success reported for "The Unpardonable Sin" at its initial showing in Detroit.

Film men and prominent exhibitors assert that all precedents have been smashed to smithereens when a big production can make its American premiere in any other city outside New York or Los Angeles and score such a ten-strike.

More than $25,000 was taken in at the box office during the first seven days of its run at dollar top admission prices. The Broadway-Strand at Detroit is said to be about three blocks off of the main travel as well, but absolute capacity was reported for every one of the six performances each day.

More than $250,000 worth of territories was sold to State-right buyers during the run, which started March 2. All railroads led to the Michigan metropolis that week, and according to all reports, this travel of the film men soon resembled a veritable stampede.

"We showed the motion picture people that the fallacy of having a New York opening was all bunk," declared W. H. Rudolph, eastern representative for Messrs. Garson and Neilan, producers of this ten-reel production.

The producers were determined that they would not hold any private showings in projection rooms for any of the prospective buyers. They merely planned their opening at a middle west city and used no circus methods to attract the capacity crowds attending every performance.

Receipts in Detail

The actual box office receipts for admissions during the first week to see this production was given as $25,399.90, as follows: Sunday, $4,754.80; Monday, $3,081.20; Tuesday, $3,187.60; Wednesday, $3,192.10; Thursday, $3,192.80; Friday, $3,193.40; Saturday, $4,790.00.

Capacity at forty-two straight performances at a theatre not favorably located and with nothing but the regular lobby display readily obtained by any exhibitor at the exchanges handling this production.

This was in face of a severe blizzard on Wednesday which only varied the receipts seventy cents from the figures of the following day. On Saturday a heavy snow storm did not prevent the receipts from exceeding the Sunday opening figures by $36.00. The producers declare that this is actually making film history. As the matinee prices were slightly lower for five days of the week, it accounts for the variation in the receipts during the week.

Example of advertising used on opening day

In the line of exploitation they declare that no unusual advertising methods were used and that only the regularly prepared posters were used with the distribution just equalling that accorded any production of special calibre.

The posters were not put out until seven days previous to the opening and no sniping was indulged in. The newspapers received no copy for any advertising until a week before the opening and this copy called for full page, half page, and then quarter page display ads.

Two Weeks' Run

A forty-piece orchestra played the special music written for "The Unpardonable Sin." On account of the Broadway-Strand having other attractions booked, what promised to be an indefinite run has been cut to two weeks. The second week is reported to have started off just as auspiciously as the opening week.

Another precedent was broken when John Kunsky, owner of a string of leading down-town Detroit motion picture theatres, booked this same production second run at his beautiful Adams theatre. This is said to be Mr. Kunsky's most prominent theatre and only houses the first runs of the biggest film productions. This is stated to be the first time this theatre ever showed a picture for second run.

The Kunsky run will be indefinite and at dollar top admission prices. More than $200,000.00 worth of territory in addition to the $250,000.00 worth sold, is said to have been bid for but it is stated that Mr Garson will retain a great many of the territories for himself.

Ohio for $30,000

The following outright sales have already been made: Ohio to Frank Hatch for $30,000.00 It is reported that Mr Hatch received an offer of $40,000.00 for his purchase within the hour. Michigan and Indiana went to Garson Photoplays Inc., and New Jersey was acquired by H F. Jans.

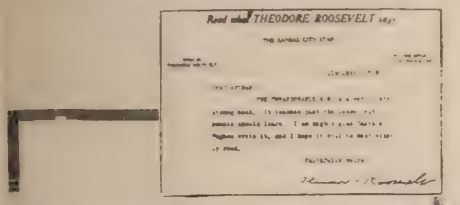
New York state has also been sold already but the buyer's name will not be announced until later. Clark and Rowland have Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, and Sol Lesser has the state of California. Jule and J. Allen have secured "The Unpardonable Sin" for the Dominion of Canada.

It is declared that just great big clean showmanship was used in the premiere and that Major Hughes' widely circulated story, "The Unpardonable Sin" was undoubtedly one of the contributing factors in bringing out the crowds. Also the fact that Marshal Neilan directed it personally. And Blanche Sweet is credited with having a large following also.

Censor Boosts Film

After viewing "The Unpardonable Sin" in his official capacity, Royal A. Baker, Chief Police Censor for the City of Detroit, made the following report:

"Play very timely considering the fact that the Peace controversy is uppermost in everybody's mind. It goes to show that we must not forget that culture and training become a part of the human being and their actions the outcome of their training. The picture proves conclusively that German culture is the fundamental of the gigantic warring machine which has caused so much distress in the educated world, and while we can dismantle the German empire of its instruments of war we still have to deal with a race of people whose mentality and beliefs are murderous.



"The picture shows what Germany has done to the civilized world in 'The Unpardonable Sin.' The plot of the play is strong and a perfect dramatic vehicle. From the very first the suspense rises slowly until the final climax is reached. Episode after episode throughout the play follow quickly with strong conflicts containing lots of animation or strong heart interest delicately contrasted against humor. The grouping is artistic and very real. Photography excellent. The types and costumes are fine in every detail. The art titles are very beautiful, soft and not very overly contrasty. The settings throughout are very real.

"Miss Blanche Sweet, the leading performer, is at her best and in this play her work is undoubtedly finer and more artistic than any other she has ever appeared in. She plays a dual role which is very difficult and plays it in such a manner that it leaves no doubt in the audience's mind that her ability matches with the highest in the art of dramatic action. The play is very believable from the very first and impresses you and holds your interest so intensely that it rushes over eight reels before you hardly realize it. It is very fast and snappy.

"From commencement to finish the picture shows that the master hands of technical experts have done their work so thoroughly it will meet the approval of the most critical. A specially arranged music score though heavy, beautiful and symbolic is just right for the bigness of the play."

This shows the line-up outside the Broadway Strand in Detroit at 10:30 o'clock Sunday morning, waiting for the box office to begin selling seats to "The Unpardonable Sin"

Construction Work Continues

Richmond, Va., to Get New Theatre On Site of Old Colonial—New House Proposed for Buffalo, N. Y.

THEATRE construction, especially the building of motion picture theatres, is continuing at a steady pace, according to reports received during the past week. New houses are proposed for several cities, among them Richmond, Va., Buffalo, N. Y., Atlanta, Ga., and Lansing, Mich.

An arcade motion picture building, extending through an entire block, providing for a theatre with a seating capacity of 1,600, a municipal banquet hall of equal capacity in the basement, a dozen shops, suites of offices and apartments, is the $175,000 improvement for Lansing planned as the immediate outcome of a land option deal closed by W. S. Butterfield of Battle Creek, Mich.

Mr. Butterfield is president and general manager of the Bijou Amusement Co., Inc., operating 22 vaudeville and motion picture theatres in Michigan and Ohio. Work will be started by May 1, according to Mr. Butterfield.

Buffalo—W. Bielanski, local motion picture exhibitor, will begin the Spring building boom with a new $50,000 film theatre at 1600 Fillmore avenue, near Broadway. The building will have a 50-foot frontage and will have a depth of 152 feet. This house will be in the center of one of the most thickly populated sections of the city where "movies" is the chief form of amusement. Plans have been drawn and it is expected that the house will be ready for opening early in the fall.

Plans are also being prepared for a new motion picture theatre in Lancaster, just outside Buffalo. This house will be a brick and concrete building 108 feet long. H. C. Swain, 80 West Genessee street is the architect.

Richmond, Va.—The Colonial Theatre, one of the leading houses of the Wells' combination in this city, will be razed this Spring and on its site will rise a new picture theatre. Work on tearing down the old building will begin early in April, and it is confidently believed that by Thanksgiving the new house will be ready to open. Jake Wells and his associates, Messrs. Wilmer and Vincent, have contemplated for two years the erection of a big, modern theatre on the site, but the war temporarily halted the execution of their plans. With the signing of the armistice and the later request of the government that construction work be begun immediately wherever possible, they decided to proceed with their plans, which, however, have been materially changed from the original ideas, and a much larger building will be erected.

The new structure is to have a seating

Picture Men Embark for Europe

William Fox and Winfield Sheehan Depart in Behalf of Fox Films—Emil Shauer Represents Famous Players-Lasky

WILLIAM FOX, Winfield Sheehan, Abraham Carlos and Emil E. Shauer sailed during the past week for European ports, in the interests of their companies. The film men intimated before sailing that in their opinion the day of the international motion picture is at hand.

Messrs. Fox, Sheehan and Carlos have gone to Europe to establish producing plants in France and England and to plan a widespread extension of Fox distribution facilities on the Continent.

"The day of the international picture is at hand," said Mr. Fox just before sailing. "The conclusion of the work finds the people of Europe and America regarding one another in the light of a new understanding. Americans to-day wish to know more about the Allies, similar conditions, I assume, prevail abroad. The friendship inspired by companionship in arms and sacrifice means not only a vastly increased demand by Americans for pictures in foreign settings, especially French and British —but also a tremendous demand by the French and British for American pictures.

"Part—an important part—of the obligation to be assumed by men who achieve leadership in the motion picture industry within the next decade will be the promotion of good-will between nations—presenting and interpreting the characteristics, customs and aspirations of nations for the enlightenment of the people of other nations."

It is the opinion of Mr. Fox that the printing press and the projection machine will be the greatest instruments of warfare of the future—civilization's 75-centimeter guns; that such understanding of one another as the people of the nations reach will be effected principally with the aid of these two mediums.

Before sailing for Europe, where it is his intention to make a complete study of overseas markets for Paramount and Artcraft pictures, Mr. Emil E. Shauer, assistant treasurer of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, gave out an interview on the subject of exporting Paramount and Artcraft pictures.

"There are two things that please me greatly," said Mr. Shauer. "The first point considered is our record of shipments during the war. Up to December 9th, of last year all export films with the exception of Canadian deliveries were screened for censorship by the Custom House and other Government officials. This alone, as you can well imagine, constituted an enormous task. It was a continuous showing of Paramount and Artcraft pictures and short reel subjects day after day and month after month, and necessitated a system of the most painstaking process and efficiency on the part of our Export Department, and at this point let me state how heartily we appreciate the courtesy and impartial supervision of the Government agents in handling our pictures.

West Coast Exhibitors Rejoicing

Attendance at Los Angeles Theatres Shows Marked Increase—Expect Whole Country to Reflect Prosperity

THAT good times are here, and better times are ahead for the exhibitor, is the belief of practically everyone who has watched the change of conditions in Los Angeles and every other city in the past few weeks. The attendance at Los Angeles houses—and the same holds good with respect to theatres all over Southern and Northern California, as well as the great Northwest—has been greater than ever before, and practically every theatre man is telling of good attendance with marked increase as the weeks go by.

The week ending March 1 was the biggest in the history of the California theatre, which opened on Christmas Eve. The receipts were greatly in excess of the opening week, and the management attributes the exceptional attendance largely to the general prosperity of the West. The bill for the record week consisted of the Paramount picture "A Woman's Weapon," which stars Ethel Clayton, and the Roscoe Arbuckle comedy, "Love."

During the same week double and triple lines 400 to 600 feet in length extended from the Grauman theatre lobby. Grauman's lobby has a standing room capacity of between three and four hundred which was filled in addition to the line. The feature of the past week at Grauman's was the Charles Ray subject, "The Girl Dodger," together with a well balanced program of news weekly, travelogue and the Literary Digest. A particularly pleasing feature of the program was the four number organ recital by C. Sharpe Minor.

Bills of the week ending March 8 at the principal down-town Los Angeles theatres, include three subjects held over for a longer run. "The Heart of Humanity," Allen J. Holubar war epic, starring Dorothy Phillips, is in its third week at the Kinema theatre, and D. W. Griffith's "Romance of Happy Valley" is playing its third consecutive week at Clune's Broadway. Tally's Broadway has Clara Kimball Young's "Cheating Cheaters" for the second consecutive week.

William S. Hart's "Branding Broadway," with a Bill Parsons Capital comedy news weekly, Pathe color travelogue, and the witty sayings of the press from the Screen Telegram, together with two musical specialties, constitutes the bill for the week at the California. The Hart picture is shown first, and preceding this is a setting representing a New York roof garden and in the background are to be seen the principal famous buildings of New York.

Considerable improvement has been made in the presentation at the California theatre since the opening, and features which are of little consequence to the general program, but add so much to the general effect, have been worked out to a nicety by Presentation Manager Harry Leonhardt.

Grauman's theatre has Marguerite Clark in "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," with their usual array of program building features including news weekly and novelties. The musical features include a four-number recital on the Wurlitzer orchestral organ and singing numbers in addition to the musical program by the orchestra of thirty-five pieces.

Sun Light Arc to Invade the Coast

The Sun Light Arc Co., manufacturers of the Sunlight studio lamps, are to invade the coast film colony and Frank Elliott, western representative, has opened offices in the Wright & Callender building. The company has shipped several of their lamps to the coast, and a demonstrator has been sent to Los Angeles to aid Mr. Elliott. Demonstrations are being given at the studios. Mr. Elliott has been identified with the film industry as an actor for the past several years, following a number of years on the speaking stage in the principal theatres of London. He is particularly well known throughout the film colony.

Trace Film Thefts to Pennsylvania

Information which eventually may lead to the recovery of many thousand feet of stolen film is being unearthed in Wilkesbarre, Pa., following the arrest of W. S. Casterlin, of that city, on a charge of larceny and receiving. Casterlin was held in $500 bail for the Grand Jury following a hearing held March 4 before Alderman Frank B. Brown when the latter decided that the prosecution had established a prima facie case concerning the alleged theft of prints of two Paramount films, "Snow White" and "The Love Mask."

Goldwyn Stars Again to the Fore

The Goldwyn stars will "do their best" to help Uncle Sam go over the top in the coming Victory Loan, the campaign for which is to be launched in April.

These films are now being re-titled and re-edited and will be turned over to Uncle Sam for free distribution among the motion picture theatres of the country. The new sub-titles which will take the place of the old ones are, of course, based upon Democracy's victory and the captions will drive home the salient reasons why the Victory Loan must be oversubscribed.

Wants to Come In

Harry Levey, chairman of the Screen Advertisers' Association of the World, has received the application of K. B. A. Bulchand, director of the Educational Kinematograph, Hyderabad, India, for membership in the association. Mr. Bulchand is one of the first Hindoos to apply for membership in the big organization.

Exhibitor Service Bureau

What Are We Doing for Your Theatre?

WHAT is the Exhibitors' Service Bureau doing for your particular theatre? You know that this is a department conducted purely for the benefit of exhibitors. Is it helping you to give better presentations of pictures and to increase your cash receipts?

If it is not doing that either we—or you—are overlooking something. We believe that we have secured the aid of a large group of the most successful exhibitors of the nation on our Advisory Board. These men, who have proven that they are SUCCESSES, are sacrificing their time that they may aid you and others. In addition to this we are presenting week after week accounts of what other showmen are doing.

From cities large and small there are pouring in each week specimens of advertising. Many of these are reproduced in these columns, together with our comment. In scores of other cases we send our replies by mail in order that the advertisers may get the fullest possible criticism. Now, all of you remember that before the department was started it was the general policy of trade publications to pat the exhibitor on the back, say "Good work, old boy," and send him away smiling. We have believed that the only sort of criticism worth while is the HONEST SORT. That's the reason that we have expressed our opinions frankly at all times.

WE believed then that an exhibitor turned to such a department as this for real help. And we were not wrong.

Last week we recited some of the things that this department is doing. Our Service covers every angle of the exhibitors' business—and really COVERS it. There is no request that you can make of this department that will not be fulfilled if it is humanly possible. We try as much as we can to anticipate the general needs of the exhibitors as a whole, but we cannot guess your particular problem unless you first let us know what it is.

And so we ask: WHAT ARE WE DOING FOR YOUR THEATRE?

Have we contributed anything to the betterment of your business during the past two years? If we haven't, is it our fault or yours?

If it is ours, you simply have to tell us how we can do more and it will be done.

But possibly it is yours. Perhaps you haven't taken the trouble to call on us. We know that when this bureau was first started exhibitors had heard a lot about service and had found that most of it was bluff or bunk. We invite you to take the trouble of getting your personal answer by investigating.

WHEN the publisher of the NEWS determined that this paper was to be THE SERVICE PAPER, he set about to get the best men he could obtain for this department. But even the word EXPERT means nothing of itself. Unless the department is able to reflect the best thought of the exhibitors as a whole it fails. And to whether we have been able to get this, we merely point to the membership of the Advisory Board and to the field that is covered week after week in these pages.

You will not find here the usual "write-up" of some exhibitor printed merely to please a subscriber. If the story appears in these pages, it is because that exhibitor has done something that we believe will benefit others. We are trying to collect all the progressive ideas and to present them so that they will be of use to you. There is one acid test that every line appearing in these columns must pass: IS IT VALUABLE TO THE EXHIBITOR?

As a digression. The producers and distributors know that this is the department the exhibitors own. Day after day, when some producer wants to know what an exhibitor here or there is doing, he calls on us for the information. For they know that WE KNOW, because we are in touch with those exhibitors, and because we are not printing mere bunk in these columns, because they know that these pages reflect the views of worth-while exhibitors.

WE feel convinced that every line of real exhibitor matter that appears in these columns helps every exhibitor in the country. We believe that the exhibitors who read and study these pages week after week are going to find real helps here that will improve their business.

In the first place, are you really reading these pages?

Then, are you giving us your own ideas? It has been proven time after time that ideas of the exhibitors expressed here have gotten more and quicker action from the producers, distributors and exchanges than a hundred letters that never see the light of day.

And when we are able to print here your ideas and to record the things you are doing, you may be sure that you are attracting the attention of the people with whom you do business and that they are going to be a great deal more anxious to serve you.

SO much for that. But now—WHAT ARE WE DOING FOR YOUR THEATRE? Tell us what we are not doing and we will get out and hustle all the harder that we may accomplish it.

These pages are open to each individual of you. This service is meant for each one of you.

And, in addition, there is the direct by mail service to you, confidential and personal.

If we are not doing our part by YOU, won't you please MAKE US—and a mere request is all that is needed.

Three pages of the weekly house organ of the Ruby theatre, Three Forks, Montana

Only 674 People in This Town, Says Census, But Theatre Is Able to Show Pictures Two Days

WHEN the Government went out to count the people of the country the last time it found only 674 people in Three Forks, Montana. But when the census takers go around the next time they will at least find one of the liveliest theatres in the country in the Ruby, which is under the management of E. C. Waddell.

This theatre is housed in a handsome brick building in which there are a couple of stores and a floor of offices. But it is not the physical side of the theatre that causes it to attract the attention of the Exhibitors Service Bureau, but the things that are being done by the management to get the business.

Now no theatre which depends on the possible patronage of only 672 people would not be expected to last very long, running seven days a week with only five changes of program. For Sunday and Monday and Friday and Saturday are devoted to the bigger productions and are held for two days. The answer, of course, is that the theatre is bringing its crowds in from the country around.

We call your attention to the fact that recently we have been printing a number of accounts of the way that houses in smaller towns are prospering through going out in the countryside and letting every person in hailing distance of the theatre know what is happening there. Every day sees an increase in the number of automobiles, and now that the war is over and any ban on their production has been limited there will be a far greater increase.

Interest in motion pictures has spread from the cities to the towns and then into the country. The man who lives on the farm is just as anxious to see Charlie Chaplin and Douglas Fairbanks as the resident of the metropolis, and he is going to see them provided the nearest theatre does its part in letting him know when the particular pictures are to be seen. House organs were therefore never so important to theatres that have a chance to draw patronage from the surrounding territory.

One would ordinarily not expect to find a weekly organ published by a theatre in a city the size of Three Forks. As a matter of fact the program is not actually printed there, but obtained from a city a considerable distance away. However, it is made up especially with regard to the Ruby. In the upper left-hand corner there is carried the program for the week and the remainder of the space is occupied with stories about the different offerings for the week, together with shorter items about the other attractions. All of the cut matter is obtained from the exchanges.

Now right here is one point where the producers can profit by seeing to it that the exchanges keep on hand a sufficient supply of cuts and that they provide them to theatre owners so that they can print their own house organs. Naturally it is much bettter if the theatre can do this itself, for then it is able to include some of the local news and gossip and make it much more readable. The handicap they have been under in regard to cuts has resulted in many managers giving up their efforts along these lines. And of course they cannot afford to make their own cuts each week.

In addition to boosting his motion picture attractions Mr. Waddell is looking after the cash receipts in other ways. He makes it a habit of giving dances at the Old Ruby theatre and he has some novel stunts that he uses. For instance, on Valentine's Day he bought up several hundred of the ordinary comics that sell for a cent apiece retail and on the back of these printed the announcement of the Valentine dance. On another occasion he got hold of a lot of sheet music in the form that it supplied to professionals and on the back of each sheet he announced a dance at the Old Ruby, adding: "Owing to the high cost of paper it is necessary to use this music for bills. Kindly bring your favorite tune along so that we may play it for you."

It is very easy to see that Mr. Waddell knows pretty well what his people want and that he tries to supply that amusement. But he does not carry the mere label appeal in his exploitation. He takes advantage of any occasion to increase the interest and stays awake to his opportunities. In short, he thinks.

That's the reason the Ruby theatre is doing a big business in a town with a census population of 674.

ENCOURAGE THEM

Smaller Newspapers Want to Do More for Motion Pictures

WITHIN the last week we have received voluntarily from seven newspapers in smaller cities copies of the papers showing what they are doing in the way of co-operation with the motion picture theatres. In at least one case it appears that the exhibitors are sadly lacking in doing their part.

But the showing is most encouraging. The movement is undoubtedly spreading and we believe that it is going to spread more rapidly during the next few months. Passing of the influenza, the reaction from the war and lots of other elements are entering into the creation of new interest. The newspapers are feeling more than ever the value of interesting motion picture matter.

Now is the time for exhibitors to act. Get in close touch with the editor of your dailies. When he shows a disposition to do things, show him your appreciation. It takes time to secure maximum results, but the leaven is working.

What About the Theatre of the Future?

THE motion picture theatre of the future! What will it be like? Has it reached the ultimate goal in presentation methods? How will it compare with the legitimate theatre (so-called) of the future, and the musical accomplishments of the Metropolitan Opera House? With these things in mind, MOTION PICTURE NEWS has asked Harold B. Franklin, managing director of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, to discuss motion picture presentation in the theatre of tomorrow.

Manager Franklin fired the opening gun as follows:

"Although great strides have been made in presentation, a year hence will see innovations and novelties that will make our present performances appear antiquated."

"In what direction particularly will this improvement take place?" the interviewer asked. "Enterprise and imagination amongst exhibitors have developed the art of picture presentation almost to its highest degree. Programs are arranged with the utmost of care, supplemented by scenic embellishments, ballets, tableaus, soloists and large orchestras. What is left?"

"Probably the most important factor in the future shadow stage entertainment will be the musical setting," said Mr. Franklin, "and it is here that we can look for the greatest development."

"In this theatre of tomorrow we will have an orchestra of ninety to one hundred men. These can be divided into two units, one to relieve the other at rest periods. These orchestras will equal the Boston Symphony in quality and will be directed by notable conductors. For novelty the stage can be arranged in two movable platforms, each large enough to hold a unit, the relief unit coming into position through the aid of hydraulic lifts, as the other disappears from view. No doubt that such an arrangement would be an innovation for the blase movie fan."

"Would this not be a prohibitive idea?"

"Not for the theatre that has sufficient seating capacity," replied Mr. Franklin. "While some may charge such an idea up to extravagance, no one can challenge the fact that the organ does not always give satisfactory music to certain portions of the program and theatre with large capacity, say five thousand, could easily support an orchestra of this size."

"With an orchestra such as this," continued Mr. Franklin, "three or possibly four conductors could be available in addition to the usual number of concert masters. These conductors could be men who each are adapted to a definite class of music. Features could be prepared weeks ahead of time, under the supervision of one of these conductors who would by careful study and constant screenings give a musical setting that would be ideal. A feature could be thoroughly analyzed by an authority who would not be rushed to death digging up a makeshift accompaniment as is often necessary under the present method. In fact, today much of the time of most directors is spent in screening rooms when it should be spent in the orchestra pit." The same conductor who prepares the musical setting would also conduct actual presentation, while his co-conductors are working on other features to be shown.

"In the theatre of the future we will have soloists such as Galli-Curzi, McCormick, Elman, Kreisler, Schumann-Heink, Heifitz, who will attract to the motion picture theatre an even greater army of theatre-goers than at present."

"Will this be possible at popular prices?" asked the interviewer.

"Again I say that a large capacity will make it possible, and the prices need not be much more than are charged now," replied Mr. Franklin.

"Special concerts can be given, as a preliminary attraction, with conductors such as Victor Herbert, John Phillip Sousa, Walter Damrosch, Arthur Pryor, and others of international reputation."

"In the theatre of tomorrow the atmosphere of the feature will be carried out with greater thoroughness than is at present possible. Features will have settings as elaborate as the biggest theatrical productions."

"The romance of 'exploitation' is just

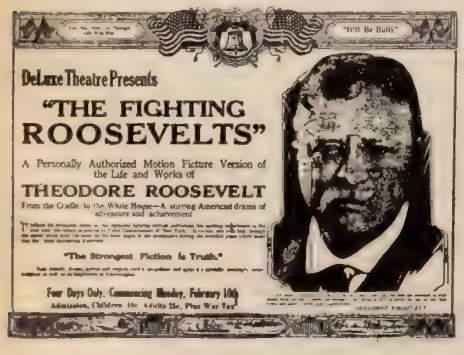
Your Idea and Ours



JACKSONVILLE, Fla., has been such a notoriously poor advertiser that we are mighty anxious to encourage the Imperial which is showing the proper policy in advertising its current attractions instead of pursuing the plan of nearly all the other houses and naming the bills for the entire week, making each appeal equal. Engraving facilities are not good in the Florida city and the theatres rely on the cuts that are available. In this case the Imperial has used bodily an advertisement prepared by Famous-Players-Lasky, and a very good one it is, too. But there are same things that should not have been done. For instance the heavy rule corners mean nothing and this crude blackness discounts the drawing. We also would have omitted the name of the theatre at either side of the cut and either top or bottom. Surely no one is more in earnest than we in keeping the house dominant, but anything can be overdone. It would have been much better had the Imperial used a distinctive name plate.

Success generally comes where the smile indicates it can be understood.

DE LUXE THEATRE, Hutchinson, Kan., deserves a lot of credit for its willingness to use a lot of space, for here it has employed a half page the Saturday before the opening of "The Fighting Roosevelts." But here is a case where the ultra-dignity in dealing with the picture must have hurt the box office returns.

We appreciate the way that the designer of this display felt about the matter. Knowing that Col. Roosevelt has died but a short time ago he believed that the advertisement should be of the formal sort. But we do not believe that the Colonel himself would have felt that way about it. He always put the real punch in everything that he did and we believe that he would have expected the theatre to do the same thing with the story of his life.

Neither an exploited theatre nor an unbaited hook are apt to keep the owner very busy.

EVEN if this display of fifteen inches across five columns hadn't gotten the position that it occupied at the top of the page it must have attracted attention. We believe that a much bigger wallop is given by the simple line "Stars of the Common Cause" and then the pictures of the players with their names below than would have been the case if the exhibitor had used a lot of adjectives saying that this was "the greatest cast every assembled in a motion picture" and all that sort of stuff.

But there are some things that we do not like here. For instance the lines at the top: "Read this—every word" and those that follow are distinctly old stuff and tend to cheapen the sales argument. The line below "100% is the trade mark on this picture" is a good one and would have been more convincing had some of the superlative been omitted.

Hardest work is convincing you to advertise; after you have done it for awhile you need no argument.

WE consider this just about one hundred per cent advertising. In the first place it is our contention that the cut is used to attract the attention, but that no cut should be used unless it conveys some meaning in connection with the picture. Certainly this one is intimately connected with the title because of the romance that it suggests.

Strand theatre, Portland, Ore., has used seventeen inches across four columns and therefore it has been able to get a powerful effect with the employment of a large cut. Now you will note that the selling lines have been reduced to give the space to the illustration. One of them says: "There's some comedy in it, too—the fair maid says: 'My ideal is a man with a strong will who will do just what I tell him to do.'" The other points out that this is an out of the ordinary picture, a red blooded play. Now the cut attracted the attention and we'll bet that more people stopped to read the smaller lines than they would have if the designer had made them larger at the expense of the size of the cut.

You should make your own theatre the chief reason WHY the public wants to see every picture you show.

CONSIDERING the circumstances here is as fine a piece of comparatively small space advertising as we have yet seen. The Royal theatre, St. Louis, has already shown "The Heart of Humanity" for three weeks and therefore the selling talks were not necessary as in the case of a production that has to be explained to the public. There were just two selling lines used, "The most appealing love story of the war ever told," and "A play you'll never forget." Then there was the cut design at the bottom of the display.

Now, during the ordinary week's run of a big picture we believe that there ought to be distinct advertising done each day in order to get the greatest possible patronage, but after you have established the picture thoroughly your strongest argument rests on the run of the picture. Here is a design strong enough to attract attention. It is more convincing than a lot of selling talk here for the one impression left on the reader that here is a production that he cannot afford to miss. Yes, St. Louis is distinctly improving advertisingly.

What Live Wires are Doing

He who keeps smiling doesn't have to worry about the last laugh.

HERE is a case of using press book material, ready-prepared advertising without any special object in view. For instance the cut in the upper left hand corner and the matter starting "Sh—h! Listen!" have been taken from the advertising prepared by Famous-Players-Lasky, but all of the rest of the typing and the sequence of the reading matter is so "out of sorts" that one gets nothing but a confused impression from the whole thing.

After the display has gone ahead to say that this is a sequel to "The Lone Wolf" and then breaks into the black line "Trail of Thrills" there is a jarring effect with the switch of the eye of the "Listen" line.

And aside from saying that this has been made from the Saturday Evening Post story there is no selling argument here. We don't know any recent picture with which there are more punches to be used, but the Strand theatre, Duluth, Minn., has failed to get them in this six-inch, triple-column display.

Beware the Ides of March—if you have failed to advertise.

AS a puzzle contest this would be excellent. The Colonial theatre, Albany, should have run a line saying: "This picture is of one of the stars who will appear at the Colonial this week. To the first ten people who name him we will give free tickets, etc."

Yes, it is just that confusing. Of course we happen to know whom the cut represents and the wisest of the photoplay fans will know, yet with the exception of one day every star on the Colonial's bill is a man and there is nothing to show whether the picture is Bert Lytell—or Charlie Chaplin. We have repeated so many times that meaningless cuts mean nothing and we have just as often told you that you cannot hope to advertise the bill for the entire week, parcelling off the space to each day equally and then expecting to get anything special over with a particular show. Here the theatre has used seven inches across three columns. It does give the bill for the whole week, but then it is done. It has the effect of saying to the reader: "Here they are. Come and take your pick." We feel sure that the Colonial would have done far better by putting the big emphasis on the Monday show, making the Tuesday secondary and then barely mentioning the bill for the remainder of the week. If the Colonial expects its patrons to clip and save the display, all right, but in this case we would much rather mail a program that tells more.

Exaggeration is an intoxicant, with all the "morning after"; emphatic truth the tonic that builds up.

HERE is a splendid advertisement that could have been a great deal improved by having used another inch of type across the four columns. As it stands it is twelve inches deep, but the "unlucky thirteen" would have helped things out greatly.

The proper thing was done in designing this display to make the picture and the name of Tom Mix stand out above everything else. And right here there is just one comment that we want to make: Any time you have a chance to use a SMILING face you are benefitting your exploitation. People are coming to your theatre for amusement and though your offering is not always comedy the public wants to get the first flash that the picture is something to interest them, and the smile is the best guarantee. Certainly no one could pass by this picture of Mix and then fail to know what the Colonial theatre, Toledo, O., is offering that week.

But back to the increase in space. The matter in the box under the hat is in entirely too small type. We would have rather omitted half of the matter than to have reduced the size of the type. The same is true of the matter at the bottom which cites "Some of the Things That Tom Does." They should have stood out more. We hate to criticize one of the most liberal theatres in the country for not using enough space, but here is a case of where "just a little bit more" would have been mighty well worth while.

Spike your theatre with advertising and you'll find it mighty hard to slip back.

HILL THEATRE, Newark, N. J., believes in getting all the interest possible from the children in the community and has adopted a novel plan for that purpose. On each Monday and Tuesday afternoon there are distributed real photographs of some motion picture star, the size reduced to 1¾ inches and the patrons are asked to present them to some child under fifteen. On the following Saturday the child that writes the best reason why he likes the particular star and names a picture in which the star has appeared, gets a $2.50 gold piece. Tom Mix was the star for last week. This plan is all right to work, but you cannot send advertisements of it through the mail if you make any conditions whatever.

How New York Stages the Show

COMEDY predominates in all of the Broadway houses this week, for even where the feature cannot be called comedy, there is plenty of it in the remainder of the bills.

Dr. Riesenfeld has a real comedy bill at the Rialto, and he has advertised it as such with the result that he is getting big crowds. The feature is "Boots," with Dorothy Gish, and then there is the second one of the New Mr. and Mrs. Drew comedies, a Harold Lloyd comedy, and a Mutt and Jeff cartoon. Even the musical numbers, including the overture are in the same spirit.

At the Strand Anita Stewart is seen in "A Midnight Romance," the second of her new pictures, while the fun is supplied by the latest Mack Sennett comedy, "The Village Smithy." There is also a Bobby Bumps cartoon to increase the number of the laughs. Striking effects are secured with "1812" and the special settings and electrical effects.

There is a comedy element running through the feature at the Rivoli, Norma Talmadge in "The Probation Wife," and "The Village Smithy" is also being shown at that house. The bill is distinctly artistic including a splendidly staged arrangement of "Angel's Serenade."

At the Broadway there is another Chaplin stunt. It was at this theatre that the Mr. and Mrs. Chaplin idea was originated and they are again appearing on the same bill, the comedian in "A Dog's Life" and "Mildred Harris" in "When a Girl Loves."

Rialto Theatre

FOR the Rialto this week Dr. Riesenfeld advertised an "all comedy bill" and he is certainly making good with his promise. It is a veritable riot of laughter, with Dorothy Gish in "Boots" as the feature, a Mr. and Mrs. Drew comedy, a Rolin comedy, a cartoon and every musical number of the humorous variety.

We do not believe that there is the slightest doubt that people want as much comedy as they can get these days—if it is good comedy. But don't let yourself be led into believing that a picture is a comedy simply because it is so advertised. Unless there are real laughs in the pictures they are worse than bores. If you promise the people laughs in advance they are going to look for them and you have to deliver the goods. But there can be no question about them at the Rialto this week.

"Hungarian Comedy," by Keler Bela, is the overture and this is played with the lights all gold. As the title suggests, the music is extremely lively and the audience is half humming most of the time. It is hard to expect music itself to get laughs, but this selection certainly puts everyone in a mighty good humor for what is to follow.

Even the Rialto Magazine opens with a comedy, this being "William Hohenzollern, Sausage Maker," a Mutt and Jeff. For this the animated title showing a cat and dog fighting and spelling out the title "Rialto Comic Supplement" is used. There are lots of laughs in the animated cartoon and for this there is played "Walking the Dog," following through with "Spooky Spooks." Then we have Kinogram pictures of Tracy Mathewson, camera man, finding a new industry in the jungles of Louisiana and here "Scenes Poetique" is employed. Then come interesting pictures of crowds climbing the mountains to Truckee, Cal., for a snow battle. This is especially interesting to audiences because it is to Truckee that most of the motion picture companies working on the coast go when they want real snow scenes. "Petersburg Sleigh Bells" is the accompanying music. Then under the title "Why go to Palm Beach," Gaumont takes us to Milwaukee and there we have winter bathing in the snow while the orchestra plays "Babes in the Woods."

Now you will note that probably the first time since the war started there is not a bit of even near-war stuff in the magazine this week. Joseph LaRose, production manager, has the shortest magazine in weeks this time, but he purposely left out anything of the military in order that there might not be a note to jar the plan of Dr. Riesenfeld for an all-comedy bill.

Then Sascha Fidelman, concert master of the Rialto, plays Dvorak's "Humoresque" as a violin solo, accompanied by the organ and harp. He stands at the edge of the steps to the left of the stage with a single spot on him during his splendid rendition of the number.

Now comes the first of the comedies with Mr. and Mrs. Sydney Drew in "Once a Mason." This is built around a woman's curiosity. After Henry has joined the order Polly simply must know the secrets that have been told him and gives him no peace until he has "revealed all." And some secrets they are and they cause all sorts of complications. There is a special musical arrangement for this, opening with "Liebesfreud" and then with the title "a few weeks later" turning into Greunfeld's "Serenade." With the title "long after midnight" there is another change to "Leontine" and then as we see Polly going up the steps crying "Song d'Ete" is used.

At that point Henry pretends to give in and as he starts to tell the secret stuff the music is "Dance of the Chinese Dolls" until the fade-in of the temple scene, when there are three gong beats, cymbal tremulo and the organ rumble. With the title "Do you mean to tell me?" the music is "African," played with a piccolo solo as Henry makes the royal sign, and then with the full orchestra. With the scene at a card party the music changes to "Balkan Queen," followed by a numbered selection and then with the title, "Say, what is this rot?" "Dance of the Debutante" is again played, then with "It was Teasdale" we have "Last Waltz," and again with the title "Just thine, Henry," we come back to "African" for the remainder of the picture.

Now comes James Harrod, tenor, singing "The Snowy Breasted Pearl," which is also the theme of the feature which follows, Dorothy Gish in "Boots." "Merry England" is used for the opening scenes of the feature and then the theme comes in when we get the first glimpse of Boots. With the introduction of Boots' aunt we have "That's an Irish Bull" used. With the title "On the same dreary night" we have some bars from "Pomp and Circumstance" used. In fact extracts from this impressive selection are introduced several times during the feature. This music is especially suited to mysterious action where great things are apparently afoot. This is followed by a numbered selection and then another extract from "Pomp and Circumstance" with the title "Baffled." Then with the next introduction of Boots we get "After Sunset" with the chorus of "Molly Dear" played with the scene with the young detective's boots.

Again we get some extracts from "Pomp and Circumstance" with the title revealing Mme. de Valdee's real reason for coming to the inn and then with the change in scene "Molly Dear" is again used. As the young detective opens his door "After Sunset" is played once more and then as her aunt calls the girl "Miniature Suite" is played, followed by the theme with the title "While Boots is trying." The next change is up on the roof with the war garden and where Boots says "Them beans are growing, etc., "Liebe leid" is used with theme coming back as Boots says, "Oh, sir, I ain't a bad girl." Here the organ takes up the music for a time until the scene where the girl and the young detective sit down on a bench in the park and once more we have the theme, this time as a 'cello solo. With the title "Allowing time to get away" there are further extracts from "Pomp and Circumstance" and then a numbered selection as Boots and the woman fight in the cellar. With the title "A final incident" we get the chorus of "Molly Dear," following through with the theme to the end.

With the lights all in red the orchestra then plays "Smiles," the greater part of this being devoted to a marimbaphone duet. The lights go down when these instruments take up the music and the spots are trained on them. The number gets such a big hand that when we saw the performance something happened that is seldom permitted at the Rialto or Rivoli—an encore was played.

Harold Lloyd is then seen in a very funny comedy, "Look Out Below," a story of a love sick youth and a pretty maiden and their adventure, which includes riding around on pieces of steel to the top of a skyscraper. The musical numbers played for this are "Fi-Fi," "Rip Van Winkle Slept With One Eye Open," "Yvette," "Pepper Pot," "Uncle Tom," and "Oh, Johnny."

Theodore Salome's "Offertoire in D Flat" is the final organ number.

Strand Theatre

ANOTHER unusual effect is being put over at the Strand this week with the overture, Tschaikowsky's "1812." You who have been following these accounts are familiar with this number which has been played quite a number of times at the big Broadway motion picture houses, but this time it has been put on so differently as to make it a complete novelty.

This great number was written to celebrate the dedication of the Temple of Christ in Moscow, the original of which has been destroyed by the fire that Napoleon kindled. It describes the Battle of Borodini and the retreat of the French. The two national hymns, "God Preserve Thy People" and "The Marseillaise" confront each other during the thunder of the artillery, first one then the other, until the turn of the tide of battle is indicated and the Russian song becomes dominant and so continues to the crashing close.

For this number the lighting of the stage is first in red-gold and then the lights go down into red for the night and then into purple and at that moment the stage curtains part and there is dimly outlined the battlefield. We get a startling effect with the bursting of a rocket and then the flare of red light begins, repeated in a few seconds and then near the end. But the big punch comes right at the end when the red of battle fades from the sky and there stands out a huge figure of the dove of peace. The number gets a most unusual reception.

"Teddy Birds," an Outing-Chester, follows. This is really a record of what conservation of bird life has done and we have a couple of views of Colonel Roosevelt in Louisiana among the wild fowl. There are intimate pictures of tern, huge flocks of pelicans and other unusual birds. For this "Naids' Idyl" is first played through by the orchestra and then the organ takes up the music to the end.

Then comes the Strand Topical Review, opening with Pathe pictures of the American fleet at practice at Guantanamo—different from those shown a couple of weeks ago. We have an interesting picture of the way that the destroyers create a screen of smoke. There is a title "The life preserver of our seas" and there is a picture of a life preserver and through this we see a column of battleships. "Anchor and Star" march is used here. Then comes Pathe pictures of the dedication of the new military academy in Gautemala and the "army" of our little sister republic looks rather pitiful after we have been accustomed to huge war scenes for so long. "March Byzantine" is the accompaniment. From the same source and to the music of "Dog Train" there are pictures of the winter sports at Truckee, Cal.

Liberty theatre, Seattle, Wash., made a strong appeal to women with "Virtuous Wives" through the cooperation of the leading millinery store. The display was confined to a number of striking views of Miss Stewart in various hats and gowns

Topics of the Day come in here with a lot of laughs. There is a good one with: "If Germany had won the war the Berlin peace conference would have lasted about twenty minutes" while "We suggest a monument to the lassies who put the doughnuts in the doughboys" gets hearty applause. "Petit Bijourette" is played during these.

We jump back to news events with Pathe pictures of the squad of jail suffragettes shown to the music of "Katie," at least what of it can be heard for these pictures arouse a storm of hisses and a few cheers try to break out, but the hisses appear to be considerably in the majority. Then Pathe shows Pathe pictures of the departure of the President on his second trip to Europe and we have "Greetings to Bangor" used. The Topical closes with a good laugh with a Bobby Bumps cartoon, in which the dog gets the "flee-enza." "Marionettes" is played twice through and then at the point where the bugs start their parade "Where Do We Go From Here" is used mighty effectively.

Then comes the Strand operatic quartette with the night scene from "Martha." The setting is one of a walled villam and the lights are down to give the night effect.

Anita Stewart in "A Midnight Romance" is the feature. "La Fer aux Perles" is used with the screening and then when the two crooks are introduced "Dolce far Niente" is played and then with the steamer torpedoed and the passengers landing we have storm effects and then "Butterfly" with "Reconciliation" following through. At the scene where the woman in black is seen at the hotel desk we have "Novellette" and then "Beautiful, Ohio" as the dance starts. After the second scene of the dancing the music becomes "Flatterer" continuing until the two girls leave the room to watch the dancers when the orchestra turns into "Gloriana." Where the dancers are seen applauding the organ takes up the music for sixteen minutes.

Then with the arrival of the three distinguished foreigners we have "Iris" which is played until after the title "Nine o'Clock" and then when the orchestra on the screen is seen to start playing the Strand orchestra takes up "Eternelle Extase" and continues as long as the picture orchestra plays, turning then into "Sizilietta" and where the trombones start to play to "True Love Never Runs Smooth." With the scenes where the man observes that it has been a long swim Friml's "Adieu" is introduced, shifting to "La

Music Hints For Entire Programs

Colombe" as the Sloans are seen in the balcony and then back to "Adieu" with the lovers again and to the organ with the fade-out of Roger Sloan. Again the organ takes up the music and continues it for six minutes until Marie is seen running down the hall and here we have "Brooklet" and then when Sloan recognizes the girl we have "Adieu" by Karganoff. When the scene changes to another room we get "Gardenia" and then at the reception we have "Bluette" which continues until we see the lovers together on the balcony when Friml's "Adieu" is used to the end.

Redferne Hollinshead then sings a double number, "Pal of Mine" and "My Lovely Nancy," the latter being the Robert Burns poem which has been set to music by Max Herzberg, the pianist of the Strand orchestra. It was Managing Director Plunkett who discovered Mr. Hollinshead so far as New York is concerned and the singer, who is a Canadian, is delighting the audiences at the Strand.

Then follows another one of the side-splitting Mack Sennett comedies, "The Village Smithy." There are all sorts of clever situations with Louise Fazenda at her very best. "Anvil Chorus" is played twice and then there follows through "Mary" until the title "Any old port in a storm" when the orchestra swings into "How Ya Gonna Keep 'Em Down on the Farm?" This continues to the title "A travelling man" and then we have the organ for six minutes, the orchestra coming back with the scene of the big man entering and then we have "Russian Rag" to the end.

Rivoli Theatre

ARTISTRY marks the presentation of the bill at the Rivoli this week and the music especially is in keeping with the "class" in the feature picture, largely a story of society life in a large city.

With the lights all in gold the overture is "Poet and Peasant." At times the music is carried on 'cello and harp, then on the flutes and piccolos, and then back to the 'cello with the first violins picking up the strains and then reverting once more to harp and 'cello. Then come in the viols with the full orchestra taking it up and swinging it into the dance. This selection has been published in fifty-nine different combinations of instruments, so you can see the wonderful effects that a brilliant orchestra like that of the Rivoli can get out of it.

"Florida Sports" is the title of the Prizma scenic which opens with shark fishing and affording some beautiful color views of the blue ocean. "Missouri Waltz" is played up to the scenes of the aligator hunt and then "Moraima" is used to the end. There is a mysterious spirit to this latter selection and it fits finely with the scenes in the swamp and the picture of the alligator and the man battling in the water.

Then with the lights in the center dome blue and the inner dome in red, the proscenium arch being dark, the curtains part, revealing the draped effect with L. Van Dyke, 'cellist, seated in the center of the stage. With the organ as the only accompaniment he plays Zande's "Elegie."

Rivoli Pictorial opens with the Pathe pictures at Guantanimo, already described, and shown to the accompaniment of "Cradle of Liberty." Then come mighty interesting Gaumont pictures of some of the scenes of harvesting the $78,000,000 orange crops at Riverside, Cal., and then of the exposition at San Bernardino, while the orchestra plays "Chiffonette." With the Pathe pictures of the Guatemala dedication we have a numbered selection and then Gaumont takes us to France and shows us the start of French reconstruction with the orchestra turning into "Ma'mselle Natouche." We see huge tractors ploughing the fields that until so recently have seen the struggle of great armies. There fits in here mighty well a Universal Current Events picture of the battle scarred tanks being used in the pursuits of peace. They are now converted into towing logs and other such work. The music for this is "La Source." From Current Events also come pictures of Uncle Sam operating the greatest tailor shop in repairing clothing for the army and with this "Canzonetta" is used. The final number, bringing in the thrill, comes with the sky fighters performing for the benefit of San Francisco. "Swedish Processional March" is used with the full crashing effect of both orchestra and organ.

After a few strains on harp and violins the curtains now part, revealing a room in a home. In the center there is a long window with the blue light seen through and toward either side the draperies. The younger of the two women is reclining on a couch and the older one sits with her face buried in her hands at a table at the left of the stage. There are chintz curtains on the windows and a grandfather clock and old fashioned furniture, all in the old time velvet effects, supply the rest of the setting. "Angel's Serenade" is then rendered by Anne Rosner and Julia Henry.

There is a particular pleasing musical score played for the feature which follows, Norman Talmadge in "The Probation Wife." "Sparklets" is played at the screening and then when Mrs. Beardsley, the woman who is having trouble with her husband and to whom Josephine tells her story, enters "Sorrows," the theme, is introduced. This changes to "Visions of Salome" with the scenes in the dance hall as the wife starts to tell her story and then with the title "There was a little orphan" "Love's Garden" is used without the introduction, changing to "Inspiration," also "Marche Solonnelle" is the organ solo.

For the showing of "Virtuous Wives," George J. Schade, Schade theatre, Sandusky, O., used cut-outs for the display over the marquee and then sent a "Diogenes," with a lantern, out searching for virtuous wives, and created a sensation without the introduction for "Peter Mari." Then we have a scene where Wade plays the violin and here "Elegie" is used as a violin solo. When he stops playing the orchestra takes up "Tanagra," specially arranged, following with a numbered selection as Josephine goes to the door and then with the title "She has left" "Elegie" (Barmotime).

With the title "Another life opened" where she goes to the reformatory "Louise" is played, then a numbered selection for the matron and "Longing" as Miss Watkins leaves the room. At the point where the girl spies the hat and gloves there is another one of the numbered pieces and then with "That afternoon" we get "In the Shade." When she recognizes Wade on the train "Love's Garden of Roses" is played once through and then the organ takes up the music, continuing through the romance, the marriage, the affairs of Wade with the other woman and the laying of the plans to bring the husband to his senses.

It is with the scene at the Claridge where Josephine and McMerton are dining together and Wade and the other woman are at another table "Night of Gladness" is used first here turning into "Southern Girl" as they dance the fox trot and then "Dodola" as McMerton goes back to Josephine. The organ carries the music as the husband returns to his home and then with the title "The next day at three" the orchestra comes back with the theme, making a brief pause as the husband enters the room and sees McMerton and his wife, then the orchestra taking up "Romance," without the intro. With the title "And that night" "Loin du Bal" is used without the intro. changing to "Pagliacci" as the couple pose to be surprised, changing to the theme with the title "Hal, dear," then to "Butterfly" as McMerton looks at the dog, to "Symphonette" with the change of scene and finally to "Butterfly" as the woman is seen at the mirror powdering her nose.

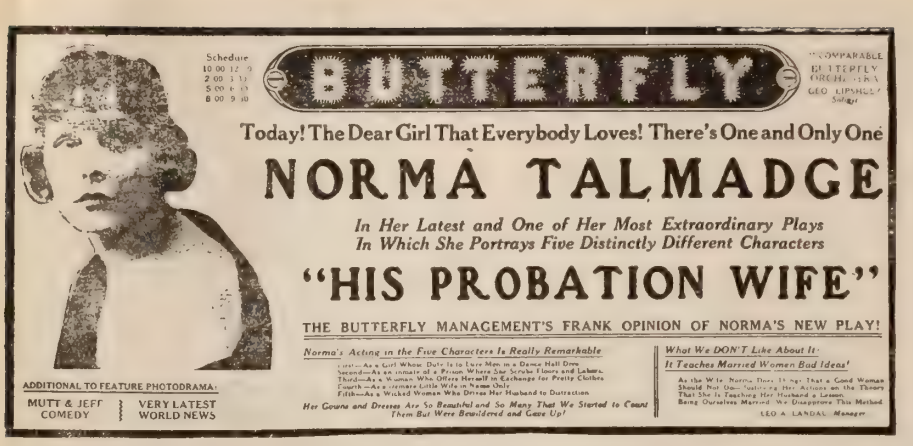
With the lights gold we have selections from "Oh Boy" and then comes the comedy, "The Village Smithy." The orchestra has a chance for all sorts of imitations and jazz effects here and it neglects none of them.

The Broadway

MAURICE A. KASHIN, managing director of the Broadway theatre, was the first exhibitor in the world to use the "Mr. and Mrs. Charles Chaplin" idea. You will remember that he employed this immediately after the announcement of the secret marriage by using the million dollar comedian in "Shoulder Arms," which had already run several weeks at that theatre and Mildred Harris in "Borrowed Clothes."

So that it would not come too suddenly on the heels of the other feature and because he wanted to do some other Chaplin stunts in the meantime, of which we have been telling you recently, he held back the showing of the latest Mildred Harris offering, "When a Girl Loves" until this time. Now he is advertising: "Mr. and Mrs. Chaplin on the same program—the million dollar wife of the million dollar comedian." And in order to get this program "A Dog's Life" has been held over for another week.

There is a clever advertising effect obtained this week in front of the house where there is a huge painting of Chaplin seated on a doorstep, crestfallen, and the dog at his side—a reproduction of one of the posters. But then there is added just behind him the figure of Mildred Harris (Mrs. Chaplin) giving him a lecture. Then there is the legend: "When a Girl Loves it is not A Dog's Life to be the Million Dollar Wife of a Million Dollar Comedian." This is attracting a lot of attention and it always gets a lot of laughs. The rest of the lobby display stands as last week.



Goldmark's "Sakuntala" is the overture and under the direction of James C. Bradford the Broadway orchestra interprets the number with real meaning, getting the most out of all the instruments. There is a different arrangement of the stage this week, new velour curtains being used and slightly parting, giving a blue effect between, changing to red and then to amber.

There is punch right at the opening of the Topical Digest this week with International News pictures of President Wilson sailing on his second trip to the peace conference. There are some fine shots here, one of them including the President and Mrs. Wilson on the bridge of the George Washington. The Digest starts off to the music of "Madelon" and then with the title quoting the President as saying: "I will not come back until it is over over there" the war-time favorite, "Over There" is aptly used. Then comes Current Events, pictures of the war tanks being turned to peace uses and with these the music is McKee's "Minor and Major.'

There is a clever effect through the music with the pictures of the German prisoners, for here "How Ya Gonna Keep 'Em Down on the Farm" is played and the audience quickly gets the connection and has a smile of satisfaction. Then there is a scene showing the German band. Of course the German national anthem, which the band was actually playing, was not employed, but "Yankee Doodle" is used and it gets a big hand. Then come scenes from International News showing the American fleet at practice at Guanatanimo, and here "When the Boys Come Sailing Home" is played. The Digest closes with interesting pictures of returning soldiers of the twenty-seventh division to the tune of "Stars and Stripes Forever."

Then follows Mildred Harris in "When a Girl Loves," and "A Dog's Life.'

Landau got attention with nine inches across the top of the newspaper page

Landau Attracts Attention to Feature Through Telling What He Doesn't Like About Story

LEO A. LANDAU, manager of the Butterfly theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., is a manager who believes in keeping the people talking about his theatre and he seems to be doing it with a vengeance. Recently we told you the way that he was calling attention to various productions and advertising that he was showing the Milwaukee public the leading features.

Now he has gone a step further and is "finding fault" with one of his own attractions and he has done it so successfully that he got the leading story in the Milwaukee papers Sunday. But this "criticism" is being done in such a clever way that it is certain to create a greater desire on the part of the public in general to witness the production.

In advertising Norma Talmadge in "His Probation Wife" Mr. Laudau used eight inches across the top of one of the amusement pages. Of course he has to pay an extra rate to get this, but you will generally find his displays in that position. Then he brings out the name of the theatre strikingly, used a large cut of Norma Talmadge and plays the title of the play strong.

Following this comes "The Butterfly management's frank opinion of Norma's new play" and then it goes ahead to show the shifting roles that she plays, so recited that everyone will want to see it, and then just to the right he adds "What we don't like about it: It teaches married women bad ideas. As the wife, Norma does things that a good woman should not do, justifying her actions on the theory that she is teaching her husband a lesson. Being ourselves married, we disapprove this method."

The clever photoplay editor of the Milwaukee Sentinel saw a story in this and wrote it. We are omitting the introduction and getting into it at the point the newspaper is interviewing Mr. Landau:

"Now, Mr. Manager, we've chased many an elusive story in our day, and many an improbable one, too; tell us candidly are you actually going to pay top rates for advertising space and then tell what's wrong with a picture and what parts you don't like? Break it gently, for you know and we've learned that picture managers like their pictures without exception. They may state entre nous that a story is weak, but to come out before the public and say that the picture lacks anything and to pay for it. It's the apex of the impossible to expect us to swallow that.

"But it's true," asserted the interviewed one positively, bringing forth his ad copy. "You yourself asked in your column last week what the next 'ad' wrinkle would be. Here it is. I'm devoting equal space to a statement saying what the management liked about the picture and the same amount goes to tell why I don't like it."

"But it's a Talmadge picture and you know Norma. What's wrong with her 'probation wife?'"

"'Tisn't the production or the star. It's the lesson in the story that we take exception to. It teaches married women bad tricks because the heroine commits little indiscriminate acts and then tries to find justification. Being ourselves married we take exception to them. This plot of bringing home a lesson to hubby by flirting with some one else—you know it isn't quite the thing. Not that we're afraid personally of getting 'tamed,' we were long ago, but just on general principles and in behalf of all married men we're taking exception to the plot and saying so in our copy."

We like to see managers getting out of the rut in advertising, especially when they are able to use something distinctly novel. Now most of the leading Milwaukee houses are now using large space and therefore it takes something more than mere space to attract unusual attention. There is no question in the world that Mr. Landau is doing that.

And what we like best about the whole thing is that he is first giving the picture its display and actually selling it before he rings in his curiosity arousing comment. It's quite like the snap of a whip.

18 Leading Stores Cooperate with Los Angeles Theatre

Eighteen of the principal down town drug stores in Los Angeles are to use life size straight and character pictures advertising productions being shown at the California Theatre, according to arrangements completed by Roy L. Miller, director of advertising and publicity of the California. The art department of California maintains a staff of three artists, and pastels, water color, oil paintings and pen drawings are made for lobby display and all advertising. The pictures to be used in the display windows of the stores will be 30x40 inches in size, and consist of stars in character make-up and still pictures from the photoplays enlarged to this size. Every poster will have a handsome frame of shadow box design, and the picture will be the center of the window display. This is the most pretentious advertising of this kind ever attempted by a west coast theatre.

beginning. It will, in fact, never be finished. New ideas in copy and design are the very things on which advertising thrive and in attracting patronage to this 'theatre of tomorrow will play to a patronage that will surprise the advertising world."

"House management will be given a new impetus. Attaches will be specially trained for this duty." Special provision may be provided for parking cars, with attendants in charge.

"A physician or highly trained nurse will be provided with complete equipment ready for any emergency, for this theatre of tomorrow will play to a patronage that will correspond with the population of a small city."

"Dictaphones will be placed throughout the auditorium so that the management will be able to pick up comments, favorable or unfavorable, from the vast audience, so that the theatre can see itself as others see it."

"Special provision will be made for the preparation of titles and trailers.

"Some may conclude that these ideas may be fantastic. However, when one compares the motion picture theatre of today with that of five years ago they will see that motion picture presentation as presented today would have appeared utterly impossible at that time.

"All the grandeur of ancient Rome will be revived in the interior decorations, and the motion picture patron of today will be astounded by the silent art palace of tomorrow."

Song Used in the Middle of "Mrs. Wiggs" Feature

Two special features were added to the program at Grauman's Theatre during the week of March 9th in connection with the showing of the Paramount "Mrs. Wiggs of The Cabbage Patch." One was a replica of the garret dormitory in the Wiggs home on the stage in the rear of the set. When the projection of the film where Lovey Mary carries Tommy to the garret to put him to sleep, the house was darkened, screen raised, and Miss Elsie Pfennig sang "Take Me Back to Rock-a-by Land." The scene closed with Tommy falling back in bed asleep, and the screen dropped and the film went on showing Lovey Mary kissing Tommy good-night.

The second special feature was a thunder, lighting and rain storm given during the rain storm of the film with the picture being projected on the screen in the center of the stage. The drops at either side were taken back and there genuine storm effects were seen. Water continued to fall with the lighting and peals of thunder during all of the showing of the scenes in which rain fell in the film.

Personality and Close Attention Score Big Success for Woman With Neighborhood Theatre

"BUILDING slowly and on a concrete foundation" is the secret of the success of the Ideal theatre, Sixteenth and Dorcas streets, Omaha, and unquestionably one of the most successful of neighborhood theatres anywhere. And this has been accomplished under the management of a woman, Mrs. J. A. Dostal.

In other words it has been the attention to all the details, the "little things" as well as the big ones that have made the Ideal just about all that its name means. In the first place Mrs. Dostal decided that the closest attention should be given to the projection. She obtained the very best equipment possible, but there came a complaint from patrons of many of the theatres, and Mrs. Dostal solved this by running the pictures fifteen minutes to the reel. An immediate effect was that many of the older people expressed their pleasure at the improvement that had resulted.

Soon Mrs. Dostal had quite a few people coming to the Ideal a couple of nights a week, but she wanted them as her regular patrons. She did not feel that she could pay the price to get big features every night, especially since she had just raised the prices to ten cents in what had always been a five cent house. But she concluded that she would try to do bigger things at least two nights a week and picked Sunday and Monday as the days. Then she arranged with one of the exchanges for a better class of product and raised the price on those days to fifteen cents.

Here are her own conclusions about that:

How "Better Pictures" Worked

"To begin with everyone goes somewhere on Sundays and it appeared to be a case of theatre having the best pictures getting the business, whereas if a poor picture was shown them a couple of times they would take their patronage to some other house. By showing the best our people got so that they could scarcely wait for the next Sunday. One family after another was added to our regular patronage and even the younger people forgot the downtown houses and are now patronizing ours. Likewise people who would not patronize a show on Sunday knew that they could see the same big feature on Monday. Then the word of mouth advertising from the Sunday showing brought more business so that 'blue Monday' is unknown at the Ideal. Full houses on Sunday and Monday soon assured us of capacity business for the balance of the week through popularizing the house."

In order to take advantage of the advertising of the downtown houses and the publicity that the pictures get through the newspapers the Ideal makes every effort to get the features as soon after their first run showing as possible. Mrs. Dostal finds that it pays her to go to a little more expense to get the pictures earlier than they would come to her in the ordinary course.

A "Personality Theatre"

But probably more than anything else that is responsible for the great success of the management is that it is a "personality"

This calendar, giving attractions for a month, brings business to neighborhood theatre house. There is "Welcome" written all over it and one cannot patronize the theatre a few days without getting the spirit. It soon becomes just as much a part of the neighborhood as the patrons' own homes. Mrs. Dostal gives her personal attention to all of her patrons. Parents send their children to the Ideal because they know they will be safe and at the same time that they will be made to behave as no noise or rowdyism is permitted for a moment. And children pay the same price of admission as adults.

The theatre is kept actually a part of the community. For instance when the dancing clubs were springing up Mrs. Dostal prepared special slides and ran them on the screen for the clubs and not only sold tickets but she and her husband attend the affairs and mingle with the young folk. The result is that every member of these clubs has become an Ideal booster and rarely attend any other theatre. In the same way the fullest cooperation is given the churches, the sisterhoods, the schools and various organizations in any campaigns that they may have in progress and also through special benefit performances. On these benefit nights Mrs. Dostal always makes it a rule to get the very best of pictures, for she knows that then there come to the theatre many who rarely or never attend and she makes every effort to convert them to regular patrons. Of course this can only be done with a good show.

Some of Her Recipes

Now Mrs. Dostal gives the recipe for her success in a few words:

"I show my enthusiasm before my patrons and they feel; it is catching and before you know it they are ready to fight for you.

"No manager should ever leave to others to do what he personally should do. If you fail to take an interest in your theatre, so will the people.

"But the main points in pleasing the people and that will bring capacity houses are the best of projection, music and order, the newest, best and cleanest of pictures, coupled with courtesy (which must be made perosnal) and enthusiasm for business."

Mrs. Dostal believes that she has hit upon the best advertising plan that can be adopted by a neighborhood theatre. She had tried newspaper advertising and all sorts of programs without the results that she desired, so she struck the calendar idea and though only the second of these have been printed the idea is going like wildfire and not only are they in demand from the families, but practically every store in the section is displaying them. These are about 12 by 16 inches and so of sufficient size to be easily read.

The policy will be to use a large picture of some star to be seen at the theatre as the only decoration. On the first one Anita Stewart was used while Norma Talmadge appears on that for March, cuts obtained from the exchanges being used. These calendars are printed on heavy paper with the type over the dates in colors so that the names of the stars and the titles of the pictures are easily read. With the exception of Sunday and Mondays there are often special shows during the week for a couple of days, but with those exceptions changes are made daily.

Mrs. Dostal personally distributed the calendars the first month and before February was at an end there were hundreds of inquiries as to whether there would be one for March so that the initial supply was quickly exhausted and another supply necessary.

BRIGHTNESS COUNTS

Now Is the Time to Put New Pep Into Your Theatre

IN many sections where the summer season is the poorest for business there is a spirit of letting-up in the management of the theatre. If there are things to be done, a coat of paint here, or a little repairing there, the proprietor simply says that he will let it go to fall, when the business will begin to increase again.

But that's just what is the matter. When things show a tendency to slump off a little, then is the time to make your house all the more attractive. Perhaps the renovation of your theatre now, the addition of a few flowers, the betterment of your music, will more than offset any normal dropping off.

Ten per cent of the exhibitors of the country have shown new life during the past year. Let's have at least another ten per cent start things just as the trees are budding into new life.

Horater Uses a Real Live "Sis Hopkins," Introduces Her During Show of the Film

H. C. HORATER, of the Alhambra theatre, Toledo, O., whom you all know now as one of the livest wires in the whole industry has just put over another one by duplicating the New York campaign on "Sis Hopkins" and then going a step further.

How a leading hotel cooperated with the Alhambra

In the first place Mr. Horater got in touch with the Goldwyn offices here and arranged to secure the services of the same young woman who put the stunt over so successfully on Broadway. She didn't get through her work here until Saturday night and so there had to be speedy action and so she took the Grand Central to make the speediest possible time, arriving in Toledo Sunday evening.

Announcements had already appeared in the Sunday papers of her coming and there was a crowd at the station to meet her, headed by the manager of the Alhambra, newspaper reporters and a battery of camera men. Her arrival was staged spectacularly, for the girl came from the Pullman in the "Sis Hopkins" garb and then did her famous "fall" half way across the station platform while the women screamed, thinking that she was about to be killed.

Naturally there was a howling mob following her all the way from the station to the theatre where she arrived just at the start of the second show of the evening and then it was that a surprise was sprung on the audience though the people could well guess that something was in progress from the cheering that came from the street. The girl was taken in the stage door and still scores waited to see her again when she came out a couple of hours later.

In the second reel of the picture there is a scene where Mabel Normand does some highly acrobatic stunts in a pumpkin patch. Just at that point Mr. Horater arranged a little diversion. The screen was raised and there, with a rural setting, the lights come up and the orchestra began to play "Turkey in the Straw." A second later "Sis" stumbled out to the amazement and delight of the huge audience and entertained for five minutes with her antics when the screen curtain again descended and the picture was continued.

In addition to advertising the picture liberally Mr. Horater had the cooperation of the Secor Hotel which arranged for the presence of "Sis" each evening after her appearance at the theatre. Practically the whole of the quarter of page display that was used by the Secor referred to the appearance of the girl at the Alhambra and the same cut as employed in the theatre announcement was used. That made the tie-up complete.

Clever Stunt Campaign Used for "False Faces"

In order to get unique publicity for the Thomas H. Ince production of "The False Faces," Famous Players-Lasky has issued a novelty in the form of a postcard representing a false face, or mask. This is cut so as to leave room for the nose and eyes. There is no printed matter on the outside of the cards, which are in colors and representing the fiercest sort of individuals. They certainly should prove popular with the youngsters and will also aid in increasing the interest among the elders.

A special half-sheet is being sent to exhibitors carrying the comment of the reviewers on this picture.

Live News from the Producers

Selznick Tabooes Old Film Traditions

"One of the great advantages in producing pictures for a new corporation is that it is possible to ditch all old traditions and superstitions and go ahead on an entirely new basis," says Charles Giblyn, Director-General of the Selznick Pictures Corporation. Mr. Giblyn has just completed the first production, 'Upstairs and Down,' in which Myron Selznick will present Olive Thomas as the first star under his management.

"By building from the ground up it is possible to examine more closely the various features of production than when a lot of machinery that has previously been in operation is inherited. For this reason I believe that in 'Upstairs and Down' we will bring to the screen a production which is modern in the very best sense of the word."

"Upstairs and Down" was completed about two weeks ago so far as the actual photographing was concerned. The cutting and titling is being done under the personal supervision of Mr. Giblyn and it is expected that the finished print will be in New York within a week or so.

David Selznick, secretary of the corporation and brother of the president, arrived in Los Angeles this week and immediately took up his duties as an officer of the company.

Pathe Adopts New Selling Plan

Organization Enlarged Due to Increased Business During Past Year—New Arrangements in Effect May 1

Frank Powell presents House Peters in "The Forfeit," which is distributed by Hodkinson

BECAUSE of the great increase in Pathe's business during the past year, Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, has found it necessary to enlarge the selling organization, and to divide the present sales department into two parts. Features will be handled by a special feature department, with special feature salesmen, under the management of Tom North. All short subjects such as serials, comedies, Pathe News and Pathe Review, will be handled by a special short subject department, which will include the present sales force, under the management of W. S. Wessling. These two departments will be under the supervision of F. C. Quimby, the present sales manager, who assumes the title of director of exchanges.

The new arrangements go into effect about May 1. Mr. Brunet has had the new plan under consideration for some months, during which time he has been perfecting details, until now every contingency has been provided for. The reorganization of the already highly specialized Pathe sales plan is to effect a still higher specialization. The Pathe idea has proven very successful. That idea has not been changed. The details only have been changed.

Mr. Brunet has withheld the announcement of his plans until such a time as he was thoroughly satisfied with the Pathe features complete and arranged for. The high quality of the extra selected and special features scheduled since January 1, together with the fruition of his plans for insuring to the Pathe organization an ample supply of strictly first class features with well known stars for the coming twelve months, has made the reorganization wise and necessary. Now he is able to give to the product of the numerous and important producers who are now making and who will in the near future make use of Pathe's distribution facilities, the very widest distribution, and that at a minimum of cost which probably cannot be equaled in the business.

F. C. Quimby, with his new title of director of exchanges, assumes new, important and increased responsibilities. His new position is an advancement which is a fitting reward for the long and faithful service which he has given Pathe. His tenure of service with the organization extends, with the exception of a couple of months with another concern about a year and a half ago, over a period of five years.

Hall Completes Deal for More New Features

WITH four of the twelve that compose the list of features representing Independent Sales Corporation's 10-20-30 series, now on the market, Frank Hall, President of Independent, announces that he has practically completed negotiations for additional features of this series. Pending negotiations, Mr. Hall states that he will not give details concerning the subject matter of the productions or the personnel of the casts, but hints that those booking the new subjects will be given the greatest box-office values ever offered on the Independent market in the form of picture entertainment.

"One feature for which negotiations have practically been closed, placing it on the booking lists of Independent Sales 10-20-30 series," said Mr. Hall, "is especially big in theme, personnel of cast and quality of production. It has that something that I as an exhibitor and distributor know to be the quality referred to as big. It represents the work of one of our best known directors, presents the artistry of one of the screen's most accomplished stars and represents a production as a whole that I defy any producer or distributor to surpass for the values quoted, namely: 10, 20 and 30 rentals.

"Within the next few weeks Independent Sales will be free to announce the new features added to the list of four already before the public under the 10-20-30 rentals."

Hodkinson Releases Four Star

First of Series to Come in April Under Trade Name of Four Star Pictures—"As a Man Thinks" Stars Leah Baird

THE W. W. Hodkinson Corporation is going to handle the new "Four Star" pictures, the recently announced Harry Raver productions which start off with Leah Baird in "As a Man Thinks," a screen production of Augustus Thomas' successful play of the same name.

The official name of the producing organization is Artco Productions, Inc., but the "Four Star" appellation is bound to stick, because the pictures will feature equally as stars the Author, Director, Producer and the Lead.

Augustus Thomas is the author. George Irving is the director. Harry Raver is the producer. And Leah Baird is the star of the cast.

The announcement of the Hodkinson Corporation's affiliation with these new productions is doubly interesting, as it comes on the heels of a word that has been filtering through the trade that the Hodkinson people are going to handle an entirely new sort of product from now on, featuring their policy of securing only "better than average" pictures and eliminating those which do not come up to this mark. And better than average, in these days, means a great deal.

As a matter of fact, the Artco Productions are but the first of the New Hodkinson line. Beginning with these pictures the Hodkinson organization is handling three other new lines of big product. The announcement of the next will be made in a short time, and the trade will be notified of the others in due succession. This is a big step ahead in the progress of these distributors, and is sure to be productive of important consequences.

Betty Howe, supporting Leah Baird in "As a Man Thinks"

In regard to the "Four Star" series, Mr. Hodkinson believes that he has here a product thoroughly worthy of standing out as the first of his new series.

Augustus Thomas, the author of "As a Man Thinks," is one of the most successful dramatists, with a world-wide reputation. The director, George Irving, has an enviable reputation earned by his many successful productions such as "Raffles," "To Hell With the Kaiser," "The Silver King" and many others. As a producer, Harry Raver has acquired the distinction of doing something different.

World Reports Business Conditions Good

REPORTS coming in to the offices of World Pictures from its branch exchanges in reference to business conditions are all of the most favorable character. They all speak of the unprecedented prosperity of the motion picture theatres. On the condition of commercial and industrial lines it seems from reading these reports that in some industries there is an unsettled condition due to a readjustment from war to peace basis. The consensus of opinion among business men is that just for the moment it is best to be conservative until the labor question as regards wages shall have assumed concrete form. With others there seems to be a tendency to limit production until an outlet untrammeled by lack of cargo space on foreign shipping shall be provided. In the meantime people are flocking to the theatre to find divertisement relief from business cares and to kill time that otherwise would hang heavy on their hands. There is no question but what the United States is to have three or four years of wonderful prosperity. We are the only open market for raw and finished products that are not necessary to rebuild the waste of war ravages. This means that billions of dollars will flow into the country and with it will come a demand on labor and capital at a highly remunerative return. Amusement is a necessity to all who are working under forced pressure and theatres will participate in the general distribution of wealth that is bound to ensue. World Pictures is taking time by the forelock and making every effort to supply the exhibitors with the proper material for appeal to the theatregoers. Feature pictures having the best actors obtainable in the cast; novelties, such as Prizma Natural Color Pictures; Kinograms with its de luxe service of the best camera men scattered through the civilized globe will add distinction to the program devised by the exhibitor to coax the picture patrons into his house.

Universal Engages Crume

R. L. Crume, Canadian newspaper writer, as been added to the Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., publicity staff. Mr. Crume will act as publicity manager of the Montreal (Can.) exchange. Mr. Crume is now engaged in laying out publicity campaigns for showings of "The Heart of Humanity" in the Montreal territory.

This production, which stars Dorothy Phillips, is said to be making records in Pennsylvania. Manager Haussman of the Hippodrome in Pottsville exhibited it for a full week.

"Common Clay" Gets Approval of Press

Pathe's special, "Common Clay," after receiving high praise from the trade paper reviewers, completely won over the newspaper critics at its premiere showing at the Rialto Theatre in New York. The picture opened to a big crowd which was not slow to show its warm appreciation of Fannie Ward's greatest effort by frequent applause which found its climax in an unusual demonstration at the conclusion of the presentation. This is in line with reports which have been received from other cities such as Milwaukee, where Manager Bostick, of the Merrill, reports record-breaking crowds and much enthusiasm on the same picture.

MacDonald in Supporting Cast for Marsh

A Goldwyn announcement this week declares that Mae Marsh has never had a more interesting cast of supporting players than surround her in the new Goldwyn picture, "Spotlight Sadie," scheduled for release April 6.

Wallace MacDonald is leading man. Others in the cast are: Alec B. Francis, Mary Thurman, Betty Schade, P. M. McCullough, Walter Hiers, Wellington Playter, Alice Davenport, and Lou Salter. The production was directed by Larry Trimble.

Sam Taylor Joins Vitagraph Staff

George Randolph Chester, the Vitagraph Company's new editor, has added to his staff Samuel J. Taylor, former Kalem and Universal editor, who has just been discharged from the army after a year in the service at Washington, where he was in charge of the Scenario Department of the motion picture division of the Medical Corps.

Taylor is one of the youngest of the experts on screen technique and a student of the spoken drama as well as the photoplay. He will picturize the works of noted authors and playwrights for Vitagraph's feature productions.

Elsie Ferguson Returns from South

Elsie Ferguson, who is now working under the direction of George Fitzmaurice on the new Artcraft picture, "The Witness for the Defense," returned last week from Miami, Fla., where the company spent some time making scenes laid in India.

Immediately upon Miss Ferguson's return, work was resumed at the 56th Street studio on the production, the set being a large tent representing the one in which the heroine lives with her husband, an East Indian prince. Before the production is completed the entire studio floor will be given over to it, the story requiring an enormous court scene for which nearly a thousand people will be engaged.

Wyndham Standing is again Miss Ferguson's leading man, with the role of the villain husband in the hands of Warner Oland.

Pathe Shows New Ditmar Subjects

In Pathe Review No. 5, released March 16, is shown in a most entertaining fashion "An Enemy of Snakes," which suggests a playful commentator and should be of more than ordinary interest in these times of wide-spread alcoholic discussion. Dr. Raymond L. Ditmars furnishes the entertainment in showing the secretary bird, so named because the tuft of plumes at the back of the head resembles the pen of a clerk, stuck behind his ear.

The snake-slayer is a native of Africa, and, in attacking its enemy, it uses its powerful legs.

Just a Mere Detail!

In his forthcoming "Boston Blackie" picture, now under production at the Metro-studio in Hollywood, Bert Lytell uses a complete burglar's kit that was captured from a yeggman now doing twenty years in San Quentin prison for a sensational jewel robbery. Maxwell Karger, Metro-director general, obtained the kit from the Los Angeles police department for use in the picture.

"Les Miserables" Leads on to Longer Runs

IT long has been the contention of producers of special feature films that there are practically no limit on the drawing power of these productions; that because of their magnitude, or their dramatic features, or the fame of their story and star, three or four showings in a community are oftentimes not enough to satisfy the demand of the public.

In support of this William Fox cites the experience of the William Farnum de luxe production, "Les Miserables," in Bridgeport. This production was booked for a return engagement of four days at Shea's Park Theatre, Bridgeport, making the eighteenth showing of "Les Miserables" in that city.

When the picture was first issued, it was shown for a week in Bridgeport as a William Fox road attraction. Shortly after this it played a return engagement of a week at Poli's Theatre. Although during both engagements its showings were attended by capacity audiences, there was apparently no diminution in the demand of Bridgeport film patrons to see Victor Hugo's immortal story enacted on the screen; for shortly afterward Poli's booked it for another week.

Even these three showings failed to satisfy all the patrons in Bridgeport, and various other theatres booked the production for extended engagements.

Eventually Shea's Park Theatre booked it four days—this short run being necessary because of the Park's policy of splitting its week between pictures and burlesque.

Police Censor Commends "Unpardonable Sin"

AFTER viewing "The Unpardonable Sin" in his official capacity Royal A. Baker, Chief Police Censor for the City of Detroit, made the following report:

Play very timely considering the fact that the Peace controversy is uppermost in everybody's mind. It goes to show that we must not forget that culture and training becomes a part of the human being and their actions the outcome of their training. The picture proves conclusively that German culture is the fundamental of the gigantic warring machine which has caused so much distress in the educated world, and while we can dismantle the German empire of its instruments of war we still have to deal with a race of people whose mentality and beliefs are murderous.

The picture shows what Germany has done to the civilized world is "The Unpardonable Sin." The plot of the play is strong and a perfect dramatic vehicle. From the very first the suspense rises slowly until the final climax is reached. Episode after episode throughout the play follow quickly with strong conflicts containing lots of animation or strong heart interest delicately contrasted against humor. The grouping is artistic and very real. Photography excellent. The types and costumes are fine in every detail. The art titles are very beautiful, soft and not overly contrasty.

The settings throughout are very real.

Miss Blanche Sweet, the leading performer, is at her best and in this play her work is undoubtedly finer and more artistic than any other she has ever appeared. She plays a dual role which is very difficult and plays it in such a manner that it leaves no doubt in the audience's mind that her ability matches with the highest in the art of dramatic action. The play is very believable from the very first and impresses you and holds your interest so intensely that it rushes over eight reels before you hardly realize it. It is very fast and snappy. From commencement to finish the picture shows that the master hands of technical experts have done their work so thoroughly it will meet the approval of the most critical.

A specially arranged music score which heavy, beautiful and symbolic is just right for the bigness of the play.

Carrigan Plays "Checkers" Title Role

Speculation as to the identity of the actor who would play the part of Checkers in the big special feature of that name which is being produced by Richard Stanton for William Fox, was set at rest this week when it was announced by the Exhibitors' Service Bureau of the Fox Film Corporation that Thomas J. Carrigan, one of the best known film and stage players, had been engaged for the part.

Goldwyn Policy Wins Approval

Popular Sentiment in Favor of Fewer Pictures But Better Ones, and Longer Runs—Letters Endorse Move

SAMUEL GOLDWYN'S prediction that fewer and better pictures are necessary to maintain the quality standard demanded by exhibitors and the public has resulted in many letters and telegrams of approval from prominent theatre owners in several territories, it is announced.

Mr. Goldwyn departed last week for the Goldwyn studios in Culver City, Cal. Before leaving he made the following prediction: "Goldwyn for its third season will have fewer pictures to offer exhibitors next year—and better pictures.

"The fact is that at the rate at which exhibitors are going now they threaten to exhaust all the literary material in the world. There simply are not enough stories—no writers can write enough stories to supply the demand of exhibitors who change their bills every day. Even with a thrice a week change of bill, they are consuming pictures that cost the producers at least $250,000 a week. This is not only wasteful but impossible. They are burning up property by too brief exploitation of pictures that deserve longer runs. Moreover they compel us, when good stories are not to be had, to take the next best.

"I prophesy that before long the other large companies will follow suit. Where Goldwyn has made a star series of eight pictures with a single star, we shall perhaps make only four. If we could make three and make them better we should make three. Next year I believe you are going to see big pictures that command attention running two, three or even four weeks in the larger cities of America instead of for one week, as at present. The one-day houses will run their pictures for two or three days, and so forth."

Louis Bennison seems to be doing well here in "Speedy Meade," released by Goldwyn.

Bernard Depkin, Jr., Managing Director of the Parkway Theatre Company's chain of houses in Baltimore, supports Mr. Goldwyn's contention in the following letter: "I hope Mr. Goldwyn's prediction will come true. We simply must have good stories and quality pictures and the overproduction now going on is detrimental to the future welfare and progress of the industry. I, for one, know that Goldwyn will keep its quality up and not sacrifice dramatic value for quantity production. More exploitation and better advertising will result in longer engagements and aid the industry in general. Count on me to support any plan that may materialize from Mr. Goldwyn's prediction.

"Made in America" Shown at Camp Meade

"MADE IN AMERICA" was shown Monday and Tuesday, March 3 and 4, at Camp Meade, Maryland, to eight thousand officers and men. Four performances were given in the Liberty theatre. Lieut. Arra Chaney, U. S. A., attached to Headquarters Fourth Development Battalion was in charge of the screening.

In a letter addressed to W. W. Hodkinson on the series, Lieut. Chaney said: "The showing of the great film has passed and I can assure you that it was run off in great style and greatly appreciated by eight thousand of the soldiers of this camp, and every one of them praised it very highly, as we could tell by the continuous applause.

"We had a special showing of this film Monday afternoon for a few selected officers of this camp—in fact, some of the best military men in the Army, and they all approved of it highly for its correctness, yet bringing in the novel little story.

"Major Deering and his officers wish that I congratulate Mr. Ashley Miller, producer and director, on his wonderful success in this picture, and especially Major Logan of the Screening Board, who was highly elated over the showing of the scenes that were taken at his examining station.

"The men and officers of this commission all send their regards to Mr. Miller and his staff and wish him and the corporation much success with this film, and I can assure you that you have my best wishes for success."

"Ambition" Under Way on Coast

Under the direction of her husband, Allen Holubar, Dorothy Phillips, Universal star, is now busy on a new super-drama tentatively titled "Ambition," at the Universal City studios.

Miss Phillips' next Jewel release, entitled "Destiny," in which William Stowell and Harry Hilliard appear as her co-leading men, is expected to be ready for exhibitors early in May.

"Man of Might" Creates Sensation

Episode Seven of "The Man of Might," Vitagraph's serial now current, is said to be setting the playhouses abuzz. More so than any of the foregoing episodes, this one pulsates with action. For instance, at the very beginning of this chapter, a redskin friend of the hero and his party, all of whom have been bound and suspended midway down the face of a desert cliff to perish of the heat, is seen peppering away with shotgun at the taut cords after having spread a blanket on pegs beneath the prisoners. Thus one after the other is saved from a horrible fate. It is a remarkable exhibition of marksmanship.

In the latter part of this episode, William Duncan, Vitagraph's serial hero, who is starring in "The Man of Might," supported by a cast including Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan, is about to be trapped in the pocket of a blind trail when by sheer force of sinew he twists out of its path the boulder hurled down the mountain side by the villains.

Martin G. Cohn Retires from Inter-Ocean

Starting his film career with the Great Northern Film Company in 1909, Martin G. Cohn went with Famous Players-Lasky affiliations after a year and joined the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation where he was editor in complete charge of the foreign film and projection department.

Mr. Cohn resigned from Inter-Ocean this week, and states that after resting a bit he will announce his next affiliation.

Miss Dalton Comes East

Within the course of two weeks it is expected that Dorothy Dalton, the Thomas H. Ince star in Paramount pictures, will leave California for New York, where she will appear in several photoplays which require Eastern locale.

Miss Dalton is now busy in California on a production.

Traverse Returns in a Strong Role

Described as a story in which tragedy leads a woman through a fashionable gambling establishment to happiness, "Gambling in Souls," the current William Fox Excel Picture, is said to afford Madlaine Traverse, the star, the strongest part she has had since "The Caillaux Case," her first big William Fox success.

In "Gambling in Souls" is said to be another example of the Fox policy of giving stars the best supporting casts possible. The cast includes Herbert Heyes, Murdock MacQuarrie, Lew Zehring, Mary McIvor, Henry Barrows, Marion Skinner and William Clifford.

"Gambling in Souls" was adopted by Denison Clift from a popular story written by S. J. Warshawsky. It was directed by Harry Millarde. The picture is said to abound in exceptionally sensational scenes, one of the big moments occuring in a fashionable gambling house in Chicago when the heroine stakes herself against the house to save her daughter's happiness and also the man who loves her.

Pathe Author Praises Character Actor

Edward Peple, author of "The Silver Girl," the play which has been adapted to the screen for Frank Keenan, declares that the character actor is an ideal figure for the part of Jefferson Hunter, the big, dominant character of the story. When the play was first produced at Wallack's theatre, it had the benefit of an exceptionally good cast headed by George Fawcett in the principal role and Jane Oaker, Lillian Albertson, Charles L. Warren, Edwin Nicander, Louise Galloway, Norman Thorp, Harry Lillford and George Nash, who can be depended upon at all times to give a finished performance. But after seeing a screening of the story, Mr. Peple realized something of the great breadth of treatment afforded by the camera and just to what a high degree of accomplishment a skilled player may attain who embodies the very spirit of the story.

Approve Changed Name

Select declares that many letters are being received from exhibitors approving the change in name of Constance Talmadge's Select Picture for March, in which she is presented by Lewis J. Selznick, from "Saturday to Monday" to "Experimental Marriage."

The name "Experimental Marriage" is especially adapted to this attraction, inasmuch as the theme of the play concerns an experimental marriage between Suzanne Ercol and Foxcroft Grey.

Tours New England

Muriel Ostriche, the World Film star and her publicity director, Regina B. Kruh, left March 10 for a week's trip to the New England States, where Miss Ostriche made personal appearances at the leading theatres, due to the numerous requests she has received both from fans and theatre managers.

Priscilla Dean is seen at the left as she appears in "A Silk Lined Burglar," and at the right she poses as her own winsome self

Universal Secures Abe Martin "Sayings"

ABE MARTIN, despoiler of blues, atrocious slaughterer of gloom, has been signed for motion pictures. The old timer from Indiana's pumkin'-spotted corn fields and veteran of many possum and coon hunts has finally succumbed to the lure of the cinema and in the future in addition to giving his views of life to newspaper readers he will add a few hundred laughs to the New Screen Magazine being issued weekly by Universal exchanges throughout the country.

Abe Martin will not pose before the camera in "pusson" but he will do his bit by showering motion picture audiences with anti-gloom sentences, from the New Screen Magazine. Old Martin, though on in years, is "jest as young as he used to be" and his ideas are modern, and then some. Martin has been a feature of hundreds of daily newspapers in the United States and Canada for several years and to estimate the extent of his popularity would be foolhardy in the attempt. Created by Kin Hubbard, an adopted Hoosier, old Abe has made millions of newspaper readers laugh and as Mr. Hubbard has agreed to bring him into "pitchers" Abe is concocting a new line of humorous sayings, which, according to advance reports from the old homestead, are "some slickers, goldarnit."

Action Abounds in Bessie Love Productions

ACTION is declared to be the keynote of Bessie Love's next Vitagraph picture. From the very first Miss Love strikes out to gain the attention of the spectators. "Striking Out" in this case is to be accepted literally, inasmuch as Miss Love is seen in the thick of a fight in the very first scenes of "A Yankee Princess." Coupling this fact with the type portrayed by Miss Love, which is that of an Irish urchin, photoplay fans may look for such a screen scrap as possibly no one of the gentler sex has ever indulged in outside of some Hogan's alley.

Earle Williams stars in "A Gentleman of Quality," a mid-March release

Miss Love's role in "A Yankee Princess" is said to constitute her greatest effort at character delineation. The range of the story carries her from the slums of a great metropolis, where she is seen as a scantily garbed gamin, to the drawing rooms of the wealthy, there to scintillate as a model of fashion and refinement. It is a gamut, to span which Miss Love's abilities will be put to an utmost test.

The fight in the opening scenes is a very real one, according to word conveyed to the Vitagraph home office by Director David Smith, in charge of the new production. Six husky boys pounce on the belligerent little heroine, who, rumpling her nose and doubling her fists, whilst a dangerous glint creeps into her eyes, wades right into the thick of it, fighting for all she is worth. Several times she is knocked down, nor were the falls intentional. "I tried my best to keep on my feet," said Miss Love.

Crowd Sees Nazimova "Shooting"

"Red Lantern" Night Scenes Get Over Three Hundred Studio Spectators—Applause Plentiful for Star and Players

A PAGEANT that drew a "gallery" of more than three hundred film producers, screen stars and players, newspaper writers and other spectators to the Nazimova studios in Hollywood was staged when Director Albert Capellani took the night street scenes in "The Red Lantern," Nazimova's forthcoming Chinese production. The Russian star, wearing the magnificent silken robes of the pseudo Goddess of the Red Lantern, acted before a veritable battery of Kliegs, spotlights and cameras from five o'clock in the afternoon until nearly eleven o'clock at night.

Time after time there were outbursts of applause from the assembled spectators, the majority of them accustomed to seeing scenes enacted for the films; so that their enthusiasm was a genuine tribute to Nazimova as past mistress of emotional interpretation.

In preparation for the filming of the spectacle, Director Capellani, his art director, Henri Monessier, who designed the massive and picturesque Pekin street "set," and Eugene Gaudio, Capellani's camera man, made eleborate tests of the lighting of the street the night before the scenes were "shot." Gaudio's negative showed a wealth of detail and gave assurance that the scene, when it is flashed on the screen in the Nazimova picture will be the last word in beauty, artistry and impressiveness.

Maxwell Karger, Director General, had every Nazimova production department head on the job from afternoon until late at night. In fact, the new studios were turned over almost in their entirety to the making of the Nazimova scenes.

The Pekin street, with its temples, shops and bazaars, was a veritable blaze of light. Ray Smallwood, chief of the photographic staff, supplied six camera men to assist Gaudio. John Arnold, who films Viola Dana, was posted in one doorway, to shoot Nazimova from a certain angle; Robert B. Kurrle, Bert Lytell's cinematographer, was posted in another. Others cranking were William E. Fildew, Arthur Martinelli, Micky Maguire, Henry Bergquist and Charles Fuhr.

There were 500 lamps in the Chinese lanterns which hung from every post and from the windows of the Chinese houses. Coolies carried other lamps on poles—seventy-five of them. In the huge red lantern on the palanquin used to carry Nazimova were five 1,000-watt bulbs. Besides there were seventy "Broadsides," twenty-five "spots" and a powerful searchlight, with a radius of several miles, which was placed on the top of the immense archway at the head of the street and the rays of which followed the principals in the scenes.

Eight hundred Chinese "extras," imported from all parts of California and garbed at the Nazimova studios—where also they were fed with liberal portions of chop suey, noodles and liberty steak, with plenty of tea—filled the street and participated in the spectacular scenes enacted.

Universal Announces Priscilla Dean Feature

UNIVERSAL Film Company this week announced that Priscilla Dean is to be seen shortly in a new Special Attraction said to be the most fascinating subject she has appeared in since her debut with Universal. "The Silk Lined Burglar" is the title of the production, which was produced by Jack Dillon from Fred Myton's scenario of one of the series of "Boston Blackie" detective and crook stories.

The film play relates a story of a young girl's love for a man in the United States Secret Service, who has been reprimanded for his inability to get evidence that will convict a suspected traitor of plotting against the Government, and of her efforts to get the evidence herself and thus keep her lover from developing international difficulties by carrying out a raid of the traitor's rooms himself.

In Miss Dean's supporting cast are Sam DeGrasse, who is seen as "Boston Blackie," Ashton Dearholt, as the secret service man, and Fred Kelsey as Capt. von Hoffmeir, foreign agent.

"The Silk Lined Burglar" is in six reels and will be released on March 31.

Swaab Reports More Simplex Sales

Lewis M. Swaab, Simplex distributor in the Philadelphia district, has reported the sale of a large number of Simplex Projectors within the past few weeks.

"Cannibals" Claims Unusual Business

Exceptional business is traveling in the wake of Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas," according to an announcement from Exhibitors Mutual, which declares that exhibitors are sending in unusually encouraging reports.

Manager George Fischer of Saxe's Alhambra Theatre, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, is said to have broken all house records with the "Cannibals." Mr. Fischer wired Exhibitors Mutual:

"Martin Johnson's Cannibals surpassed all expectations. Banner day for Alhambra theatre. From comments of patrons will be without doubt banner week of this house in twelve years. Everybody a booster and talking wonderfully."

Mr. Fischer, in confirming his telegram by letter, says: "We are not in the habit of writing the praises of any pictures, but the Cannibals are deserving of everything that has or will be said about them."

Laemmle Seeks Newspaper Cooperation

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Film Company, has sent letters to editors of over three thousand newspapers and magazines throughout the United States, it is announced.

In the letter Mr. Laemmle asks the editors to cooperate with Universal and the entire motion picture industry in providing a market for the work turned out by America's army of young writers.

Universal's publicity department reports that favorable replies have begun to come in in answer to the letters.

Extends Studio Lease

J. Stuart Blackton, while working on the scenario of the next picture he has scheduled for production, has extended the contract renting his studio in Brooklyn to the Macdon Comedy Company for another month. He expects that when the time has expired he will have his script in "shooting" shape, and will resume activities in the plant himself.

Corporal J. Stuart Blackton, Jr., who was recently mustered out of service with the 59th Coast Artilltry, having been active as a dispatch bearer in France, is now on his father's payroll as an employe of the Blackton Productions, Inc.

Emerson-Loos Score New Ten-Strike

A new announcement from Famous Players-Lasky contends that no production that has come from John Emerson and Anita Loos has received such endorsements and praises from officials of the organization as their latest production, "Oh You Women," a satire on the returning home of the boys who fought across the seas.

Preparations are now under way for a gigantic exploitation campaign by the advertising and publicity departments for the benefit of exhibitors throughout the country.

The story of the production deals with the very delicate problem of what a fellow is going to do when he gets back home and finds the girls on the job. Despite the satirical handling of the subject the theme has a very interesting purpose behind it all, in that it drives home the thought that while it was all very fine indeed for a woman to take a man's place while he went to war, it is all wrong to consider keeping it when he comes home.

Ernest Truex plays the leading role in "Oh You Women." He is supported by Louise Huff.

Metro Buys One for Viola Dana

Maxwell Karger, Director General of Metro, has secured for the next subject of Viola Dana, a well-known novel by a well-known writer of fiction and plays. "Madelon" is the name of the novel and its author is Mary E. Wilkins, sometimes known as Mary E. Wilkins Freeman or Mrs. Freeman.

It is a story of life in the lumber camps, and in some ways the titular role warrants comparison with that of Bret Harte's "M'Liss."

"Madelon" was selected by Mr. Karger because of its singular fitness for Miss Dana's comedy talents. Edwin Carewe will direct the star, assisted by Webster Cullison.

Dallas Responds to Hal Norfleet

Many Converts to Ranks of Fans When First National Picture Comes to Town—Exhibitor Helps Put It Over

THE "never-go-to-a-movie" class among the residents of Dallas, Texas, are willing now to admit that the right kind of exhibitors' showmanship has succeeded in converting them partly, if not entirely, to the enjoyment of an evening in a motion picture theatre.

Like many other progressive managers, Hal Norfleet, in charge of the Hippodrome theatre of Dallas, believes that the box office line never can become too long.

The opportunity presented itself to him in his booking of "The Fighting Roosevelts," the McClure production of the life of Colonel Roosevelt released through First National Exhibitors' Circuit, to make a direct appeal to the ultra-conservative element of Dallas.

He concluded that the ordinary mediums and advertising and publicity would not serve his purpose. The class of prospective patrons he wanted to reach would have to be impressed in a more direct and intimate way. Anything that would associate his efforts to interest them with the routine run of activity in behalf of the regular attractions he felt would be a handicap. So he started work along new lines.

The public library was the scene of the first attack on the susceptibilities of the U. C.'s. On its shelves were copies of practically every book written by Colonel Roosevelt. An explanation to the librarian won the cooperation of the institution to the extent of a display card announcement of the availability of these works.

Every teacher of English in the Dallas High Schools asked his or her pupils to prepare essays on the life of the former President. This prompted an interest which the pupils discussed at home.

"I figured," said Norfleet, "that not one of these pupils would fail to respond to my newspaper advertisements of the fact that the production portrayed his life and activities. They would surely want to see how nearly their versions of his life, as related in their essays, conformed to the screen version."

The various local chapters of the American Red Cross all held regular meetings the week preceding the opening of "The Fighting Roosevelts" at the Hippodrome. The executive head of each chapter had been notified by Norfleet of the forthcoming presentation, and of the fact that Colonel Roosevelt virtually had willed his share of the profits, until all men in service had been returned to their homes, to the Red Cross. There was not a chapter meeting at which a speech was not made announcing this fact, and members were urged to attend, both in support of the Red Cross pledge, and out of respect to the former President.

This carried the news into more homes. Dallas became genuinely interested.

The announcement was conveyed to the Red Cross auxiliaries in all of the Dallas clubs, including the most exclusive of the women's organizations, into the public schools and private schools and many of the industrial concerns where the Red Cross has other auxiliaries.

Y. M. C. A. secretaries in Dallas who act as instructors for the working boys' classes were told about the production by Norfleet. They, in turn, told their classes. Records at the Hippodrome show that the attendance from this source was almost one hundred per cent.

And so, between the Public Library and its branches, the American Red Cross and its auxiliaries, and the Y. M. C. A., Norfleet struck directly at the class who had rarely, if ever, patronized motion pictures, and he won them over. Word-of-mouth advertising did it. People talked about the production, not because they had first read his newspaper copy, but because they had heard it at a Red Cross meeting, because the oldest boy or girl was writing an essay for his or her High School English teacher on Colonel Roosevelt's life, or because the library was featuring his books.

Special attention was given to the balance of the program at the Hip.

Extraordinary care was taken with the musical program; the lighting effects were painstakingly arranged, and everything possible was done by Norfleet to convince the new patrons that his theatre was an ideal place for comfort, and superlative entertainment.

"And it paid well," he commented. "We saw hundreds of new faces in line. We listened to their opinions as they left the theatre. Some of them had been to a picture show for the first time. They thought it was wonderful. They'll be back."

Setting a Fast Pace

So that the Universal releasing schedule of one two-reel Western drama each week may be maintained, three companies are said to be now working on these special productions at Universal City. Jacques Jaccard, Jack Ford and Norman Dawn are directing these companies and by putting in extra hours recently they have been able to get their productions several weeks ahead of schedule, it is announced.

Ready for New One

Marion Davies, who has been resting for two weeks, following the completion of her latest picture, "Getting Married Mary," directed by Allan Dwan, expects to begin work on a new production next week, in the Backer-Bacon studios, the title of which has not yet been announced, although it is said that the story will be a screen version of a well-known novel.

Alice Joyce Film Creates Interest

Vitagraph Booking Chart Shows That "The Cambric Mask" Is Sought After—Expected to Be Unusual Subject

AS the date of the release of "The Cambric Mask" draws nearer, interest in this newest Alice Joyce offering is said to grow apace. This trend is made apparent by that unfailing barometer, the booking chart, which is as exact and as unimaginative as the medical tabulation that hangs in the baseboard of a patient's bed, according to Vitagraph's announcement.

"Especially stimulated has been this unprecedented early demand for bookings by the current success of Miss Joyce in 'The Lion and the Mouse,'" said Vitagraph.

It is reported by the Vitagraph home office, where advance screenings of "The Cambric Mask" have already taken place, that the picture is a worthy successor of "The Lion and the Mouse." Production analysts have argued that the achievement of an unusually strong picture by star and staff is sometimes followed by a slump, slighter, or greater, depending on the recuperative faculties of the company.

No such artistic reaction is visible in the new Joyce picture and Vitagraph's star is credited with making two powerful productions in a row. Especially effective in atmosphere and with the feeling of evil portent ever present, this mystery play is counted on to prove a big winner.

It was directed by Tom Terriss, who directed "The Lion and the Mouse" and other recent Alice Joyce pictures. In the cast supporting Miss Joyce are to be seen Maurice Costello, Herbert Pattee, Roy Applegate, Bernard Siegel, Jules Cowles, Martin Faust and Florence DeShon.

Robert W. Chambers' famous novel of the same name forms the groundwork of "The Cambric Mask."

Ince Gives Full Time to Direction

Thomas H. Ince plans to make, during the next few months, several subjects under his own personal direction, and the preparatory work for these films for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, is now being done at the studio at Culver City. Ince, since the making of his Paramount-Artcraft contract, has had this work in mind, for his previous contract specified that he should make three personally directed productions. However, the work of re-organizing his staff of directors, writers and others identified with production, together with the building of a new studio, has taken all his time. Now that this work is finished, he is giving considerable of his time each day to stories which he will personally direct. At the studio it was stated Mr. Ince's present contract guarantees a profit of $60,000 on personally directed subjects.

Women Help Change Title for Pathe Film

"THE UNKNOWN LOVE" has been substituted for the title of "Stars of Glory," Leonce Perret's emotional six-reel Pathe special feature, starring Dolores Cassinelli with E. K. Lincoln. It was chosen from thousands of suggestions from women all over the country, a surprising number of whom selected some variation of the title. The widely circulated "love and heart questionnaire" showed that the proposition set forth in Mr. Perret's wonderful story carried the most intimate appeal to both a woman's heart and her imagination.

In finally deciding the title, subject to the approval of the author and director of the play, the committee of Pathe Exchange Home Office, specially selected by Paul Brunet, Vice-President and General Manager, had regarded the romance from every angle, analyzed it and closely fixed its emotional values. The story is so fascinatingly unusual in its relation to the Girl and the Man, so big and inclusive in its sweep of patriotic feeling that it offered many points of titling.

"It is a picture of the same large impressiveness of 'Lafayette We Come,' the same deft art and sympathy in the titling, the same genius of pictorial beauty of modeling; but so dominant is the heart interest that all else is diminished beside it," said Pathe.

Williams Commends Outing Chester Films

One of the most sincere and, at the same time the most practical compliment that Outing Chester Pictures has received, comes from James D. Williams, president of the First National Exhibitors Circuit. In booking these films which are produced by C. L. Chester in co-operation with Outing Magazine and released by First National Exchanges all over the country, Mr. William says:

"I cannot emphasize strongly enough my faith in educational films in general and the Outing Chester type of film in particular. The public have learned to appreciate them and demand them more and more. In fact, there are a large class of people who go to the moving pictures chiefly to see the scenic and the topical reviews."

Hugh Ford Completes a Special

"The Woman Thou Gavest Me" Slated as Paramount-Artcraft Release—Promises Much in Way of Scenes

HUGH FORD, it is announced, has taken the final scenes of "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," finishing a picture which has been two months in the making at Hollywood. The picture would have been finished a week earlier but for the fact that weather conditions prevented the filming of the final scenes, which are exteriors.

One of the scenes is supposed to represent the Antarctic regions, whither the hero has gone as an explorer. The nearest real snow to the studio was far up in the mountains, so it was decided to manufacture the blizzard.

A northern landscape was built on the exterior stage, showing an igloo, a few sleds, and lots of snow and ice. The snow was made of salt, spread thickly all over the ground, while the igloo was made of plaster. A most realistically cold looking landscape resulted.

For the blizzard, two wind-machines, made of aeroplane motors and propellors, were placed at opposite sides of the stage. Directly above each of these were stationed stage hands with boxes of asbestos powder, which bears a startling resemblance to snow. As the propellors whizzed, the snow was thrown down in front of them, and blown onto the set. In the centre the two mighty air currents met and whirled the asbestos snow around in vicious gales. The actors who were on the scene were just about as badly blown as though they had been in a real blizzard, for the wind made by two propellors is very powerful.

A street in front of a London theatre, in a typical London fog, was the locale for the final scenes.

Scenically, this picture, which is a Paramount-Artcraft Special, promises to be one of the biggest ever made. Scarcely a spot on the globe is not included in its locations. When it is realized that practically every setting was built in the studio it will be evident how elaborate a production it is. Among the localities seen in the picture are Scotland, London, Cairo, Biskra, India, America and the Antarctic regions.

Pathe Gets New Pearson Features

"The Bishop's Emeralds" Is Announced as the First Release Under the New Distributing Arrangements

Announcement comes from Pathe Exchange that Virginia Pearson Photoplays, Inc., has chosen that organization as its medium of distribution. The new producing company will make six or eight pictures during the coming year, the first of which is "The Bishop's Emeralds," adapted from Houghton Townley's famous novel by Frank Beresford. The other stories will be based on well-known novels and plays and at least two stories specially written for the star by masters of modern fiction, announcements of which will be made at a later date.

Miss Pearson will have associated with her Sheldon Lewis, firmly established by his work on the speaking stage, but known wherever motion pictures are shown through his long connection with Pathe serials. The Thanhouser studio at New Rochelle has been leased for the productions, which will be in charge of John O'Brien, vice-president and director-general of the organization. His thorough experience in the technical end of production and his list of achievements as a director of first-class attractions, are a guaranty of the quality that he brings to the new project.

The president of Virginia Pearson Photoplays, Inc., is Louis Meyer, and the treasurer Paul Meyer, both of whom are prominently known as the publishers of the Theatre Magazine.

There is abundant capital back of the enterprise and Miss Pearson, whose popularity steadily has grown from year to year, can now have produced the quality of play in which she feels she can make the greatest appeal and give the greatest amount of entertainment to her legion of admirers. They will be notable productions, it is promised—better stories, better pictures and a better investiture and exploitation of a tremendously popular star.

"When an actress of Virginia Pearson's intelligence, beauty and histrionic ability, finds her vehicle of expression limited—there is only one thing to do; and Miss Pearson did it," said Mr. Louis Meyer, in discussing the enterprise.

Montagu Love Appears in "The Net"

Montagu Love, the well-known World Picture star, will be again identified with the spoken drama. He has joined the company, presenting "The Net," which is now running at the Forty-eighth Street Theatre, New York. Mr. Love is playing the leading role. This does not mean that Mr. Love has forsaken the screen. A story for a super picture is now being written in which Mr. Love is to create the pivotal character, and as soon as the manuscript has been delivered to the World, he will again take up his work as a film star.

Folks are growing mighty fond of Harry Carey. His isn't the super-deadly stuff that would make him always the deadly same. Carey's different with every picture, simply because he's a good actor. And yet there's always the inimitable Carey flavor in every move he makes. He gets 'em because he lets 'em in on the joke. His love-making isn't grim lipped—it's gayly debonair—yet when there's quick-trigger work to do Harry's the real peruvian doughnuts thru and thru. Up in Portland, Oregon, Armstrong of the Strand says: "I only wish I could have him every four weeks as I surely could depend on a banner time."

Harry Carey in "A Fight For Love"

THIS is a strong Western story and if you have booked "A Fight for Love" you want to get the punch in your display and show the public that the picture has plenty of action in it. Couple the name of Harry Carey up strong with this statement, for the average patron expects things to be happening all the time when he is in the cast.

Practically every bit of this picture is made out of doors and this should be pointed out to those that like to get out in the open. The red-blooded character of the story should be given its appeal. There is another angle that will be interesting while the prohibition discussion is so strong, and that is the exposure of "whiskey running" that the production affords.

Naturally you will play the name of Harry Carey stronger than anything, especially if he has been seen in your section in any of his recent successes, "Straight Shooting," "Hell Bent," "Three Mounted Men" and "Roped." One of the effects of the war was to interest the people in things virile and we would refer to the fact that in this picture Carey portrays the sort of a type that has made the Americans stand out as real fighters. You can well afford to take into consideration the returning soldier element and that this appeal will go strong with them.

BRIEF outline of the story of "A Fight for Love" scarcely gives a full idea of the action in it. Cheyenne Harry is wanted as a cattle rustler; but, with the sheriff and posse on his trail, he makes for Canada and just over the boundary line he dismounts and calmly rolls and lights a cigarette, to the dismay of the officers of the law, But the sheriff is not altogether without his revenge for he notifies the Canadian Northwest Mounted Police of Cheyenne's presence and a watch is kept upon him.

One column star cut for newspaper or advertising

Cheyenne drifts into an Indian camp and there wins the friendship of the chief and an Indian girl. But at that time there arrives on the scene Black Michael, who is engaged in the occupation of selling whiskey to the Indians and who has also wronged the Indian girl. There is some humor injected into the situation here as Cheyenne and Indians indulge too freely and beat the tom-tom on the bottom of the whiskey barrels. There follows the first clash between Carey and the half-breed. The Indian girl befriends Cheyenne and he escapes just as the Canadian police are seeking him. It is at that point that the fighting priest, one of the interesting characters of the picture, appears.

But Cheyenne's love affair really comes with his first sight of Kate McDougal, daughter of the factor, and here again crosses the trail of Black Michael, who is making love to the girl and taking advantage of the fact that he and the factor are linked together in the whiskey traffic. From this time on things happen quick and fast.

CHEYENNE has first seen Kate wading in the river and when he meets her at the store he tells her: "I sure admire your river scenery," and this girl of the northwoods didn't know whether to be pleased or shocked by the plain spoken cowboy from the States. And here Harry also expresses his opinion of the half-breed with: "I'm getting tired of looking at your face. If you come back here again, check it outside."

Then follows a fight at the store with the gang of whiskey runners, Cheyenne battling three of them until the fighting priest gets in with his wallop and the battle is quickly over. But in the meantime the Indian girl's father has been killed and Cheyenne is accused of the crime and he is compelled to flee from the Canadian police again just at the time that Black Michael carries off Kate. With her he seeks the island where Cheyenne is hiding and there follows a desperate fight on the cliffs, Cheyenne spurning a pistol to meet his opponent with his bare hands.

It is a fight with all the dramatic thrills, luck turning first one way and the other until Cheyenne is able to master his opponent, who dies after confessing that the crimes charged against the American are his own. And of course he wins the girl. For he has won her just as truly as did the knight of old after he had fixed his opponent at the head of a lance.

THEREFORE you do not have to concern yourself very largely with the story itself, for the interest does not rest on any problems, any mysterious situations on anything of the sort, but rather the virility of the characters.

This is not one of the sort of "Westerners" that carries a lot of "gun play" and we would make that clear through the selling talks that you use. The humanness is another point to be brought out. Most of the Western stories are admittedly impossible of occurrence today and they are gotten around by setting them years ago. But "A Fight for Love" might just as well have happened yesterday as any other time.

Now while this is a typical Harry Carey picture, it is a strange thing that there is not a cowboy in it. That at least makes it "different." So with the purpose of getting the eye of the Carey fans we would suggest that one of the advertisements read something like this:

"Harry Carey is always doing something 'different' in his pictures. When you saw him in 'Roped,' you'll remember that there was only a flash of the West, but his cowboys were right in the action, even if they were wearing dress suits. But here is a Harry Carey picture without a cowboy in it.

"But don't jump to the conclusion that there isn't plenty of action. There are real Indians, whiskey runners, a fighting priest and the Canadian Northwest Police, and something doing all the time. And at the end there comes one of the greatest fights that Cheyenne Harry ever put up, the sort that makes you come up to the edge of your seat and almost ready to cry out your encouragement to the man who is making a desperate battle for the girl he loves."

EXHIBITORS who have made it a practice of playing the same stars regularly and where those stars generally run true to type often find that it is a good idea to use the same picture of the player with each production. They find that it is something like a "trade-mark."

But we believe that in this case, and especially if you are able to make your own cuts, we would prefer to get as much of the woman appeal as possible. Women like to see action pictures just as well as men, but they are appealed to the more strongly when it is made clear to them that the fight is for one of their own sex. Among the stills with this offering there are several that show Cheyenne and the girl together, and they will attract immediate attention of the reader. Below this there should be the selling talk laying the more emphasis on the action.

Incidentally, exhibitors should not lose sight of the fact that Neva Gerber is the leading woman in this picture. She hasn't a very large part, but she has a big following that is likely to get more business than if you failed to mention her name.

Here's a little idea that appeals to us because it varies from the usual sort of matter that is offered to your patrons:

"What do you want in a photoplay?"

"A real hero, a pretty girl and plenty of action."

"The tang of the outdoors, the thrill of combat and charm of love?"

"You have all these here and with them you have real Indians, and the whiskey runners of the Northwest, the romance of an Indian maid and a fighting parson who knows how to use his fists as well as the gospel. It's a picture that will appeal to the clean-minded, to all who love romance and fair play."

Treatment of this production should vary a little acording to the manner in which it is placed as compared with other sorts of productions. In short if you have had comedy features, society or problem dramas or anything of the sort, the public is much more apt to appreciate your argument when you make it clear that this is a red-blooded drama, but we would add—"without continuous gun-play."

Here are a few lines that can be sprinkled in with the smaller space advertising:

"'I shore do like you river scenery,' Cheyenne told the factor's daughter after he had seen her wading, and the girl thought that he was 'too fresh.' But later she appreciated the genuineness of him when he threw away his gun and grappled with the half-breed with his two hands, won the battle and the girl with it."

"If you have a feeling of disdain for preachers because you think they won't fight, you'll change your mind when you see the Fighting Priest in 'A Fight for Love.' He knew that the way to go after the whiskey runners was not with pulpit discourse, but man to man. And, oh fellows, what a wallop he did carry in those two fists of his."

"Cheyenne Harry had a little war of his own. First the sheriff chased him across the Canadian border, and there he fell under suspicion as a whiskey runner and then was accused as a slayer; but right, plus a good right arm, always prevails, and it does here. We'll guarantee that you don't stop thrilling a moment until Cheyenne takes the girl in his arms with the end of the picture."

Spirit of the Open Should Be Played With This One

EVEN if we cannot tell much about the vagaries of the weather man after such a season as we have had spring is in the air and there is the lure of out of doors. That spirit is stirring in "A Fight for Love," and it ought to be made dominant in your exploitation. That may seem far-fetched to some, but is there any less reason for timing a picturing with a particular season than there is in playing a film with the holiday spirit at Christmas time.

We do not mean that we would come out and say in so many words, "Here is a spring-time picture," but certainly you should take advantage of the fact that just at this time of year everyone has the yearning for the outdoors, for life and action, and these features of the production should be brought out as strongly as possible. If you use circular letters to your patrons here is one that you might try:

"Old winter has passed away and all of us are feeling along these days for the open country, for the forests and the streams, for the great out-doors. The spirit of doing things is in us all; there's snap and pep everywhere.

"It is just that spirit that is supplied in Harry Carey's new picture, "A Fight for Love." Even inside of the Empire theatre you'll feel the call of the wild, the lure of nature. Practically all of this one has been made out of doors, in California's celebrated Bear Valley. There are the mountains and rushing streams—all action everywhere. Indians, whiskey runners, half-breed desperadoes and Canadian Northwest mounted police figure in this one—with Carey and a pretty girl.

"Watching this picture is like getting a vacation. And then it is so different from most of those that you see that the novelty will appeal."

OF course, this same argument can be used in your newspaper displays and in that case we would use the cut that shows the girl putting on her stockings after wading in the river and Carey with his hat over his eyes.

READY FOR YOU

Material that You Can Get at Your Exchange

AS a convenience for the exhibitors who have booked this picture we are listing here the material which is ready prepared and which can be obtained at your local exchange.

The paper includes two one-sheets, two 3-sheets, a 6-sheet and a 24-sheet.

For newspaper advertising purposes there are ready prepared designs, either in mat or electro form in one, two and three-column sizes.

There is a one-column cut of the star and two- and three-column cuts.

There are sets of 8 by 10 and 11 by 14 stills, together with a stock picture of the stor. There are slides and a music cue.

In case you try this plan eliminate the adjectives and thereby get the appeal infectious as possible.

We would ignore anything of the usual "Western stuff" in the lobby displays—saddles, guns and the like. You can make your lobby most attractive and simple by covering the walls with fragrant evergreens, the pungent pine boughs, if it is possible to get them. If the early wild-flowers like the dogwood or even the fruit trees are in season with you bunches of these will add to the attractiveness of the display.

And occasionally things like this are worth more to your future business than all the "flashes" in the world.

Cut-outs of Carey's head which may be obtained from either the 24-sheet or one of the one sheets is all the rest of the decoration that you need.

THIS picture should be given a comedy setting, the lighter the better, although there is nothing gruesome or tragic about the feature. But after witnessing one of these tense fights which comes at the very close one likes to have a lot of laughs to fall back upon.

On account of the fact that there is so much exterior stuff here you will not need the usual scenic here, but if you can get hold of any animal picture, or better still one that shows fishing scenes, it will fit in mighty well with the whole spirit.

All of your musical selections should be of the lively character and if you use vocal selections it would be better to employ male voices here and keep the airs lively.

There is an excellent musical program available prepared by James C. Bradford, musical director of the Broadway theatre. Most of the selections are action music, there being several Indian selections excellently used while the theme is "Jealous Moon" for the white girl and "Lament" from Victor Herbert's "Natoma" for the Indian girl.

AS a general rule it is the women that bring the patronage to your theatre, and this especially is true in the case of the married folk. But here is a case where we would take the trouble of making a straight-out man appeal.

Without placing too much emphasis on the fact that there is plenty of physical combat here, we would suggest that you secure the use of pictures of Carey and scenes from the production in the leading sporting goods and mens furnishing stores. You wont need to use a lot of selling argument here. For instance if the pictures are placed amid a display of spring fashions for the stronger sex, simply have the pictures neatly mounted and then use with them the lines:

"If you want to see what a man should be like when he has to face whiskey runners and half-breeds in the Canadian wilds, see Harry Carey in 'A Fight for Love' at the Empire theatre this week.

"But this is not Canada, though we know that we have the very best sort of men here. You want to look like one, so come in and let us show you how we can do our part."

United Reviews Its First Year

Shows Great Progress Since Inception and Promises Much for Second Year—Releases Considered Up to Standard

WITH the advent of the first anniversary of its foundation, and with its operations in full swing for entry upon its second year of activity, there comes from United Picture Theatres of America a resume of achievements to date and of plans for the future.

Following upon a period of construction and organization under the leadership of Lee A. Ochs, and the later accession of J. A. Berst to the office of United's president, concrete progress from what was at first the germ of an idea has been effected, until at the close of its first year United reports that its service extends to no less than 2100 theatres throughout the country. The basic idea of an exhibitor-owned and exhibitor-controlled co-operative organization has been adhered to, and the primal object of supplying exhibitors with high class productions at low co-operative prices, it is claimed, has been concretely accomplished.

A glance at the subjoined list of members of United's Advisory Board bears out the claim that United's members include a larger percentage of the prominent exhibitors of the country. Foremost among other duties this board is constituted for the purpose of passing upon material for productions and upon productions already available, and under consideration for inclusion among United offerings. The Advisory Board roster for the coming year as is announced by United comprises the following twenty-six members: John P. Harris, Pittsburgh, Pa.; I. W. Brophy, Muskogee, Okla.; Herman J. Brown, Boise, Idaho; L. J. Chamberlain, Shamokin, Pa.; M. E. Comerford, Scranton, Pa.; Harry M. Crandall, Washington, D. C.; H. W. Ellison, Denver, Colo.; Thomas Furniss, Duluth, Minn.; George H. Grieves (Moore & Grieves), Colorado Springs; M. H. Hanauer, Salt Lake City, Utah; Ike Libson, Cincinnati, Ohio; W. J. Hayes, Erie, Pa.; Ernest H. Horstman, Boston, Mass.; T. L. Kearse, Charleston, W. Va.; Lubliner & Trinz, Chicago; C. A. McElravy, Memphis, Tenn.; William Nevils, Dallas, Texas; C. M. Olsen, Indianapolis, Ind.; Richards & Flynn, Kansas City, Mo.; Ruben & Finkelstein, Minneapolis, Minn.; Tom Saxe, Milwaukee, Wis.; George Simpson (Regorson Corp.), Rochester, N. Y.; Thomas Soriero, Boston, Mass. These individual exhibitors, themselves leasing or controlling four score theatres in their respective districts, are held to be thoroughly representative of exhibitor opinion and exhibitor requirements, and consequently to reflect through the Advisory Board the most advantageous selection of screen material for the extensive body of exhibitors served by United throughout the country.

In the field of its accomplishments United points to splendid progress made toward its ultimate plan of weekly releases. Its releases to date, it is said, have set a high standard of quality and effective appeal, a standard which was inaugurated by the initial offerings, "The Light of Western Stars."

Exhibitor Renames Theatre Select

Down in Andrews, S. C., there is an exhibitor who is so enthusiastic over Select Pictures and Select Stars that he has announced his intention of re-naming his theatre, now the Princess, to Select theatre, and in addition has requested everything that bears the Select trade-mark, specials and all. This exhibitor's name is G. K. Hanks, and in a recent letter to Select's Atlanta Branch, he says:

"It gives me pleasure to state that your productions, in every respect, are the best ever exhibited in this town. My patrons have gone wild over Select productions; not alone for the subjects, but the richness of the backgrounds, the perfect photography and the physical condition of the reels—not a hitch. I certainly feel proud that we were fortunate enough to secure these pictures and at such reasonable cost, practically nothing, taking into consideration the A-1 quality. You are certainly to be congratulated on such productions. If there is any small-town exhibitor suffering with 'Vacant Seats A-Plenty' I cheerfully recommend Selects, for I am now convinced that is my long-sought remedy."

A few days after the receipt of this letter, the Atlanta Branch heard from Mr. Hanks again, and this time in praise of Marion Davies and "Cecelia of the Pink Roses."

In a letter to W. A. Bach, formerly his associate and temporarily representing his interests in New York while he was visiting the West Coast, C. E. Shurtleff, formerly general sales manager of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation and at one time sales manager for Select, declares that he has just closed a deal with Mrs. Charmiam London, wife of the late Jack London, for the exclusive rights for five years to all the screen rights of that author.

From information at present available it would seem that some of the first of the Shurtleff-London Productions will be "The Call of the North," "Smoke Bellew" and "Odyssey of the North."

Does Well Below Mason and Dixon Line

Reports from the Southern branch offices of Vitagraph are to the effect that "Miss Dulcie From Dixie," the new Gladys Leslie release, is attracting widespread attention in that territory from local exhibitors not merely on the score of its dramatic interest, but because of its wonderfully realistic depiction of Southern manners and atmosphere.

In "Miss Dulcie from Dixie" Miss Leslie has the support of such Vitagraphers as James Morrison, Charles Kent, Arthur Donaldson and Julia Swayne Gordon. The story of the play is from the novel of the same title by Lulah Ragsdale.

Stone Makes Eight for World Program

Lewis S. Stone, the well-known star of the legitimate stage, has signed contracts whereby he is to make eight pictures a year to be released by the World Film Corporation. His first production bears the title of "Man's Desire." Mr. Stone will make all his pictures in California. Jane Novak will be his leading woman in the first release.

House Peters In It

House Peters will make his second appearance on the Hodkinson Service program in "Thunderbolts of Fate," an Edward Warren production, in which Anna Lehr is also featured. The story, suggested to Winifred Dunn by an act in an original play by Harry S. Sheldon, is a highly dramatic one in which love and politics clash.

Studio Scenes Are Most Effective

HUGH FORD, who is directing the Paramount-Artcraft Special production of "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," from Hall Caine's novel, believes that better effects can be obtained right in the studio than can be secured by taking a motion picture company abroad to get locations.

Many foreign countries are used as settings in the picture—Egypt, India, England, etc. All of these locations are of course being constructed in the studio, but instead of regretting the impossibility of actually going to these lands for making the picture, Mr. Ford is of the opinion that the results, were this done, would not be so good.

"I have travelled all over the world, and have made many pictures in their real locales," he said, "and I have come to the conclusion that it is much better to build the sets instead of to go to them. With the progress of scenic structure in the past few years, an exact replica of any building or any sort of building or scene can be built. And it can be made exactly as the director wants it.

"If I were making a picture in Egypt, for instance, I might find a place which would be ideal except for the lack of a tree or a lake. If I found the lake, something would be wrong with that. And as nature is never perfect artistically, one has to compromise. In the studio I can put the tree where I like, stick a lake in the center or on the side and arrange to suit myself.

"A painter is fortunate, because he can take only as much of a scene as he needs. But the camera takes all there is, and cannot make the selection that is required.

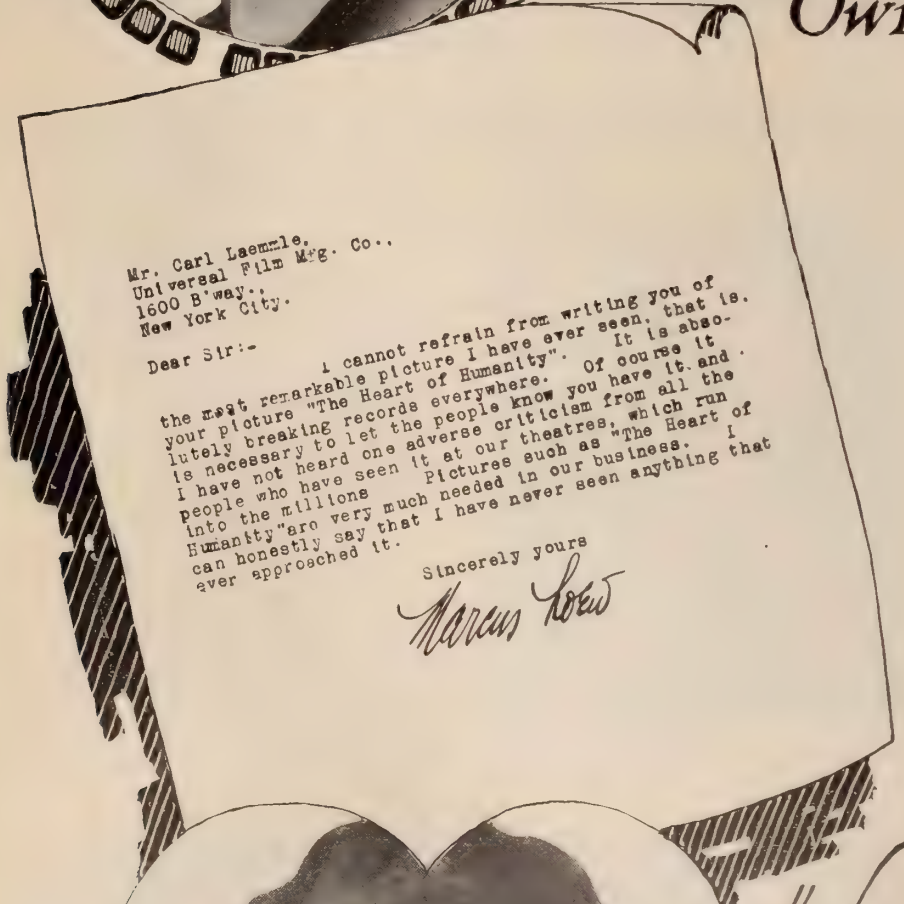
"I went to Rome to make 'The Eternal City' with Pauline Frederick and except for a very few scenes, such as the famous Coliseum, which, of course, could not be successfully reproduced, we secured nothing which could not have been made as well or better in the studio.

"So instead of going to Cairo, for instance, we have erected a building that is almost a facsimile of the Shepherd's Hotel in that city. Those who are familiar with the original will hardly know that the scenes weren't taken there. In the same way we have built Indian bungalows, English streets, etc."

Mr. Ford is a firm believer, however, that travel is necessary to the director. As he has visited every country in the world he knows whether a reproduction of a scene in that country is right or wrong, and the director who has never been there, but is simply working from books or pictures, is apt to make some very apparent mistakes.

Famous Players Engages Houdini for Films

HARRY HOUDINI, well known in vaudeville in all countries as the handcuff king and escape artist, has been engaged by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to appear in motion pictures. The contract, which is for a long term, was closed by Jesse L. Lasky and Mr. Houdini last week, and work on the initial picture will be started about May 1 at the Famous Players-Lasky studios in Hollywood, California. Of late, Houdini's specialty has been that of extricating himself from a straightjacket within a few seconds. His act is now one of the feature attractions at the New York Hippodrome. Possessing unusual ability as an actor and an attractive personality, he has been in great demand during the Liberty Loan Campaigns and the various war fund drives and has given unstintingly of his time and talents.



Although the name of Houdini's director is not available at this time, it is said that the productions in which he will appear will offer high class mystery stories, especially written for him and affording him opportunity to properly present his most startling feats. In fact, A. B. Reeve, author of the famous "Craig Kennedy" stories, and John W. Gray are now collaborating on a story which may be his initial vehicle.

"Virtuous Men" Claims Many Good Points

WHAT is said to be one of the most important productions of the past few years is now entirely ready for presentation by its sponsors, Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin. "Virtuous Men" is the picture in question. It stars E. K. Lincoln, was personally directed by Ralph Ince, and contains one of the most notable casts ever assembled before the camera.

"Virtuous Men" was conceived by A. H. Sawyer and Ralph Ince and tells a big virile story of melodramatic "punch," dealing with a subject which at the present time occupies the attention of newspapers and public to the exclusion of all else. The picture was over three months in the making, and is said to be the supreme effort of Ralph Ince, whose name has been linked with a series of unbroken screen successes. It has many remarkable physical attributes and will form a film entertainment over seven reels in length.

"Virtuous Men" cost over $150,000 to produce. Five cameras were used to insure photographic perfection, thirty massive and unusual sets were constructed for the production under the direction of Charles Chapman, five distinct spectacular efforts costing thousands of dollars mark the unfolding of the story and over 10,000 supernumeraries were used by Ralph Ince in several exterior scenes.

The star role will be interpreted by E. K. Lincoln, supported by Clara Joel, Broadway favorite; Grace Darling, W. B. Mack, Robert W. Cummings, William Blonkhall, Edward Talbot, Irving Brooks, William Cohill, Danney Hayes and others well known on stage and screen. Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin will present "Virtuous Men" in the near future on Broadway as a special screen entertainment.

"Freedom of the East" Claims Big Success

A REPORT compiled by the Sales Department of Goldwyn Distributing Corporation is said to show that the Betzwood Film Company's melodrama, "For the Freedom of the East," released as a special by Goldwyn, has reached a total of bookings that bids fair to outdo the popularity of any current independent production in the market.

Goldwyn branch managers, in submitting their bookings and reports, point out that "For the Freedom of the East" has drawn heavy patronage from large and small theatres in all territories of the United States and Canada. The statistical data also records that the special has been given extended engagements by nearly half of the exhibitors who have booked it. A typed copy of the report will be mailed to exhibitors as facts-and-figures proof of the popularity of the production, Goldwyn says.

Starring the screen's first and only Chinese star, Lady Tsen Mei, and depicting the struggles of a beautiful Oriental princess in defense of her honor and that of her native land, "For the Freedom of the East" presents what is declared to be one of the most exciting melodramas and forms an absorbing story of the relations of the East with the West. Like "Madame Butterfly" and other celebrated operatic and legitimate stage plays bearing upon the romance of an Oriental girl and an American hero, "For the Freedom of the East," is made all the more human because of the mingled pathos and happiness of its story of undying love.

"The Avalanche" Bought for Artcraft

The screen rights to Gertrude Atherton's novel, "The Avalanche," was purchased by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and will appear as an Artcraft offering starring Elsie Ferguson.

It is likely that "The Avalanche" will be Miss Ferguson's next picture following the completion of "The Witness for the Defense."

Earl Metcalf Will Direct Flagg Comedies

LIEUTENANT EARL METCALFE, former screen actor and more recently of France, where he helped New York's "Fighting 69th" put over the wallop that spelled the downfall of Kaiserism, has been engaged to direct Paramount-Flagg comedies by Jack Eaton, of Town and Country Films, Inc., the producers of the Paramount-Flagg comedies, releasing on the Paramount program.

About ten years ago Mr. Metcalfe was playing character leads in western stock and more recently juvenile roles on the screen. In August of 1917 he graduated from the Plattsburg Training Camp with a commission of lieutenant of infantry and was assigned to the 165th Infantry, popularly known as "The Fighting 69th," of New York. He sailed for France in October of the same year and saw action for the first time in the Toul sector near Luneville, France. After a year in France he returned on a special mission and while in this country the armistice was signed. Shortly after he was honorably discharged. He recently completed an engagement as leading man for Alice Brady in a picture directed by Charles Maigne and was cast for the co-starring part with Claire Whitney in an Abraham Schomer six-reel comedy drama. He is now engaged in directing his first Paramount-James Montgomery Flagg comedy.

"Heart of Humanity" as a Road Show

J. V. Bryson, manager of the Universal exchange at Minneapolis and who has guided the exceptional run of "The Heart of Humanity" at the Shubert theatre, Minneapolis, for the past month, has begun booking the big Holubar film throughout his territory as a road show. "The Heart of Humanity" road show, No. 1, which opened its tour at St. Cloud, Minn., March 3, has proceeded to Fargo, N. D., and will then follow a route which will carry it through Wahpeton, Crookston and the Iron Range district prior to going through Central and Southern Minnesota.

Sol Lesser Buys Features That Make Records

"Yankee Doodle In Berlin" has been purchased from Hiram Abrams by Sol Lesser for the entire United States and its possessions, it is announced.

This five-reel Mack Sennett subject opened at the Tivoli theatre in San Francisco, Monday, March 3, and is said to have done ten thousand dollars on the week.

A report received from the manager of the T and D Circuit states that on March 9 the house record formerly held by Chaplin was smashed by "Yankee Doodle in Berlin." Another recent purchase made by Sol Lesser is "The Unpardonable Sin" for California, Arizona and Nevada. "Hearts of Men," produced by George Beban, is another feature that Mr. Lesser expects to clean up with.

"Silent Strength" Stars Harry Morey

Scenes which Vitagraph declares should stir the pride of Americans in America are said to abound in "Silent Strength," a new photoplay just produced by Vitagraph. Furthermore, a hero of a type that is American to the core, both by breeding and in the connection in which it is visualized, is the central figure of this new drama of the screen.

Paul Scardon directed "Silent Strength" and its superb locations are a credit to him. Supporting Harry Morey is a cast which includes Betty Blythe, George Majeroni, Robert Gaillard, Bernard Siegel, Herbert Pattee, and James Costello.

capacity of 2,100, with 1,150 on the lower floor and 950 in the balcony and boxes. When completed, it is said, the Colonial will be the last word in down-to-the-minute theatre construction.

The Broadway, Richmond's newest and most up-to-date motion picture theatre, will be opened to the public with Anita Stewart in "Virtuous Wives" as the initial attraction. While not the largest theatre in the city it will contain every comfort devised so far for its clientele.

The Atlanta theatre is to be built on Nash street by H. R. Mason and H. F. Stallings. It is expected to be ready by September.

Griffith Plans Season

D. W. Griffith, it is announced, will this Spring open a repertory season of his productions, old and new, at a New York theatre which has not been selected. The change of bill will be daily, semi-weekly or weekly, as the public may determine.

United Completes "Playthings of Passion"

A NEW starring subject for Kitty Gordon is announced as completed at the Brunton Studios for United Picture Theatres of America. Concurrently with the production of "Adele," and following the completion of that first Kitty Gordon United starring vehicle, work has been in progress on the forthcoming feature which is entitled, "Playthings of Passion." No pains or expense have been spared, it is reported, to insure a perfect production, and a period of two and a half months has been devoted to the making of the picture, United reports, in an effort to more than equal the high standard United has set for itself in productions already released.

The story is by William Anthony McGuire, scenarioed by Jack Cunningham, and was directed by Wallace Worsley, under the masterly (personal) supervision of Robert Brunton.

The story has to do with the career of a social butterfly, wife of a financier. In a spirit of fun she interests herself in the uplift campaign of a young clergyman whose forte is the social betterment of tenement dwellers. Levity changes to earnestness under the cleric's influence, and earnestness, in turn, develops a fascination in the young wife for the handsome clergyman. A crisis arises in which the latter is thrown face to face with a situation, to solve which he makes a startling sacrifice. The denouement of "Playthings of Passion" is said to be one of the most tensely startling scenes and an unusual twist of novelty is promised.

Michelena Comes Back to the Silver Sheet

AFTER an absence from the screen of more than a year word comes from the Coast that Beatriz Michelena, who is still fresh in the minds of the motion picture industry because of her previous big successes, "Salomy Jane," "Salvation Nell," "The Unwritten Law" and the "Woman Who Dared," will again be offered in another one of her unusual contributions to the silent drama.

According to present plans, a premiere showing of this Michelena subject "Just Squaw" will be given in New York City some time in April. This presentation will be in keeping with the bigness of the picture. The production activities of "Just Squaw" have been kept quiet until such time as the picture was completely finished. It was the desire of the producers to determine the entertaining value of the picture before announcing it to the market.

It is claimed by those who have been allowed a viewing of the film that "Just Squaw" not only equals anything that has been made by Miss Michelena in the past, but that in some of its particulars it surpasses her previous achievements in big screen productions.

Bert Lytell Stars in "Powers That Prey"

"POWERS THAT PREY" is the working title selected by Maxwell Karger, Director General at the Metro studios in Hollywood, for Bert Lytell's new "Boston Blackie" picture, now under production. Two of Jack Boyle's Red Book Magazine stories, "Boston Blackie's Mary" and "Fred, the Count," furnished the material for the scenario made by Finis Fox, of the Metro scenario staff.

In line with Director General Karger's policy of providing Metro stars with the most capable support available, Lytell again has a cast of exceptional strength. His leading woman is Alice Lake. Prominent in his support also are Henry Kolker, Joseph Kilgour and Frank Currier, who appeared with him in his last production, "Blind Man's Eyes"; Bernard Durning, Gertrude Short, William Musgrave and Jack Duffy.

Warner Gets Miss Castleton for Leads

BARBARA CASTLETON, considered by many one of the prettiest young actresses of the stage or screen, has been engaged as leading woman for Henry B. Warner, who has arrived in California to begin production for Jesse D. Hampton, who will release the Warner features through Exhibitors Mutual. The selection of Miss Castleton to play opposite him, was Warner's first official act after getting himself a home in Hollywood, and proceeding to the Hampton studios, there to be greeted by the entire Hampton force, and to proclaim his happiness at being in the glorious sunshine of California once again.

Barbara Castleton is well known to motion picture enthusiasts having appeared in a considerable number of features, including those on the World program. She had a leading role in "Parentage" and other independent films. Miss Castleton is a native of Arkansas but was educated in New York. She began her stage career in the success, "It Pays to Advertise," and was accorded a prominent role in "Madame Sherry." She is a very athletic young woman. This will be her first appearance in motion pictures produced by Jesse D. Hampton.

"The Man Who Turned White," which will re-introduce Warner to the motion picture public, is the work of F. McGrew Willis, a Los Angeles author. It was picturized by George Elwood Jenks of the Hampton scenario staff. The locale is the romantic country of the Soudan.

Back on Broadway

H. M. Berman, general manager of Universal exchanges and Tarkington Baker, general manager, returned to New York Monday, March 10 from Chicago, where the two conferred with Middle West exchange managers. The executives found things booming in the Windy City and learned from the outside exchange men in attendance at the conferences that, "The Heart of Humanity," the recent Jewel super-drama release, was proving one of the greatest box office attractions in cinema history.

Goes Big in Canada

Vitagraph announces that "The Common Cause" has caught on nicely in Canada, doing good business at theatres in Toronto and Montreal. Regina also reports favorably on the picture, it is declared.

"The Common Cause" was made by J Stuart Blackton, and features Herbert Rawlinson and Sylvia Breamer.

Another for President!

"President Wilson's trips across the briny appear to be one long session of motion pictures," said a film man this week.

Among the latest films announced as being on board the George Washington was "Belgium, the Kingdom of Grief." M. L. Fulton this week stated that the film would be used as propaganda during the coming Liberty Loan Campaign.

Sawyer-Lubin Title Is Praised

Justifying their choice of "Virtuous Men" as the title for their first Ralph Ince Film Attraction, starring E. K. Lincoln, exhibitors in various parts of the country have written letters of commendation to Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin praising the title for its box-office value and advertising adaptability. The following letter from M. Kashin, managing director of the Broadway and Symphony theatres, indicates the sentiment of leading exhibitors in regard to the title chosen for Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin's forthcoming special:

Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin,
1476 Broadway, New York.

Gentlemen:—

I note from current issues of the motion picture trade journals that your forthcoming "Ralph Ince Film Attraction," starring E. K. Lincoln, is to be called "Virtuous Men."

I feel called upon to commend you most highly for selection of this title, inasmuch as it contains, in my mind, all of the qualifications necessary—from a box-office standpoint.

Many producers do not seem to realize the importance of giving an otherwise excellent picture a title, showing they have considered the exhibitor and his requirements as viewed from the pulse of his theatre,—namely, the box office.

I believe you have selected a title which will arouse curiosity and discussion, attract the attention of passersby and, best of all, lend admirably to original and unique schemes of exploitation and advertising.

I shall await with much expectancy the initial representation of "Virtuous Men" as the title appeals to me strongly and I am anxious to see the picture, myself.

With best wishes for your success, I am

Sincerely,
(Signed) M. KASHIN.

Friends Dine Zierler

Samuel Zierler, general sales manager of the Big U exchange, New York, was the guest of honor at a dinner given by members of the exchange sales department at Murray's, Wednesday afternoon, March 5. Mr. Zierler celebrated his twenty-seventh birthday on that date and his fellow workers of the exchange made the day one on which to show their appreciation of the executive's friendship and to wish him success in his new position.

"Three Men and a Girl"

EXHIBITORS who have been playing Marguerite Clark productions and who have booked this one should certainly put the greater share of the exploitation on the personality of the star, and the fact that here she has a role that one likes to see the little player interpreting. It is straight comedy, almost approaching farce, and therefore the selling talks should be in the lighter vein throughout.

"Three Men and a Girl" is an attractive title in itself and we would use it for all it is worth, together with striking pictures of Miss Clark and then a few selling lines in the very lightest vein. Keep away from anything of the problem sort and tell your patrons that when they come to the theatre to see this picture they are going to have a solid afternoon or evening of laughter. Your appeal should be made to the whole family.

It might be well mention that this is an adaptation of the Edward Childs Carpenter play, "The Three Bears," which was produced at the Empire theatre, New York, but we would be careful of that so as not to leave any impression that this is a fairy story, a suggestion which the title of the stage offering might make to some of your patrons. As a matter of fact, this is an intensely human story.

NOW a glance at the unusual story: Sylvia Weston lives with her wealthy aunt who is determined to marry her to a rich, middle-aged man, Dallas Dawkins, whom she loathes. She finally yields to the importunities of the aunt, but at the altar when she is asked whether she takes the man she answers "I do——NOT," and then in her wedding gown flees from the church to the horror of the guests, chartering an auto and ordering him to drive her to her own country home at Loon's Lake.

But in the meantime we have been introduced to the "three men" who are the worst of women haters. Dr. Henry Forsyth has been turned against the sex because after one of his friends had been killed he had found in the friend's possession letters from his own wife. Julius Vanneman, violinist, has found his romance ending in a tragedy. Then came along the younger of the three, Christopher Kent, only to find that the woman whom he loved was already married and carrying on a desperate but serious flirtation with him. This explains why they hate all of the opposite sex. They have taken up their abode in a club, but even there they are not away from the woman, and we have a flash of a dried up old man 'phoning his "pettie" and telling her how much "her little boy" loves her. That is too much, and when Forsyth announces that he has leased a place where no women visit, the other two are quick to accept the invitation. The place is Loon's Lake and the house Sylvia's, which Forsyth has secured through an agent,

After they have eluded a girl's picnic party they finally arrive at Loon's Lake where their only companion is a male caretaker. So they start off for a swim, but while they are gone Sylvia arrives, and after nibbling at their respective suppers she cuddles herself, in her bridal finery, up on a couch and falls off to sleep. It is to find her thus that the three men return.

WE have a breakfast scene in which they show their disgust at her presence. She announces that she will stay, but they insist that she leave. Finally she declares that she will occupy the caretaker's house, and as her matronly maid has arrived they move and leave the three men to themselves, but not until the latter have insisted on stretching a rope which shall be a dead line between the two parties. But the interest of the three shortly begins to develop. First they see several canoes full of girls headed for the island, and they decide to "act like a bunch of nuts" and scare them away. Next they see Sylvia who is wearing the only other garment that she possesses except her wedding gown, attired in a bathing suit with a youth swimming up to the island to make love to her, and under the excuse that they must protect her they scare the youth away.

But all during this time Kent has been falling very violently in love with Sylvia. He gets letters from Julia, the married woman who is "still pursuing him," but tears them up. Then the others begun to weaken. First Forsyth meets her at the "dead line" and tells her that it is not his idea at all. He is followed by Vanneman who tells her that he has been opposed to the "dead line" idea from the start, and finally comes along Kent who insists that the rule was made over his protest. It is just then that there comes a letter from her aunt saying that she can have none of her clothes and the city home is closed to her for ever. With this news Kent goes back to the other two, and we have some humorous scenes with the trio picking clothes for her from a mail order catalogue.

IT is just at that moment that Julia, the married woman who is in love with Kent, arrives on the scene and Sylvia greets her

Appeal of Star and the Humor Should Be Stressed

WHEN you book this picture the thing to do is to sit down and figure out the popularity of Marguerite Clark in the most appealing picture in which she has been seen at your theatre. Then make up your mind that you are going to get every one of those followers into your house during the run of "Three Men and a Girl." You have a new chance to take advantage of her vogue, if you go about this in the right way. And we would take into consideration just at this season the old saying that "in the spring the young man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of love." The element of romance should be played, secondary to the personality of the star.

As a general rule we are not in favor of the policy of sending out letters about various offerings, for this is something that can be very badly overdone. But here is a case where you have one of the best known stars of the screen and where you are able to make your patrons a promise. We would not go too strong, but would phrase it something like this

"Of course you know and love Marguerite Clark. We have been waiting for some time to find her in just the proper sort of a Marguerite Clark picture. We feel sure that you will agree with us that 'Three Men and a Girl' fills this bill. For, in the first place, Miss Clark is dainty. Then she is winning and there is also a decided streak of humor in her, as you must already know. Here she has a picture that gives her a chance to display all of her charms. If you have ever liked this actress in any picture, we'll promise that you leave the theatre thoroughly delighted with this one."

IN your advertising the picture of the star should be played decidedly strong. The star really appears in only two costumes in this production, a wedding gown and a bathing suit, and either one of these will get attention. Don't be afraid to use a big half-tone or line drawing and to devote a little more than the usual amount of space you employ to this. Use that picture for the eye getting effect and then follow this up with the name of the star and the title in smashing type—but don't stop there.

Now, given a star with great popularity and an attractive title most exhibitors are content to stop there. We would distinctly advise you not to do so, but to go ahead and sell this picture for the inherent charm that it has. In the case of every star you must take into consideration that there may be some who did not like the last picture in which they saw her. And it is equally true that there are hundreds of people going to see individual pictures for pure amusement, and if you put over the good-humored, romantic element strong enough here you are likely to increase your business. Therefore we would go to some extent into the selling line. Here is one:

"These three men hated women. One of them found that his wife was false to him. Anothers love affair resulted in a great tragedy. The third found that the girl whom he loved was really married and was playing with fire. Even at their own club they couldn't dodge the telephone calls of lovesick members, and so they leased an island, where they were sure that they wouldn't be bothered by women.

"But just at that moment a beautiful young girl was standing at the altar opposite a middle aged and very rich husband to be. Then when the rector asked whether she would take this man to be her lawful husband, she answered: 'I will—NOT,' and then fled to her home in the country, there to find that the three women haters had leased it for the summer. She had only the wedding gown and a bathing suit, and was without a friend. It would be a shame to punctuate a single laugh by telling you what happened. But it's no secret that all three of them forgot that they hated women—one of them especially."

WE have reproduced pictures showing all three of the men in company with Sylvia, for a purpose. If you are making your own cuts you can use an attractive display by using the three stills that are shown, and then reading matter something like this:

"All three of these men hated women so much that they fled to the wilderness—that is, until they had seen Sylvia Weston. They established a 'dead line' which none of them must cross so that they would not be worried by the girl. But in the pictures you see the dead line and the three men dangerously close to it. Which of them do you suppose was finally invited over it—to stay forever?"

There is another effective cut arrangement that may be obtained by using a picture of Miss Clark in the wedding gown and then another of her in a bathing suit, and then the lines:

"I'll have to live forever in a wedding gown and a bathing suit," mourned beautiful little Sylvia Weston.

"But how little did she know at that very moment the three 'women haters' were poring over mail order catalogues and selecting her costumes. And even one of them was talking about 'the fluffy ruffle stuff.'

"Doesn't sound much like three men who had fled to the wilderness to escape all women—but they really didn't mean Sylvia when they made that resolve—and you'll have to see the picture to know just exactly why."

HERE is still another one:

"They leased a summer home in the wilderness to escape all women, and that very evening when they returned to the house they found a girl in bridal dress asleep on the couch. They didn't know that she was the girl who owned the place—and how were they to know that a few hours before she had replied to the preacher's questions with the words 'I do—NOT.'

"They didn't want any women around—especially a married one, for the latter had been the cause of their unhappiness. So they banished her across the 'dead line.' Soon each of the three was paying surreptitious visits. They all swore that they had opposed the banishment, for Sylvia quite captivated all three—captivated all three, but did more than that to one of them. And after you get through laughing you'll be mighty glad about the way everything turns out."

At left and right are scenes showing how the three women haters all find the "dead line" a most attractive place and in the center the happy moment

We are firmly of the belief that the longer selling lines, those that tell something without giving the whole story away are the best, but if you like shorter ones here are a few:

"She ran away from the altar to escape a prospective husband—and into three confirmed women haters."

"There were none around but men, and the only clothes she had was a wedding gown that didn't 'take' and a bathing suit."

"Three women haters on an island—to say nothing of a beautiful girl."

"Sylvia invaded their retreat in a wedding gown and of course the three women haters thought she was a bride. And because she had no other clothes than a bathing suit what was she to do but become a bride?"

"Three women haters thought they had fled all the sex. Then they smelled orange blossoms, found a wedding gown—and then the girl. What could three women haters do then? You'll laugh a lot before you find out."

"What would you do if you fled from the altar and a man you loathed into the presence of three men who loathed all women? Especially if they were the only three men you had ever seen that you liked? Sylvia solved the problem, and you'll agree, when you get time to stop laughing, that it was mighty well done."

"'His name is Chauncey and that is just the sort of a man he is,' said Sylvia. So do you blame her for saying to the pastor's question 'I will—NOT,' and fleeing from the altar?"

"Come and have a love-laugh with Sylvia Weston."

LOCALE of this picture is a beautiful country place, and there are many splendid exterior shots. One of the distinctive things about the picture is that except for the brief appearance of one woman and the nurse, there are no women in this picture except Marguerite Clark. In fact, there are only three other characters that count for much, but that centers the interest and makes the complications all the greater.

Miss Clark should be featured strong in your lobby display, and there should be used all the pictures of her that are available. This picture will probably come to you at a time when flowers are at a reasonable price, and we would suggest a floral display of perfumed blossoms as one of the most attractive that can be made. These with cut-out figures of Miss Clark from the paper available will give you a dignified effect.

If you want to appeal to a rather unusual angle you might obtain from one of your merchants a wedding gown and a bathing-suit and place these on two wax models and in a showcase in front of your theatre. "Sylvia Weston was alone on an island with three women haters, and only a bridal gown and a bathing-suit to wear. What was the poor girl to do?"

The same plan could be followed by using the window of some department store.

HERE is a picture that you can give almost any sort of setting for the comedy element is so strong that it will admit plenty of contrasts. But we believe that it would be a good idea to make it an all-comedy bill, with the music light and catchy.

There is one point near the end of the picture with the girl and Kent in a canoe, and one of the three women haters on shore playing, "Love's Old Sweet Song" and a little later "Kiss Me Again." Of course, it is the obvious thing for these to be brought in on the violin at the points indicated, but it will strengthen the connection by having one of these songs rendered just before the picture.

If your stage accommodations are sufficiently large and you have the effects you can get a stage picture that all will remember by having the reproduction of a lake, the moon just coming up in the background, and a girl and the man in the boat, the man rendering, "Love's Old Sweet Song," and both coming in at the chorus. The setting should be so arranged that the boat glides off the stage and from sight with the last notes and the projection of the picture starting immediately.

We would call attention in the advertising to the fact that Richard Barthelmess is the leading man, for he has won great popularity in many sections.

We repeat that one of the strongest lines that you can use is:

"Marguerite Clark in just the sort of a picture that you would pick for her."

READY TO USE

IN order that exhibitors may be able to play their campaigns well in advance we are giving the list of accessories available on "Three Men and a Girl."

Ready prepared advertisements come in one, two and three column sizes ad in both cut and mat form. For use in displays or with the stories in the text of the paper there are two 3-column, two 2-column and five single-column cuts in addition to ten stock cuts of the star.

Paper includes two 1-sheet ,two 3-sheets, a 6-sheet and a 24-sheet. Elsewhere it is pointed out how some of this can be used for cut-outs for lobby display purposes.

There are eight 8 by 10 block and white stills, eight 11 by 14 sepias, and 22 by 28 sepias of the star and sepia scenes, colored prints of the star and black and white of the star. In addition there is a music cue and a slide.

with the news that she is engaged to Kent, and after the latter, surprised, acknowledges that it is true, the married woman takes her departure. But Sylvia is so shamed by her own daring that she, too, resolves to flee and Kent is able to catch her barely in time. It is just a little later that we see Kent and Sylvia in a boat at twilight, the musician playing on his violin and the physician watching from the wooded glen.

"What is that he is playing?" Sylvia asks Kent, and she is told that it is "Love's Old Sweet Song." They drift a little while, and then there comes another air, and once more she asks the name. "Kiss Me Again," she is told, and Kent proceeds to follow out the advice of the song. And so the ending leaves them all wonderfully happy,

Coming Program Offerings

Exhibitors' Mutual Cites Runs

"Cannibals" to Open at Randolph in Chicago, While Darmond Film Plays State Lake—Desmond in "White Washed Walls"

JONES, Linck and Schaefer of Chicago, have booked Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas" and will open it at the Randolph theatre, for an indefinite run, to begin shortly. One of the biggest advertising campaigns that ever accompanied the showing of any picture in Chicago has been arranged by Jones, Linick and Schaefer.

Another Exhibitors' Mutual feature, "What Every Woman Wants," produced by Jesse D. Hampton and featuring Grace Darmond, had the honor of being the first photoplay to be shown in the new million dollar State Lake theatre, built by the Orpheum Circuit, which opened March 16. "What Every Woman Wants" was booked for a week's run. The new State Lake theatre seats nearly 3,000 persons and is one of the most palatial houses showing pictures in the United States.

"Cannibals of the South Seas" was booked for a seven-days' run during the week of March 16 by the Lubin theatre, Cincinnati.

Now comes "White Washed Walls" which will be William Desmond's next release from the Jesse D. Hampton studios. "White Washed Walls" was a novelette in its original form, written by Ethel and James Dorrance. The story appeared in one of the Munsey magazines, and all reports from the West Coast indicate that the production will be a winner.

When it came to selecting a play with which to re-introduce Alma Rubens to the screen public, the Winsome Stars Corporation officials went into the library and came out with "Diane of the Green Van." This book was immediately purchased from Leona Dalrymple, the New Jersey girl who wrote it and won a $10,000 prize in an open best-seller competition conducted by a Chicago publishing house.

Helen Jerome Eddy, featured in "The Turn in the Road," bought by Robertson-Cole for distribution through Exhibitors Mutual

Bessie Barriscale's release following "Hearts Asleep" will be "Josselyn's Wife," taken from the novel by Kathleen Norris. This is a best seller which has found its way into almost every list of leading popular novels.

Select Announces Brady Feature for March

WITH a cast which includes Frank Losee, Leslie Austin, Gertrude Hillman, Josephine Whittell and Gladys Valerie, Alice Brady's Select Picture for March, "Marie, Ltd.," in which she is directed by Kenneth Webb, gives every promise of being one of the most successful creations in which Miss Brady has ever appeared, acording to an announcement from Select.

Frank Losee, who plays the lead in support of Miss Brady, is said to surpass even his work with Clara Kimball Young in one of her recent Select Pictures, "The Reason Why." Mr. Losee is considered one of the most capable actors the screen has ever known. He is a graduate of the speaking stage, where his connections associated him with William Faversham and Henry Miller. One of his successes on the screen was with Elsie Ferguson in "The Song of Songs;" he has also appeared with Marguerite Clark in the Bab stories and with John Barrymore in "Here Comes the Bride." At various times he has been associated with Mary Pickford, Pauline Frederick, Louise Huff and Enid Bennett.

"Marie, Ltd." is by Louise Winters and the scenario was written by Jane Murfin, who, with Jane Cowl, has collaborated in so many successes for the spoken stage.

The story of "Marie, Ltd." is about a young girl, Drina Hilliard, who comes from the West to live with her mother in New York. Drina's mother is the Marie of "Marie, Ltd.," and it is the experiences and trials of Drina, in her associations with the people who patronize "Marie, Ltd.," which form the basis of the story.

"Modern Husbands" Scheduled for Release

Henry B. Walthall, in a dramatic production, "Modern Husbands," is announced by the National Film Corporation as the successor to "The Long Lane's Turning" in the list of Walthall's offerings through the Exhibitors Mutual exchanges. Walthall will appear as one of the modern husbands, who, in the beginning, devotes so much of his time to the stock exchange and the club and so little to his wife, that he finally loses her. It is in the winning back of his wife, that Walthall is required to attain his best dramatic heights.

Hodkinson Sets Date for Kerrigan

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces that March 24 is the date set for the release of "The End of the Game," J. Warren Kerrigan's next picture for Jesse D. Hampton Productions. This story by George Elwood Jenks is described as a real Western thriller, full of action, suspense and heart interest, and logically written about the days of '49 when men were fearless, shot at sight, and lived in the romantic atmosphere of the gold camps. In "The End of the Game" Kerrigan has a chance to display his prowess, and, of course, being the hero of the story, he is given every opportunity. Lois Wilson is the naive little stranger. The supporting cast is made up of Jack Richardson, Alfred Whitman, George Field, Walter Perry, Eleanor Fair, Milton Ross, Bert Appling and J. J. Franz.

"That's Good" Comes on March 24

A screen adaptation of the "Phoenix Stories" by Richard Washburn Child, will be the Metro release for March 24, with Hale Hamilton in the stellar role.

"That's Good" is the title of the picture, which was published in short story form by the well-known Mr. Child.

Harry L. Franklin directed it. The entire production was personally supervised by Maxwell Karger, Director General of Metro.

Pathe Releases "Look Out Below"

"Look Out Below" is the descriptive title of the Pathe-Rolin comedy featuring Harold Lloyd with Bebe Daniels and "Snub" Pollard, which will be released on March 16. The fun revolves around a skyscraper in course of erection and the fun-making is served with thrills as the actors do a variety of strenuous stunts on the steel-work high above the Los Angeles street.

"Salome" Goes Big in Pittsburgh Territory

In line with the success it is achieving all over the country "Salome," the Theda Bara super-production, is making a hit in the Pittsburgh territory, according to reports to the Fox Film Corporation.

The picture played two weeks at the Olympic theatre, in downtown Pittsburgh, to capacity at each performance. Full houses marked each of its four days at the Nemo theatre in Johnstown, Pa., where the management adopted exceptional advertising and publicity methods in exploiting it. At the Majestic theatre in Erie, Pa., it played seven days to crowded houses. It also played two days at the Grand in Elwood City, Pa.

Clayton P. Sheehan, Fox district manager, declares that the success which "Salome" is meeting in the Pittsburgh territory prevails also in other parts of his district.

Universal Shows Conference of Mayors

The conference of mayors and governors recently called by President Wilson to discuss plans for re-absorption into industry of thousands of discharged soldiers and to discuss the authorization of state, municipal and federal public work to provide immediate employment for ex-soldiers, its work and the men who attended make up one of the features of International News, No. 10, just released.

In addition this reel shows how several thousand German prisoners held in an American detention camp in France are enjoying themselves to their hearts' content while friends and relatives at home are carrying on a civil war of their own.

"Freckles" Is Reissued

The Paramount picturization of Gene Stratton Porter's novel, "Freckles," starring Jack Pickford, supported by Louise Huff, was the Success Series feature released by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation March 9.

The production was made under the direction of Marshall Neilan and included in the cast Hobart Bosworth, Lillian Leighton, Billy Elmer and Guy Oliver.

Olive Thomas Production Expected Shortly

AN announcement this week from Triangle recalls that since the announcement last fall that Director Frank Borzage had completed his latest Olive Thomas Triangle production, "Toton," the release of this picture has been anticipated with keen interest, for it was recorded to be one of the most artistic productions ever produced by the studios of this organization.

Considering that it was heralded by those who viewed it at a private showing as exceptional in many respects, and that it features the popular Olive Thomas, exhibitors will be particularly interested in the fact that it is to be released on March 30 at a Triangle special presentation.

Glimpses of the Latin Quarter of Paris, that section where vice and crime and brotherly companionship go hand-in-hand, are contributing factors to the fascinations of this romance by Catherine Carr. Many of the scenes were shot at the Exposition Grounds at San Diego and Jack Mackenzie, the cameraman, is credited with photography that is said to be poetry of vision.

Triangle's publicity department is unusually enthusiastic in the announcement of this release, for they claim it to be Miss Thomas at her best and one of their productions to which they can give a hundred per cent endorsement.

"Toton" presents the former "Follies" beauty in a dual role, the second episode showing her in boy's attire until her real identity is discovered, and she is wooed and won by a young American. Triangle's former character actor, Francis McDonald, is credited with the best work of his career as Pierre, the Apache, a true Faegan. Norman Kerry and Jack Perrin were especially engaged to support Miss Thomas in this picture.

Bookings of "The Red Glove" Climb Skyward

AN announcement this week from the Universal offices declares that if advance bookings can be taken as a criterion, Universal's latest serial, "The Red Glove," starring Marie Walcamp, released March 17, will be shown in more theatres throughout the country than any previous serial released by the Big U organization. In almost every territory in the United State, Universal exchange managers are said to have exceeded expectations in obtainig bookings well in advance of release date. Also, the Universal serial records show a larger percentage of theatres have booked "The Red Glove," a month prior to release date, than has ever been noted on a previous serial release.

Manager Zierler of the Big U exchange, New York, reported seventy-three bookings for "The Red Glove," added to the exchange's records during the six-day week ending Saturday, March 8. This number of new contracts brings the number of serial bookings to thirty-eight in excess of the previous record for serial booking, set by "Liberty" three years ago.

Among the first theatres in various districts to book "The Red Glove" are: Savoy, Buffalo; Gordon, Rochester, N. Y.; Quinmetoscope and Maple Leaf, Montreal; Elmont, Winston Salem, N. C.; American and States, Chicago; Alhambra, Akron, Main, Cleveland; Strand, Denver; Peoples, Butte; Columbia, Cedar Rapids; Family, Des Moines; Circle, Detroit; Lyric, Kalamazoo; Lyric, Tulsa, Okla.; Majestic, Oklahoma City; Rex, Omaha; Hippodrome, Sioux City, Ia.; Isis, Seattle and Orpheum, Seattle.

Joe Brandt, Universal's serial specialist, has completed half of his nation-wide tour in the interest of "The Red Glove."

"Regular Job," Says Marion Davies

"Being a picture actress is just a regular job," says Marion Davies, whose latest starring vehicle, "The Belle of New York," is being released this week. "I am at the studio every morning at 8:30. I have an hour for lunch, and at 5 p. m. am through for the day. There are one or two variations from the regular working day, however, one is an orchestra that plays while we work and furnishes us with inspiration—the other is afternoon tea brought in at 3 p. m., which furnishes us with something to look forward to."

Capital Rejoices Over Good Results

"Ike Schlank, president of the Capital Film Co., is elated over the results obtained by the exchange managers of that organization in the various sections of the country with the new short feature series," says General Representative Frank L. Smith, of that corporation.

"Since the first two weeks' releases of this new short story feature idea," continued Mr. Smith, "Exhibitors began to get in with their contracts, but with the release of our third, fourth and fifth weeks' subjects, our branhces throughout the country have gone ahead of all expectations in the matter of securing contracts, the larger percentage of them coming from first-class theatres.

"And it looks very much to us now, that it is but the natural course of events; that exhibitors in most cases realize that the snappy features are more along the line of what the public wants than the monotonous, padded feature of extra lengths. If it is not that the exhibitors understand the trend of the times, and agree with us in the type of pictures being released, I am unable to explain the eagerness on the part of so many of the exhibitors to cover themselves with our contracts."

At present, the Capital Film Co. is offering two-part features only, consisting of dramas, society and problem plays, comedy dramas, westerns, railroads, and comedies of both slap-stick and satirical variety.

Elements Clash in Hodkinson Film

Love and duty, especially when politics mix in, have clashed many times, and will continue to clash till the end of time. In "Thunderbolts of Fate," in which Edward Warren Productions, Inc., co-star House Peters and Anna Lohr, these three elements clash in a mighty battle—a battle in which fate takes a hand and deals out justice.

The story, which was written by Winifred Dunn from an original play by Harry S. Sheldon, is that of a graft fighting Governor who falls prey to a socially ambitious and selfish woman, and later meets his ideal of womanhood. The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation will release "Thunderbolts of Fate" on April 6.

Final Episode of "Terror of the Range"

"Run to Earth" is the eminently fitting title for the seventh and final episode of the Diando serial, "The Terror of the Range," featuring Betty Compson and George Larkin, and released March 16. In this episode the identity of the mysterious marauder is disclosed, and all of the tangled mystery of the serial is unraveled. Hardwick, the Secret Service Agent, is about to be lynched by the cowboys at the opening of the episode, as they believe that he is the Terror. Thelma Martin arrives just in time to rescue him, and he returns with the soldiers to the fort. Meantime preparations are going on at the ranch to marry Thelma to "Tough" Mackenzie against her will.

Marguerite Clark is the "girl" in "Three Men and a Girl," a Paramount production

Griffith Shows Newest to "the Natives"

The small towns out in California where D. W. Griffith takes his newest productions there for secret showings, are said to have placed their approval on "The Girl Who Stayed at Home," the story of the Stay-at-Homes, into which the sub-titles are now sliding.

The production reveals some remarkable sets, it is said, including an entire French chateau and according to reports, no other production has ever offered such a contrast in types, with two new brunettes for the girl leads, Robert Harron, Richard Barthelmess and Syn de Conde coming into immediate contrast, and George Fawcett and Tully Marshall in character work.

Stage Plays and Books Prove Popular

Stage plays and popular books are finding their way into photoplay form in many of the features which the units of the Robertson Cole Company are producing for release through Exhibitors' Mutual. Officials of the Robertson Cole Company believe that popular books and well-known stage successes make the best photoplays, and whenever possible the stars producing for the various Robertson Cole units are supplied with works of this nature. Glancing over the list of pictures already released by Exhibitors' Mutual, it will be found that a large percentage of the features were made from either a book or a play.

Billie Rhodes first five-reel feature for the National Film Corporation, "The Girl of My Dreams," was taken from the play by Wilbur Nesbitt.

Lewis-Select Film Proves Popular

Advance play dates and reports of bookings where Mitchell Lewis' current Select Picture, "Children of Banishment," has already been shown, prove the contention that Francis William Sullivan's book of the same name, from which the story is adapted, is widely known among the reading public. This fact, and the popularity of Mitchell Lewis as a star, will, it is believed, make "Children of Banishment" one of the most popular screen stories of the year.

"Children of Banishment" is Mitchell Lewis' second Select Picture, following his initial appearance as a Select star in "Code of the Yukon." In the New York territory advance dates have already been reported for Poli's Strand, Waterbury, three days; Morningside, New York, one day; City Hall, one day; Hyperion Palace and Victoria, Corona, L. I., one day; Happy Hour, one day; Strand, White Plains, three days; Paramount, Newark, three days; Westchester, Mount Vernon, two days; Empire, Staten Island, one day; U. S. Photoplay, Paterson, three days, and U. S. Theatre, Bronx, one day.

Nilsson Release Comes on March 17

On March 17 Metro will release the drama of the goldfields of the upper Yukon, "The Way of the Strong," with Anna Q. Nilsson as its star.

The cast surrounding the star includes Joseph King, leading man; Harry S. Northrup, as Leyburn, the villain who double-crosses his partner; Rita Harlan, Arthur Redden and little baby Irene Yeager as the child.

In this story of the "survival of the fittest" Miss Nilsson, as the star, plays a dual role, first as the wife of Hendrie who dies from exposure in the snow and later as her half-sister, Monica, who adopts the baby, Frank, and with whom Hendrie later falls in love.

Sessue Hayakawa Portrays "A Heart in Pawn"

Haworth Pictures Corporation announces that Sessue Hayakawa in "A Heart in Pawn," directed by William Worthington, is successor to "Bonds of Honor" on the Exhibitors Mutual list of releases.

There is Oriental and Occidental flavor to "A Heart in Pawn" which, under the title of "Shadows," served as a stage vehicle for the young Japanese star in the early days of his theatrical career.

"Three Men and a Girl"

March 16 was announced this week by Famous Players-Lasky as the release date of "Three Men and a Girl," in which Marguerite Clark has the star role. The picture carries the Paramount brand, and was filmed from the stage play called "The Three Bears." Eve Unsell adapted it for the screen.

Richard Barthelmess is Miss Clark's leading man. In the cast are Percy Marmont, Jerome Patrick, Ida Darling, Charles Craig, Betty Bouton and Maggie H. Fisher.

Kennedy Serial Received by Trade and Press

"The Carter Case," the Craig Kennedy serial, produced by Oliver Films, Inc., unstarring Herbert Rawlinson and Margaret Marsh, is said to have received the hearty indorsement of the trade and press, when the first three episodes of the serial were shown during the past week.

"The Carter Case" is a screen version of Arthur B. Reeve's Craig Kennedy stories, adapted to the screen by the author and John W. Grey. The stories have appeared in magazines, and more recently in book form, and are some of the most popular detective stories written in the present age.

The first episode is announced for release March 17. The final touches to the final reels of this serial are not being given to the complete serial. William Haddock assisted Mr. Grossman in the production of this serial, and E. Douglas Bingham was technical director. T. D. Bonneville has prepared an elaborate line of advertising for the exploitation of the serial and to aid the exhibitor in exhibition.

Kremer Makes Trip Throughout Country

Victor Kremer, the originator of the Shorty Hamilton pictures which he had sold and repurchased from Frederick Post left last week on a week's trip, during which time he will visit Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Syracuse and Boston. Before leaving Mr. Kremer closed with the Unity Photoplay Company of Chicago, The Exhibitors' Film Exchange in Washington and the Elk Photoplay Company of New York. He proposes selling the four pictures entitled "The Ranger," "The Pen Vulture," "Denny from Ireland" and "The Snail" first and as soon as he has disposed of all state rights on these subjects, to bring out another picture which is now in the making.

All prints will be shipped by the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company.

These pictures were sold to Mr. Post by the W. H. Clifford Photoplay Company on August 31st, 1918, and since February 24th, 1919, Mr. Kremer has controlled all Mr. Post's rights.

Garrett Closes a Four Star Deal

House of Brockliss Gets World Rights Outside of United States—Enthusiastic Over Baird-Thomas Features

THE house of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., through its President, Sidney Garrett, closed a big deal this week in the acquisition of the coming productions of Four Star Pictures, the author of which is Augustus Thomas and in which Leah Baird is being starred.

Through the treasurer of the producing company, Arthur F. Beck, negotiations were conducted between Harry Raver and Mr. Garrett, which resulted in the well-known foreign house acquiring the entire world's rights excepting the United States, to the coming series of features. As announced also—where the American rights were obtained by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation as the first of the releases on the new Hodkinson super-plans of 1919.

Mr. Garrett has been a frequent visitor at the Biograph studio where the initial feature photoplay, "As a Man Thinks" from the famous Augustus Thomas Broadway play is in course of production. After obtaining a thorough, detailed knowledge of the plans and work of the Four Star Pictures Company, Mr. Garrett placed his signature to a contract (and a magnificent check) and announces that the big gun of 1919 has been fired.

The policy of the firm of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., for the ensuing year is to deal only in pretentious photoplays of out of the ordinary merit. Mr. Garrett is enthusiastic regarding the coming Leah Baird-Augustus Thomas picture plays and predicts a series of features that for artistic merit will not be surpassed in America this year.

Augustus Thomas, author—George Irving, Director—Harry Raver, producer—and Leah Baird, star—make a wonderful combination, the duplicate of which never has been exploited before in any territory, foreign or American.

These productions are to be made on an artistic and lavish scale. They will be released on the series plan—the first of which will be "As a Man Thinks," and there will be six in number. Each production will have the above names in the four essentials.

I. Oliver Shows Much Promise

New Figure in Industry Climbs Steadily Upward—Studio's First Production is "The Carter Case"

MR. I. OLIVER, president of Oliver Films, Inc., is a new figure in the motion picture world who gives promise of gaining a high place in the industry in minimum time by cleverly and artistically carrying out his well-founded ideals in the production of pictures. With his excellent organization already going at top speed in production Mr. Oliver has grasped the opportunity of giving fullest scope to his high ideals as to what motion pictures should and can be.

In joining his resources of mind and capital with those of Mr. Harry Grossman, Mr. Oliver has become associated with a producer who, like himself, aims to present photoplays in serial, feature or briefer shape, of a higher type and perfected to a greater degree of excellence than has been attempted heretofore. The lavish and magnificent production of "The Carter Case," a Craig Kennedy Serial, starring Herbert Rawlinson and Margaret Marsh, is the first release achieved by the new corporation.

A glimpse of Oliver Films, Inc., studios confirms the conclusion of the large audience at the recent specially arranged presentation of the initial episodes of "The Carter Case" at Loew's New York Roof Theatre, that neither brains, money, nor exquisite good taste and fine professional talent are being spared in the productions of the Oliver-Grossman combination. The audience expressed its high appreciation of the sterling quality of the Craig Kennedy Serial.

Mr. Oliver, who has been a devoted movie-fan for years, expressed his aspiration in cinema presentation in a nutshell by advocating production of film worth while.

Frank Hall Enlarges Activities

President of Independent Sales Makes Important Announcement—Rothapfel Program in Making—Sees Bright Future

WITH less than a year's time in which to mature, Independent Sales Corporation, under the direction of Frank Hall has accomplished what other branches of the commercial world are satisfied to have accomplished in years. Independent and its product has been heralded in every nook and corner of the United States and more recently made their debut in foreign countries.

Its name and its product have, not alone been heralded, but they have been factors to be reckoned with in the industry. Exhibitors who have booked the Independent product have been unanimous in recording box-office receipts that could be counted and expended with a nice balance for the exhibitors' bank account. This has assisted more than any other one element in placing the name of "Independent" before the picture world where it stands for service and satisfaction.

With three big successes on the independent market, the forces of Independent Sales Corporation working at high speed, the Film Clearing House active in the distributing end and its sales forces working hand and hand with the exchanges and exhibitor, and last but not least, the Rothapfel Picture Corporation rounding into shape and producing its first factor of the Rothapfel unit program, Mr. Hall, the man at the head of all this buzzing hive of industry, is planning to make these organizations the mecca of all that spells service, bigger and better productions and closer co-operation with clients.

With the Rothapfel organization established and its first product in the making under the direction of Wally Van, Mr. Hall is given another big task to perform—that of placing the Rothapfel Unit Program before the public, so that, first, the exhibitor can put the program on with the assurance that he is giving his patrons full value, and, secondly, that the public will be given what they might expect from Samuel L. Rothapfel and that is—an evening's entertainment—founded on years of experience as one of the world's most successful exhibitors who has proved by his successes in exhibition that he knows what his public wants and when they want it.

"And they are not only going to be given what they might expect but novelties in program units that will rise far and above the expectancy of Mr. Rothapfel's most optimistic follower," said Mr. Hall in outlining his plans in this connection. "Mr. Rothapfel and I have gotten together on this matter," continued Mr. Hall, "and it's difficult to convey to the picture world just how important his acquisition to the producing branch of the industry is.

"It marks the birth of something entirely new to the exhibitor. He will not have to book his features at one exchange, his scenic at another, his news reel at another and his comedy at another—he will get served by Rothapfel Picture Corporation with his entire program and he will be served with features that he can present to any audience, in any house and at a profit to himself in money and his patrons in entertainment. The Rothapfel program has passed the talking stage. It is assured and, if I am any judge, it's success and that of the exhibitor is assured.

"Independent Sales' product so far released is meeting with every success. The 10-20-30 series is doing business far beyond anything that I had expected. After a series of the biggest exploitation campaigns ever inaugurated in the interest of any production Harry Rapf's production of 'Wanted for Murder' is going big in every section of the country. This statement can be verified by the way in which John H. Kunsky, Detroit exhibitor, packed them in to his Detroit houses last week. Our exploitation man was on the ground, Miss Lillian Hall, a member of the cast, made personal appearances at the Kunsky houses and everything was done to co-operate with Mr. Kunsky to make his run of this feature a big success."

C. L. Chester Gets African Hunting Scenics

C. L. CHESTER, producer of the Outing Chester Pictures now running at the Strand and other first run houses throughout the country, has secured the African Hunting Scenics recently brought to this country by Charles Cottar. Mr. Cottar is a well-known sportsman, writer and rancher who, during the war, was in the British Intelligence Service. He is known over Africa as a hunter and has so won the confidence of the natives that they have permitted him to film scenes hitherto unknown to camera men.

These scenics, which are said to be sure-fire hits, partly because of the fascination that scenes from Africa have for the public and because of the unusual nature of these films, are heralded as remarkable single reelers. Mr. Chester succeeded in obtaining them and they will be shown at an early date as a part of the Outing Chester series now running at the Strand. They will be released in two separate pictures of one reel each.

Film experts who have seen these pictures concede that they are by far the most striking and remarkable views even taken of Africa. They agree that these films are remarkable in photography, in variety of subject matter and in dramatic effect. The scenes show "close-ups" of rhinoceri, tigers, lions, hippopotami and all the other members of the menagerie that stay-at-home folk never see out of the "big tent." In addition to the animal studies, all the weird native customs have been filmed including the fantastic religious dances.

Testimonials on Drawing Power of "Mickey"

EUGENE H. ROTH, managing director of the new California theatre, San Francisco, where W. H. Productions' release, "Mickey," starring Mabel Normand, had an extended run, wires W. H. Productions that

"The California theatre, with two thousand seven hundred and eighty-four capacity, packed them all week with 'Mickey.' Just arranged with Sol. Lesser for extra week's run at our Portola theatre. Unquestionably 'Mickey' will satisfy to the fullest every movie fan and will add many fans to the ranks."

And from the other side of the country H. J. Boucher, manager of the Empire theatre, Portland, Me., writes: "'Mickey' has proven to be the biggest attraction as a money-getter we have ever played. We never played a picture that created such a sensation and owing to the same we were forced to run the picture three times each evening, eliminating part of the regular program. Without a doubt, 'Mickey' possesses more real live opportunities for advertising than any feature released for months."

At the Regent theatre of Detroit, Michigan, "Mickey" broke every record in the history of the house, according to Manager Ealand's report. "We were required to stop selling tickets every night, and turned thousands of people away," he wrote. "The matinees were capacity every day, which was rather unusual for the Regent on account of its location."

The Majestic theatre, Detroit, one of the largest theatres in that city, played "Mickey" to the biggest business of that theatre. Charlie G. Branham, manager, in a letter to Joseph Horwitz, who is handling "Mickey" in Michigan, writes: "When I know of a good thing I feel like passing the word along and that's why I want to say again that your picture 'Mickey,' with Mabel Normand, is without question the best buy on the market for any exhibitor and you can tell the boys that I said so, for the production will back me up in every particular. 'Mickey' played the Majestic for a week to the biggest Sunday opening and the biggest week that the house ever has had. Everybody was satisfied and I am only sorry that I did not hold it over."

Geraldine Farrar and "Sniffles" caught by the Educational camera

Farrar in Educational Supplement

Vice-President E. W. Hammons, of the Educational Films Corporation of America, announces that the feature of the third number of the Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement—the new series of twelve single-reel subjects devoted to the "intimate" pictures of motion picture studios and the off-stage lives of the more celebrated players—is to be an extensive study of Geraldine Farrar in her new home on West Seventy-fourth street, New York City.

Miss Farrar put apartment dwelling into the past tense during the last days of January, and, in a slender four-story palace all her own, found space for the first time in her life to place her art treasures and the trophies of operatic triumphs secured in all the capitals of the world. Julian Johnson, editor of Photoplay Magazine, hearing of the new home, immediately communicated with Miss Farrar and asked her to permit a "visual record" of herself in her domestic surroundings, for the contemplation of thousands who have seen her on the stage and many thousands more who have seen her on the screen.

Territorial Sales Enters the Field

Among the news for State rights buyers this week is that contained in an announcement of the formation of the Territorial Sales Corporation, an organization backed by ample financial support, which has just opened offices in 1600 Broadway. This concern is entering the State rights field on the biggest basis any similar company has ever attempted. It is not going to offer one picture, but will have a considerable number to sell during the coming year.

The Territorial Sales Corporation will be a nation-wide organization. Representatives will be stationed in the twenty largest motion picture centres in the United States. The complete organization of the new company will be finished within a few days.

New Automaticket System Called Big Success

In demonstrating the new model Automaticket System, the official in charge declared that exhibitors are not expected to be mechanical experts, and they did not have to be to admire the new model.

He maintained that its simplicity is so self evident that its "foolproofness of operation" instantly strikes the mind of the beholder. The demonstrator asserted that the practical features the new model contained from the viewpoint of ticket booth management has made every exhibitor an enthusiast on the new model Automaticket system.

The secretary and general sales manager, E. S. Bowman, announced that this same enthusiasm takes on the practical form of orders and reorders.

"For example," he said, "one of the leading exhibitors in Washington, D. C., ordered two machines shipped. Within a fortnight after their arrival he ordered five more without solicitation.

"Having specialized in this field for over a decade, and being in intimate touch with the needs of exhibitors, the Automaticket Co. naturally expected the new model to be a success, a great success.

"But our expectations were exceeded by this enthusiastic and speedy 'hit' the new model has made with exhibitors," continued Mr. Bowman.

"This is readily explained by a summary of some of the many points which have been perfected in the New Model, such as extreme simplicity of construction (60) per cent fewer parts than any other machine in this field); keys of unit not in use may be depressed and thus put out of the way; special 'Sure Touch' composition keys; one master lock for tickets, register and mechanism; noiseless special motor; '3-in front and 2 behind' key arrangement; extreme speed and accuracy; separate, independent register for every ticket denomination; easy installation and operation."

Work Resumed on Pearson Feature

At the Thanhouser Studio work has been resumed on the first of a series of pictures to be released through Pathe, staring the beautiful Virginia Pearson in her own features. It is called "The Bishop's Emeralds," by Frank Beresford, from Captain Houghton Townley's novel, and was being directed by Jack O'Brien, until Miss Pearson upset all calculations by being in an automobile accident. She received some slight bruises and a severe shock, but has quite recovered from the effects of both, and even declares that the enforced rest did her good.

Grauman Lobby Enlarged by Three

The Grauman theatre lobby in Los Angeles has been enlarged almost threefold in order to furnish better accommodations to the public waiting to enter this theatre. Originally the lobby was in the center of the building facing Broadway, where a space approximately 25 x 40 feet was used for this purpose. To the south of the lobby was store room space, and recently Managing Director Sid Grauman secured a lease on this portion of the building, and for eight weeks a staff of workmen have been engaged in transforming it into lobby space. The new entrance to the building will accommodate from six to eight hundred people, and is connected with the main floor of the theatre auditorium by four doors. Travertine finish similar to that of the original lobby and interior of the theatre was used for the decoration of this. With this addition, the theatre will have three box-offices and commodious space for offices of the theatre company on the mezzanine floor of the lobby, entrance to which can be made through the lobby. The entire lobby is now 40 x 85 feet, divided in two parts, which are connected by three large openings.

Abrams Handling "Yankee Doodle in Berlin"

HIRAM ABRAMS, who is handling the sales for Mack Sennett's latest five-reel comedy production, "Yankee Doodle in Berlin," reports that the interest shown in this comedy production by the independent buyers is remarkable. Mr. Abrams is conducting the selling campaign from his New York offices in the Longacre Building, and states that inquiries concerning territorial rights on this subject are arriving by the thousands, including inquiries from exhibitors throughout the country.

"Yankee Doodle in Berlin" is a satire on the important international events of the present time. It was produced under the direction of Richard Jones and has in its cast Ben Turpin, Ford Sterling, Marie Provost and other Sennett comedians.

Augustus Thomas, Prominent American Playwright

Augustus Thomas, author of "As a Man Thinks," the Four-Star production, starring Leah Baird, directed by George Irving and produced by Harry Raver, has been referred to as the "dean of American dramatists," because of his many successful stage plays and his prolific writings for the theatre.

Among his many successes are "The Copperhead," starring Lionel Barrymore, a recent Broadway success; "Arizona," "As a Man Thinks," "The Earl of Pawtucket," "The Embassy Ball," "The Witching Hour," "Alabama," "Col. Carter of Cartersville," "Colorado," "Soldiers of Fortune" and "The Harvest Moon."

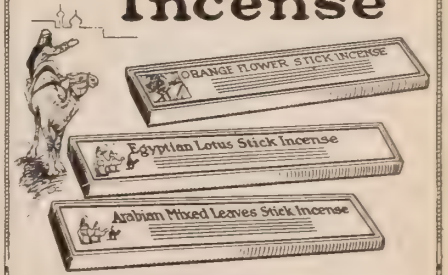
Timeliness of Film Subjects

As Seen by Harry Riechenbach

WILLIAM A, BRADY was credited, at one time, with being an almost uncanny theatrical producer, in that he seemed to make special legitimate productions just when the subject of the play jibed with the times. Psychological, as it were.

His "Bought and Paid For," and "The Man of The Hour," were produced and made their appearances on Broadway, and by means of five touring companies throughout the country, at the same time that political strife and various sensational domestic episodes were being blazened forth in the daily papers. Result, "The Man of The Hour," although not an exceptional dramatic document, ran two years in New York, and "Bought and Paid For" is credited with having shown nearly four hundred thousand dollars' profit for Brady.

The psychological time for a production is while the subject is uppermost in the people's minds.



"The only popular-priced theatrical production I ever witnessed during my twelve years in theatricals," said a prominent legitimate producer, "was 'The Millionaire and the Dancer,' which was purported to be taken from the Thaw-Stanford White tragedy. I was so enamored of the subject that I travelled from Johnstown, Pa., to Pittsburgh to witness the performance, and had to stand all through it. It was rotten, poorly written, besides being hurriedly produced, but it was timely and pleased me because I was absolutely susceptible to the theme.

"Whom The Gods Would Destroy" is offered by the Macauley Photoplays Corporation, as the most timely subject possible, in that it is based on Woodrow Wilson's League of Nations ideals and because at present the entire world is interested in no other subject quite as intensely,

As a means of conveying the importance of the League of Nations as a subject of public interest, the New York papers were tabulated during the week ending March 8th.

During the seven days beginning March 2nd, the ten principal daily papers in Greater New York published three hundred and sixty-four columns on the subject, of which over one hundred columns were on the front page.

Fox Studio Doings

The Fox Company has built mining and western sets in the mountains near Palm Springs, and William Farnum, director J. Gordon Edwards and a company that includes Louise Lovely as leading woman, Lamar Johnstone, Charles Clary, J. Raymond Nye, Al Fremont, Carrie Clark Ward and others, have gone to this location to spend at least ten days filming exteriors for "Wolves of The Night." This story offers Farnum a man-of-the-open role, he appearing as a prospector who makes possible his livelihood by conducting a small ranch. The plot is based upon a million dollar corporation attempting to get possession of his property. Farnum has but one big fight in this film.

Director Lynn Reynolds and the Peggy Hyland Company are leaving this week for Santa Cruz Islands where the sea scenes for "Miss Adventure" will be filmed.

The Frank Beal Company has completed the filming of "The Divorce Trap" which has William Sheer, William Scott, Betty Schade, Francis MacDonald, Hershall Mayall and John Steppling, playing in support of Gladys Brockwell.

The Comedy Department of the Fox studios now has three companies working under the personal supervision of Hampton Del Ruth, the third director being Roy Del Ruth, who has just started the filming of a comedy featuring Ethel Teare and Paddy Maguire.

"Lawless Hearts," a comedy dealing with high life in jail which features Mildred Reardon and Harry Gribbon, has been shipped to the eastern laboratory, and J. G. Blystone, will by the end of the week, have "Virtuous Husbands," a street railway comedy with Slim Summerville, Charles Arling, Glen Cavender and Bartine Burkette completed and ready for shipment.

Vitagraph News Bits

The comedy companies of Vitagraph have monopolized the studio this week, as every stage there was used by the two reel fun making organizations. Montgomery and Rock, aided by Louise Granville and Pearl Chappell, and under the direction of Gilbert Pratt, were hard at it; Jimmy Aubrey was filming his third comedy offering, written by himself and Babe Hardy, and on another stage Larry Semon was busy with the last scenes for his first comedy release under his new contract. The unanimous opinion was that the week of March 8th was the big laugh week.

The final work on "A Yankee Princess" has been completed, and Vitagraphers claim it will be Bessie Love's greatest story to date. Compliments are numerous for Director Dave Smith, who was in charge of making this and previous Vitagraph-Love subjects, for those who have watched this actress claim Director Smith has developed her ability and greatly increased her screen personality's power. Bernard McConville wrote this story of the slums-and-the-palace, which is spoken of as decidedly powerful with many new comedy situations.

H. H. Van Loan, author of "The Highest Trump," has written another story and continuity for Earle Williams, the filming of which will start shortly at the Brunton studio. It is a crook story of Paris. Kathrine Adams will play the lead opposite Williams, and James Young will continue as director.

Ronald Bradbury, who has been physically disabled for a number of weeks following illness, will resume work of directing the Antonio Moreno-Carol Holloway serial "Perils of Thunder Mountain," upon the company's return within the next few days from the snow country of Truckee, California. While in the north, W. J. Bowman was the director.

President Albert E. Smith is expected at the Vitagraph studio the latter part of March.

About Metro Players

This week saw two new productions begun at the Metro studio. One will star Viola Dana, and is an adaptation from the Mary E. Wilkins-Freeman novel, "Madelon," which will be released as "Madelon of the Redwood." Director Edwin Carewe and company went to Big Tree, California, March 1st, with a complete staff of electricians. One mile of cable will be laid into the redwood forests, so that it will be possible to take scenes in the thickest part of the heavily wooded country. Wheeler Oakman, who was leading man for Edith Storey in Metro subjects when he joined the army, returns to the Metro to be leading man for Miss Dana in this picture. Oakman was a member of the 144th regiment known as the Grizzles, and spent two weeks in the second line trenches near Verdun just prior to the signing of the armistice. Joseph King is the heavy in this picture.

Albert S. LeVino has written the continuity for "After His Own Heart" from the story by Ben Aimes Williams, and this will serve as a vehicle for Hale Hamilton, supported by Naomi Childers, Herbert Prior and others, directed by Harry L. Franklin.

George D. Bager has just completed the filming of May Allison's picture "Orchestra D 2" in which Ben Wilson and Walter Percival are the leads. Miss Allison will have a two weeks' vacation before resuming work on her next play.

Bert Lytell has Alice Lake as his leading woman in the film play at present known as "Powers That Prey," which was adapted by Finis Fox from two Boston Blackey stories which appeared in a magazine. John Ince is the director of this company, and Frank Currier and Joseph Koulgeur are the principals.

Here and There

Wm. Christy Cabanne has made the final scenes for the Mabel Normand film "The Pest," in which the star is supported by John Bowers, Charles Gerrard, Leota Lorraine and others.

The Pauline Fredricks Company, directed by Hobart Henley, has been working on exterior locations for a week or more, which scenes will serve in the adaptation of the George Van Scheick novel prepared for the screen by Willard Mack. The principals supporting Miss Fredericks are Thomas Holding, who appeared with her in her first film play; Corinne Barker and Harvey Kirkland, who has a very important part.

Very satisfactory progress is being made in the filming of "The City of Comrades," Basil King's story which will star Tom Moore. Seena Owen continues as Moore's leading woman, she having played in two previous Moore releases. Otto Hoffman has been cast in the important role of "Lovey," which will be remembered by readers of this story, and others in the cast are Albert Roscoe, Mary Warren, Robert Walker, Kate Lester and Alex P. Francis. Harry Beaumont is directing this story.

Enid Bennett is now playing the role of the wife who keeps pace with her husband when he becomes bored by the monotony of a commonplace existence, and in this manner makes the climax of the story one in which husband and wife are in step together and happily united. Niles Welch is appearing as the husband, and Fred Niblo is the director. The story and continuity was supplied by C. Gardner Sullivan, and every member of the producing organization is enthusiastic concerning it. The consensus of opinion is that it will be Miss Bennett's best picture to date.

Final scenes for "The Money Corral," William S. Hart for Artcraft, have been filmed, and the studio is now busy with the preparation for his next film which will be started shortly. The picture just finished is one of the most expensive made by Hart. A fair ground with grand stands, side shows, and requiring more than a thousand people, was used for less than 500 feet of the story. This setting and the scenes made, will cost in the neighborhood of $20,000. The story is that of a Chicago broker requiring a body-guard, seeing a cowboy win the shooting matches at a big western rodeo. The broker engages the sharpshooter, and the remainder of the story is laid in and about Chicago. Supporting Mr. Hart are Jane Novak, Rhea Mitchell, Patricia Palmer, Molly McConnell, Hershall Mayall and Winter Hall. This story was written by Hart. and directed by Hart and Lambert Hillyer.

Delay in the making of the last scenes for "Daddy Long Legs" prevented the Mary Pickford Company from moving from the Sunset Studios to their new quarters at the Robert Brunton Studios until about March 8.

The cast for Miss Pickford's second First National has not been selected. This will be a adaptation from the story, "Burke's Amy," the title referring to a goat owned by the family. Sid Franklin will be the director of this second Pickford

Universal Newsettes

Producing activities are to be increased at Universal City, President Carl Laemmle said this week, and before the first of April three additional producing units will be at work,

A cast of well known screen players has been selected to support Mary MacLaren in "Prairie Gold," an adaptation from the St. Clair Lewis story now being filmed by Director Tod Browning. Besides Miss MacLaren, Dave Butler, who will be remembered for his work in "The Great Love," will be one of the principals; Thurston Hall, the leading man, together with Willard Louis and Lydia Titus will take part. This picture will be directed by Tod Browning.

Dorothy Phillips' next subject is to be a society drama at present titled "Light," which was written by her director, Allen Holubar, who spent several weeks attempting to find a suitable vehicle.

Monroe Salisbury, under the direction of Paul Powell, has completed his work in "The Great White Darkness," an original scenario by Stuart Paton and John B. Clymer, in which Claire Anderson and Helen Eddy shared honors. Salisbury is next to play an Italian role in a story titled "The Open Road," now being cast.

Three new short subjected companies are producing at Universal City. Two of these are making westerns. Pete Morrison and Helen Gibson are principals of one company directed by Jack Ford and Jacques Jaccard is directing Eddie Polo and Eileen Sedgwick.

Jack Dillon, who directed Olive Thomas' subjects for Triangle, and has been directing five reel Universal subjects for the past year, is to play and direct single reel comedies for the Universal, and this week began the filming of the first, titled "I Hope It Lasts." Dillon will be remembered as director of the first series of slapstick Strand Comedies, and later was director and comedian for Mack Sennett one year in the making of Triangle Comedies.

The William S. Campbell Universal animal comedy company is filming "And The Elephant Still Pursued Her."

Paramount-Artcraft

The Famous-Players Lasky studio is like a deserted village, save for one company working, that under the direction of C. B. deMille making the final scenes of "For Better, For Worse," the Edgar Selwyn play for the screen; but from preparations being made this quietude at the big producing plant, is the calm before a storm of production. From Milton Hoffman, general manager, it was learned that twelve special Artcraft productions will be made at this studio during the coming year instead of nine. In addition to the several star series of Bryant Washburn, Ethel Clayton, Wally Reid, and Lila Lee. Within three weeks all producing units will be at work on new plays.

Captain Robert Warwick will arrive in Los Angeles during the week of March 10th to begin work under the direction of Hugh Ford in his first Artcraft Special adapted from the William Gillett play "Secret Service." Settings and properties will be ready by the date of Captain Warwick's arrival, and production will be commenced at once.

Just how elaborate the coming deMille production really is to be, can best be gained by a glimpse in the wardrobe department. The publicity department gave out the statement "For Better, For Worse," was to be Mr. deMille's "most elaborate" to date, and the show me expression caused a tour to prove it. The wardrobe manager said the furs represented a cash value of $20,000, and anyone seeing them would not doubt it. Nearby were twenty-five gowns especially made for Gloria Swanson to wear in this picture, Miss Swanson is but one of the many big league quality in deMille's picture, for the cast includes every celebrity of the Lasky all star stock company.

The Lasky Company does not intend to throw away any money on production, but expect to make every cent spent show. Mr. Lasky stated, and the Specials are to have stories from the best authors, and they are going to try and make the term "all star cast" have a new meaning to theatre patrons.

The sign on the door reads: "619 Sunlight Arc Corporation. Frank Elliott, Western Representative." If Frank is as good a salesman as he is an actor, there's going to be a lot more sunlight out here.

A Complete Change in a Few Minutes—

GREENWOOD CHANGEABLE FEATURE SIGN

The Moving Picture Theatre has long needed a changeable sign that would be simple in its mechanism—easily changed—easily readable from a distance—and that would extend across the sidewalk.

All changeable signs heretofore have failed because of their great first cost—their very limited letter space—time consumed in making the change—lamp breakage, etc., etc.

With our Greenwood Changeable Feature Sign, we have removed all of these objectionable features and come to you with a sign that is perfectly illuminated by night without the glare of the exposed lamps, and which in the day time, with its black letters and its white reflecting background, is a perfect sign.

Our sign also shows the picture of the star being played.

A complete change is made in a very few minutes, the picture plates are lifted off and the panels in which the letters are, are lifted out and taken in the work room for the change, thus avoiding the work over the sidewalk.

Ten plates of stars of your selection and 250 letters go with each sign. Other stars as needed.

Send for catalogue, prices and full description and we will also tell you how others like it.

April Meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers

APRIL 14, 15 and 16, 1919, has been set as the official date for the next meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers.

Mr. W. C. Smith and Mr. J. C. Moulton, the Committee on Arrangements, have been very active, and have arranged for accommodation at the Adelphia Hotel, Thirteenth and Chestnut streets, Philadelphia.

The Papers Committee, consisting of R. P. Borrows, chairman, J. W. Allison and Max Mayer, has scheduled an array of papers to be presented at this meeting which should make it the most interesting, enlightening and enjoyable meeting of the organization yet held.

It is hoped that the meeting will be attended by 100% of the membership which now numbers about seventy. Since the Cleveland meeting the membership has been increased by the addition of several of the most progressive and talented men who are producing goods used in the manufacture and production of motion pictures.

It is hoped that all members of the Society between now and April 14 will do all that is within their power to bring in new members, who will be of value in promoting and improving motion pictures. This includes not only those interested in the mechanical side of the industry, but also in the technique of production.

Directors, experts in lighting effects, laboratory expérts and others should ally themselves with the Society, for through it certain standards can be established which will be of decided benefit to the production end of the industry. Membership applications should be forwarded in letter form to H. A. Campe, President of the Society, 5550 Raleigh street, Pittsburgh, Pa., W. C. Smith, treasurer, 90 Gold street, New York City, or E. K. Gillett, secretary, 729 Seventh avenue, New York City.

These applications will be presented at the Philadelphia meeting and acted upon by the Admissions Committee. Those making applications will be welcomed as guests at the Philadelphia meeting and, as soon as their applications for membership have been acted upon, they will receive all the privileges of the Society.

It may be well to mention that the object of the Society is the standardization of those branches of the industry which can be standardized, with the aim of bringing the industry into a more stable condition. Important steps have already been made in this direction, yet, by the association with the Society, of the technical men in the producing branch and an increased number in the equipment branch, further and more important strides can well be made.

Between the semi-annual meetings the various committees are active in the gathering together of data and considering the various mechanisms which fall within the scope of their committees with the view of submitting to the Society suggestions as to the possible standards applicable to them, which, if adopted would be of value to the industry.

The committees also choose topics dealing with the mechanisms under consideration and prepare exhaustive papers dealing with them. This is aimed to give the trade the latest and fullest authoritative information obtainable on these subjects so that any one entering the industry may, through the transactions of the various meetings in which these papers are published, obtain the latest information.

It is the hope, therefore, of those active in the Society that additional representatives from every branch of the industry will come forward and help continue and develop the standardization already so ably begun.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

The Small-town Projectionist and the Union

THE first letter received as a result of Mr. Goldie's letter on "The Small Town Operator" in the March 1st NEWS was from a projectionist upholding the union's side. Just as Mr. Goldie's article brought out many truths so does this letter from a Sioux City operator. Read again the two communications. Do you agree with either one—or is there still a third side? Write to the NEWS and give your own idea of conditions.

Sioux City, Ia., March 3, 1919.

Motion Picture News,
729 Seventh Avenue,
New York City, N. Y.

Gentlemen:

Your March 1st issue of the NEWS contained a very interesting article on projection by small town operators, written by a Mr. Garland L. Goldie. Much of what he claimed is doubtless true. The small town operators do have their large troubles, and for small pay. Every operator, whether Union or non-Union, will cheerfully bear witness to the fact. However, as a member of the great International Union, the I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. O., I take occasion to call the attention of this gentleman to the following facts.

First, the Unions do not bear any grudges against small town operators. On the contrary, when considering additional membership, in a local union, the "country operator" who has had more than one year's experience is selected in preference to "breaking in" a new man, or apprentice. Some of the cleverest and most competent members of the union began in a small town. But, the union reserves the right to examine each and every candidate for membership to determine his competence. These examinations are written and filed both at the local union headquarters and at the executive offices. No man who fails to prove his competency can rightly expect an organization to admit him to the international privileges and support which membership entitles him to. If a small town operator will give evidence of his competency any local union will gladly welcome him into their ranks. Good men are not plentiful by any means. Again, I would like to ask the gentleman. How long would it be before city operators would have to work twelve to sixteen hours per day, seven days per week, at $12.00 per week, if it wasn't for the union?

Secondly, Mr. Goldie states—rather proudly—that he has been an electrician, and also, stage-electrician, also operator for a number of years. From the general tone of his article I gather that he has not seen fit to honor either the I. B. of E. W. or the I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O. with carrying a membership card? Are we then, to understand that he has carefully avoided all electrical and operating work where union men were employed?

I am a union operator because I consider that if the profession is good enough to work at, it is good enough to carry a union card for. I am also a union electrician for the same reason. And I am only one of many thousands. But, are we to consider that Mr. Goldie is, perhaps, one of that class of men who style themselves "different" from others and "will not be dictated to by any labor union?" If not, may I inquire of him, then why does he so joyfully praise the man who does not want to, and does not need to, carry a card of Union membership, and deliberately criticise, and belittle the union man in his private comparison?

The Employers Association is always glad to find people of such inclinations. If the union is inclined to try to raise the standard of the efficiency of its membership, why should not the small town operator try to get in and get some of the benefits? Small town, non-union men, please consider this for yourselves. To get the money, "put up the goods" to the best of your ability. Study and learn all you can, and make use of the knowledge gained. If you want to work in city theatres, get a union membership card, and keep on "putting up the goods" when you get changed to a "city operator." A real honest to goodness operator will do his best and he's the one who gets the money. Let us hear more from Mr. Goldie and others interested.

Yours very truly,
(signed) John Rosecrans.

Give the Soldier a Chance

IF we look around in our small town booths we will find 65% of operator's jobs are being occupied by high school or grade school boys around 14 to 16 years of age. Projection is never more than fair, mostly worse than fair. At the present time there are many operators just discharged from the army who are out of work. It is in your interest, Mr. Exhibitor, in the interest of the whole industry and particularly in the interest of the "heroes" that you make a big change.

The motion picture industry is daily losing "boosters" and patrons because of poor projection. Look at your picture! See that yellow corner and that side motion! Here is your opportunity to increase your box office receipts. Employ one of the boys who were willing to do their part in the fighting. If you have a competent man, your projection will improve. If people come from 12 to 15 miles away to see your picture are you giving them a "square deal" if projection is not what it should be? A real operator means better projection, reduced light bill, bigger box office receipts, pleased and satisfied patrons, better advertising for your theatre and above all a "square deal" to patrons.

All this means to you, Mr. Exhibitor, is a little more money each week for the man in the booth. I know there are many theatres I have visited where a returned soldier could be used to advantage. These operators were willing to do their share for their country. Will the Exhibitors do the same as the boys come home?

We Don't Believe It Necessary, Either

WE do not believe the alternative to replace punch holes as "change-over" signals, as suggested by Mr. Cheney, will be looked on with favor by progressive projectionists. Quality of projection should be considered above all else, and any devices which impair the quality, merely to add to the operator's convenience, will not be tolerated by any man who takes pride in his results.

We agree with Mr. Cheney that "change-over" signals of punch-holes and gummed paper should not be necessary.

San Diego, Cal., Feb. 16, 1919.

Gentlemen: In the February 15 number of the NEWS A. B. W.'s article was very interesting as far as he went, which I do not think was far enough. I agree with him as to the producers and exchanges being responsible for the introduction of the punch marks on films, and am also well aware that a great many operators have since taken it up. As a remedy, suggest that you take it up with the I. A. to inform their membership to refrain from using a punch or otherwise mutilating of films while in their care. The N. A. M. F. L. with your able assistance could start a campaign against the exchanges and producers. The non-union operators, I think will gladly follow in the footsteps.

In that way the public might get all that they paid their money for without a lightning storm lasting from five to twenty-five seconds every 15 minutes.

If it is absolutely necessary to have a change over sign (which I don't think it is) why not use a strip of gummed paper about ⅛ of an inch wide and long enough to cover three exposures and stick it on the edge of the picture just inside of the sprocket holes, which will serve the same purpose as the punch mark or scratches, and still not ruin the production.

In more than ten years of operating I still have my first film to punch, and I get along very nicely without them. I either cut them out or cover them as the enclosed sample will show.

This would be a great help to finding the first and second raters as suggested elsewhere in the same issue of the news.

Respectfully,
(Signed) J. R. Cheney

Short Circuit in the Windings

Crewe, Va.

Editor Motion Picture News,
Dear Sir:

We operate our arcs on A. C. 110 v 50 amperes but do not get best results; ⅝" carbons get red from arc to holder while ¾" carbons are not much better.

We use a Compensarc which has been in use one year and until recently have not had any trouble.

Any advice as to a remedy will be appreciated.

Yours very truly,
H. S. Wheary,
Amuzu Theatre

Reply: Judging from the description of your difficulties in the operation of the 110 volt A. C. Compensarc using ⅝" and ¾" carbons at 50 amperes, it seems that your compensarc has a short circuit in its windings and that instead of using 50 amperes you are probably using considerably more. This, however, could only be determined by placing an ammeter in circuit with your arc. A loan of an ammeter could probably be made from your local electric company.

Trouble of this nature has been caused in several cases by nails or other metallic substances dropping into the control switch case and getting in contact with the segment of the switch. It might, therefor, be well for you to lift off the top case of your compensarc and make a thorough examination.

A Different Kind of Small Town Trouble

THE troubles of a small town operator are not always determined by the poor quality of his equipment. In proof of this is the following interesting letter from an operator who has to contend with architectural features of the worst kind:

"I noted with some interest the essay on the small town operator in the March 1 issue because I happen to be in that class. The writer failed to mention the fact that quite a few of them are crank-twisters, that they have to keep a crank turning, in addition to constantly adjusting an A. C. arc and watching the screen. My own particular case is a little worse yet, because I have to look through three roof braces at the screen, either one of which may be very easily mistaken for a misframe or vice versa—that is, the picture may be out of frame with the dividing line directly behind one of said braces, so that the operator would never see it if he did not put on some occasional acrobatics a la jumping jack. I agree with Mr. Goldie's contention that the small town man has to know quite a little about projection to achieve even fair results with the equipment he has to work with.

I am enclosing some film clippings that speak for themselves, the fact that the film was punched fully two hundred feet from the end makes the offense more flagrant. You will note that two of them were punched by the exchange itself."

How to Prepare Photographic Solutions

By J. I. Crabtree

MIXING OPERATIONS

Care in Handling Chemicals

Chemicals should be weighed out and the solutions prepared in a separate room, and care should be taken when handling such substances as hydroquinone, resublimed pyro, potassium ferricyanide, etc., not to shake the finer particles into the air, otherwise they will enter the ventilating system and settle out on benches, negatives, and prints, and cause no end of trouble in the way of spots and stains.

Weighing

Weigh out chemicals on pieces of paper and after transferring to the mixing vessel do not shake the paper but drop it into the sink and allow water to flow over it, thus dissolving the dust. Larger quantities are most conveniently weighed out in buckets.

Measuring

For small quantities a glass graduate marked off in ccs. should be used, for larger quantities use a bucket previously graduated, or mark off the inside of the tank or crock used for mixing. When measuring a liquid in a glass graduate place the eye on a level with the graduation mark and pour in the liquid until its lower surface coincides with this level. Owing to capillary attraction the liquid in contact with the walls of the graduate is drawn up the sides so that on viewing sideways it appears as if the liquid has two surfaces. All readings should be made from the lower surface and at room temperature because a warm liquid contracts on cooling.

Dissolving

The rapidity with which a substance dissolves in any solvent depends on its solubility and degree of fineness, the temperature of the solvent, and the rate of stirring. Since a chemical is usually more soluble in hot water than in cold the quickest way of mixing a solution is to powder it up and dissolve in hot water with stirring. In the case of a few substances like common salt which are only slightly more soluble in hot than in cold water, the use of hot water is of no advantage.

Since most solutions are intended for use at ordinary temperatures, if hot water is used for dissolving, the solution must be cooled off again if it is required for immediate use, though usually the time taken to do this is less than the extra time which would be taken up in dissolving the chemical in cold water. When mixing, therefore, as a general rule dissolve the chemical in as small an amount of hot water as possible, cool off, and dilute with cold water.

After diluting with water, thoroughly shake the solution if in a bottle, or stir if in a tank, otherwise the watter added will simply float on top of the heavier solution.

When mixing a solution in a tank, never add the dry chemicals to the tank but always make sure that the chemicals are dissolved by mixing in separate buckets and filtering into the tank.

In the case of anhydrous (dry) salts such as desiccated sodium carbonate, sodium sulphite, etc., always add the chemical to the water and not vice versa, otherwise a hard cake will form which will dissolve only with difficulty.

Filtering

The purpose of filtering is to remove suspended matter such as dirt, caused by the presence of dust in the chemicals used, and also any residue or undissolved particles which might settle on the plates, film or paper during development. There are several methods of removing such particles as follows:

1. Allow the solution to stand and draw off or decant the clear supernatent liquid. This method is particularly useful when the suspended matter is so fine that it will pass through a course filter.

Since coarse particles settle quickly the rate of settling of a semi-colloidal sludge can usually be hastened by mixing the solution in hot water, because the heat tends to coagulate the suspension and causes the particles to cluster together. Thus if crystals of sodium sulphide which are brown due to the presence of iron are dissolved in hot water the colloidal iron sulphide coagulates and settles out rapidly leaving a perfectly colorless solution.

2. Filter the solution through fabric or filter paper. Filtering through paper is usually a slow process and the continual dropping of the solution exposes it to the air thus causing oxidation. It is usually sufficient to filter through very fine cloth or muslin which has been washed thoroughly, otherwise the sizing matter in the fabric will be washed into the solution and settle out as a sludge.

3. As a modification of method 2, when mixing a quantity of solution in a tank, stretch a filter bag made of cloth over the tank, place the chemicals in the bag (about 6 inches deep) and allow hot water to flow into it. In this way the chemicals are dissolved and the solution filtered at the same time. A separate bag should be used for each solution so as to eliminate all risk of contamination.

The method of supporting the bag is shown in Fig. 1 the bag being stretched over a wooden frame and held in place by means of four iron bars passing through loops along the edges of the bag. For mixing hypo, such a bag is indispensable.

In the case of deep tanks such as are used for developing roll film and for motion picture work, the wooden frame can be dispensed with by adopting the arrangement shown in Fig. 2. The cloth bag about 6 inches deep is supported by means of iron bars passing through seams along opposite edges of the bag, and in turn the bars are held in place either by means of two pieces of wood passing over the ends of the bars as shown or by metal stirrups fitted to the sides of the tank.

It is important that the bag used should be shallow (6-9 inches deep), oherwise it will dip into the solution and the chemicals will dissolve very slowly.

4. A combination of methods 1 and 3 is the best and most desirable as follows:

(a) For quantities of solution up to 5 gallons, filter through cloth into a bottle or crock fitted with a side tube and pinch cock. In this way the fine particles settle out but the drainage tube is sufficiently high so as not to disturb the sediment. (See Fig. 3 on page 1846).

(b) For motion picture work the best arrangement for mixing is to place the chemical room immediately above the developing room and to mix the solutions in large wooden vats or enameled tanks in the dark room underneath. The solutions can then be mixed in advance, allowed to settle and tested, so that only perfect solutions pass into the tanks located in the dark room.

Removing Scum

When mixing a chemical solution, if method 4 above is not adopted, and especially if the solutions are not filtered, a scum usually rises to the surface consisting of fibers, dust, etc., which should be skimmed off with a towel.

When a fixing bath has been used for some time and is allowed to stand undisturbed for a few days, any sulphuretted hydrogen gas which may be present in the atmosphere forms a metallic looking scum of silver sulphide at the surface of the liquid, and on immersing the film this scum attaches itself to the gelatine and prevents the action of the developer. Any such scum should be carefully removed before use with a sheet of blotting paper.

Measuring Temperatures

Temperatures of solutions are measured either by the Centigrade or Fahrenheit thermometer. On the Centigrade scale water freezes at zero degrees and boils at 100°, and on the Fahrenheit scale the corresponding readings are 32° and 212°, so that 100° C. are equivalent to 212° — 32° = 180° F. or 1° C. is equivalent to 9/5° F.

To convert degrees Centigrade to Fahrenheit, multiply by 9/5 and add 32. To convert degrees Fahrenheit to Centigrade subtract 32 and divide by 9/5.

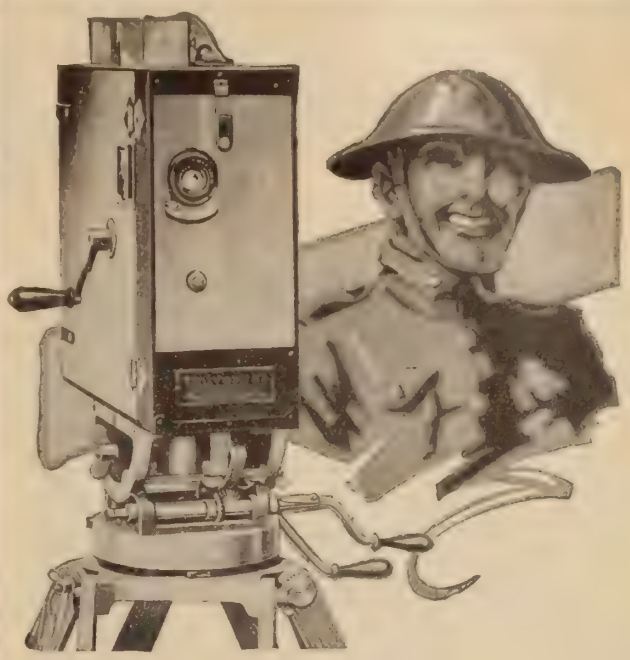
In photography the Fahrenheit thermometer is almost universally employed. There would be no appreciable advantage in adopting the Centigrade scale, while the precision of the Fahrenheit scale is greater since an error of 1° in reading the Centigrade scale means an error of practically 2° on the Fahrenheit scale.

HOW TO MIX DEVELOPING SOLUTIONS

A developer usually contains four solid ingredients as follows:

A. The developing agent (Elon, hydroquinone, pyro, paraminophenol, etc.)

B. The alkali (carbonates and hydroxides of lithium, sodium, potassium and ammonium).



C. The preservative (sulphites, bisulphites, and metabisulphites of sodium and potassium).

D. The Restrainer (bromides and iodides of sodium, potassium and ammonium).

If a developing agent like hydroquinone is dissolved in water, the solution will either not develop at all or only very slowly, and on standing it will gradually turn brown due to what is known as oxidation or chemical combination of the hydroquinone with the oxygen present in the air in contact with the surface of the liquid. This oxidation product is of the nature of a dye and will stain fabrics or gelatine just like a dye solution.

On adding a solution of an alkali such as sodium carbonate, the hydroquinone at once becomes a developer, but at the same time the rate of oxidation is increased to such an extent that the solution very rapidly turns dark brown, and if a plate is developed in this solution it becomes stained and fogged. The subject of "Chemical Fog" has been fully treated by the author in a separate article (Amer. Ann. Photl, 1919) to which the reader is referred.

DEMOBILIZED

The Universal Motion Picture Camera played its part effectively in times of war. The U. S. Signal Corps men who used the Universal exclusively in the war zone to record the Yankee participation in the Big Scrap are all enthusiastic about this camera, and the way it stood the most exacting tests ever encountered by any camera.

They tell in glowing phrases of Universal efficiency, ease of loading and the rapidity with which it can be set up. The amount of knocking and banging around it will stand without getting out of order, develops in each man who has used the Universal a fondness for his instrument akin to the fondness of the sharpshooter for his pet rifle.

Now the Universal has been demobilized. The U. S. Government does not need all the resources of our motion picture plant any longer, and we are at liberty to put this tried and true machine at the service of the civilian photographer for use in every field where the motion picture camera is needed.

The Explorer and the Universal

The Universal has not only proven its top-notch efficiency in the military field, but explorers and travelers who have used it are enthusiastic in its praises. Martin Johnson, the noted explorer who succeeded in making pictures of the man-eating savages of the Solomon Islands, swears by his trusty Universal. And he is not the only well-known explorer who is Universal equipped.

Universal All-Round Utility

Universal Cameras have been used with the greatest satisfaction by studio men, newspaper men, commercial photographers, and those engaged in the making of educational films. There are so many features of excellence in the Universal Camera that it would be impossible to detail them all in one advertisement. We therefore invite you to write for the Universal booklet which gives you full particulars about the one-piece construction, the adjustable shutter, the automatic dissolve, Universal tilting and panoramic tripod, and all the other features which make up the motion picture perfection attained in the Universal. Write for it at once, and learn how the camera that made good for Uncle Sam is made.

If we add a little sodium bisulphite to the brown colored solution mentioned above, the brown color or stain is bleached out and a colorless solution is obtained. Therefore, if the preservative is first added to the developer, on adding the accelerator the solution remains perfectly clear because the sulphite preserves or protects the developing agent from oxidation by the air.

As a rule the preservative should be dissolved first.

An apparent exception to this rule should be made when dissolving Elon in concentrated solution, since this developing substance is insoluble in a strong solution of sodium sulphite, while if a sulphite solution is added to a strong solution of the developing agent a white precipitate is formed.* When once the Elon is dissolved, however, it takes a fairly high concentration of sulphite to bring it out of solution again, though only a low concentration is required to prevent the Elon from dissolving.

On this account some direction sheets recommend that the Elon should be dissolved first, though if water containing dissolved air is used the Elon will oxidize and only a small amount of oxidation product is necessary to cause chemical fog. Therefore, when dissolving Elon, dissolve a portion of the sulphite first, sufficient to prevent the immediate oxidation and yet not enough to prevent the Elon from dissolving readily, then dissolve the Elon and finally add the remainder of the sulphite.

The alkali (say carbonate) may then be added:

(a) Dissolve the carbonate separately and add to the cooled Elon-sulphite solution. There is danger, however, of the Elon precipitating out before the carbonate is added.

* This consists of methyl paraminophenol base which is relatively insoluble, but in combination with sulphuric acid (Elon) it is readily soluble. When sodium sulphite is added to Elon the acid portion is neutralized and the difficultly soluble base is precipitated. The presence of acid may be shown by adding a little sodium carbonate to Elon when effervescence takes place. The reason why Elon does not precipitate with sodium carbonate is because the Elon base combines with it forming a sodium salt which is readily soluble.

Cue Sheets Latest Hits | Music | Musical Equipment

Progressive Organist In the Town of Toledo

THE editor of these columns recently was forced to "lay over" in the city of Toledo, Ohio, and seized the opportunity to visit Mr. Edward A. Zorn, manager of the Temple theater of that city, a gentleman known for his most progressive ideas in film presentation and a strong advocate for appropriate music with the pictures.

As is the custom of every enterprising manager to watch his first show, the writer sat in the back of the theatre with Mr. Zorn while the organist, Mr. Tom Grierson, musically interpreted the opening performance. It was quickly demonstrated that the musician at the instrument was not only an artist at his work, but quick-witted and alive to the requirements of film interpretation.

In a delightful conversation with this musician, after the performance, we learned that his mode of procedure in picture work was as follows, and which is herewith presented almost in his own words, "You know I have no opportunity of seeing the picture before the first show commences. Hence I am dependent exclusively upon the cue sheet which is, as was said of the Waverly pen, 'a boon and blessing to men.' My system is to procure the cut sheet and read it through, and then pin it on my music rack instead of the music. I carefully note the suggested compositions, but more carefully the descriptive tempos which are given with the music suggested, and am guided mainly by these. As long as I know the character of each number required, as the film drama is unreeled, and when the necessary changes are to take place, I can always to my own satisfaction 'get away with the first show,' wherein afterwards I can then select my music for the rest of the performance."

This statement of Mr. Grierson is as modest as he is himself. It is a pleasure to record that this first showing was a revelation of what music together with improvising can mean. The picture was "His Parisian Wife" and Mr. Grierson in his setting used with excellent effect such compositions, as "Extase" by Ganne, "Dreams of Love" by Lizst, "Sleeping Beauty" by Tschaikowsky, "Queen of Sheba Ballet" by Goldmark, "Wooing Hour" by Zamecnik, "Enfantine Suite" by G. Lardelli, "Scenes Pittoresques" by Massenet, "Merrie England" by E. German. Not only were these played from memory, but they were developed and improvised upon with charming originality and effect. To divert a moment to previous articles, offered in these columns, this is but a further demonstration that the secret of a successful musical interpretation is dependent upon an excellent knowledge of synchronization and improvization.

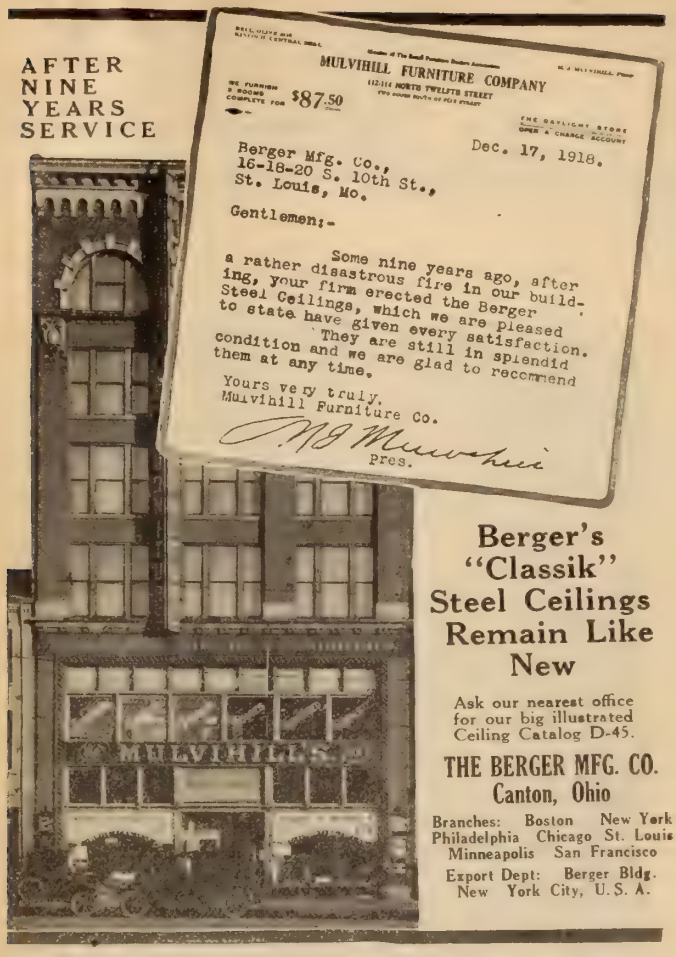
It is always interesting to learn something of the biography of a musician who has displayed such remarkable ability, and we herewith record his personal experiences, which he expressed in this interview.

"I was born in Carlisle, England, the same town as the President's people came from, and received my initial musical education at Carlisle Cathedral, singing as a chorister. Studied organ under Mr. Sydney Nicholson (organist designate of Westminster Abbey) and Doctor Wadley, two of the most prominent exponents of the modern school of organ playing which has as its founder Sir Walter Parratt, the King's organist.

Have had extensive experience in orchestra work which is absolutely essential to the successful theatre organist, and have directed my own orchestras on several private yachts and conducted tours on Cunard and White Star Liners in the Mediterranean, West Africa and Trans-Atlantic. In this way have traversed all of the South Seas. Panama Canal, circumnavigated South America and explored the Amazon River for 2,600 miles. This has enabled me to gather together an extensive repertoire of the music of different nations.

"My Moving Picture work has been almost exclusively on the Hope-Jones Unit Orchestra and have held prominent organ positions in New York City, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Columbus,

Tom Grierson, Organist



"Voicing my opinion, I consider the Hope-Jones the only adequate one-man instrument which is suitable for picture work. Particularly its flexibility, orchestral tone simulation and its revolutionary ideas of stop manipulation places it in a class by itself.

"It is wonderfully effective in conjunction with an orchestra in which work there is great scope for a competent organist. Last season the organ and orchestra here gave several morning musicales, when the heavier symphony works were performed very successfully.

"I prophesy a great future for the musician in the moving picture world, particularly the versatile organist who can give a musical interpretation of a picture without slavishly following the old trend of droning organ playing which has always been associated with church and organs in general. The Hope-Jones has already revolutionized the old organ form of technique, and even calls for a new form of organ composition framed on the color lines of the modern orchestra composers such as Percy Grainger, Wolf-Ferrari, &c.

"The three main aspirations of a theatre organist should be in my humble opinion firstly RHYTHM, secondly REPERTOIRE and thirdly REGISTRATION. The first is the secret of most successful organists. I have found it doesn't much matter what you play so long as it is conveyed intelligently to the public. Repertoire is your material for building up a picture, and the third is essential in an organ because thru that an organist can display his individuality and originality and relieve the monotony which has been the biggest argument against organs in conjunction with the silent drama.

Review of Latest Musical Compositions

1—"Mickey"—waltz. Featured in the great movie starring Mabel Normand. (Waterson, Berlin & Snyder Co., 47th St., B'way, N. Y.)

2—"After All," by the writers of "Smiles." The successor of "Smiles." The new song hit. Get it. Play it. Feature it. Program it. Arranged as a wonderful fox-trot for both orchestra and band. (J. H. Remick, 227 W. 46th St., N. Y.)

3—Suite of Four Poetic Album Leaves, by Gustav Saenger. Burlesque, "Tendre Souvenir," "Danse Lanquide," "Petite Scherzo." Short, catchy numbers, in which the fantastic element predominates and in which harmonious and brilliant effects are introduced with striking success. Particularly suitable for the concert stage or wherever concise, descriptive numbers are demanded. The arrangement is by Charles J. Roberts and is of equal effectiveness for either small or large orchestra. (Carl Fischer, N. Y.)

4—"Oh! What a Time for the Girlies, When the Boys Come Marching Home." Harry Ruby's big song hit which is setting the country wild. (Waterson, Berlin & Snyder Co., Strand Theatre Bldg., City.)

5—"Arabian Nights," composed by M. David and Wm. Hewitt. The annual song and instrumental number of the better class, issued by the House of Harms. A live instrumental hit for live leaders. (T. B. Harms, 62 W. 45th St., N. Y.)

6—"Bluin' the Blues"—The original Dixieland "Jazz" band offer through the popular Feist Edition, their greatest "Jazz" hit. This number is a positive sensation wherever it is played. (Leo. Feist, 249 W. 40th St., N. Y.)

7—"A Kiss for Cinderella"—Another tremendous hit by the writers of "I'm Always Chasing Rainbows." One of the real big hits from the musical comedy, "Oh, Look," now touring the country. Every leader who has programmed it says "It is a bigger hit than 'I'm Always Chasing Rainbows.'" (McCarty & Fisher, 224 W. 46th St., N. Y.)

8—"Mysterious Nights," by S. M. Berg. Musicians claim that the writing of a waltz is never a particular strain upon the imagination of the composer. Admittedly this is correct in the average waltz placed upon the market. "Mysterious Nights," however, is of that character of waltz which proves the exception to the rule. It is a haunting melodious melody which once heard immediately claims the attention of its audience and recognition as unusual. Furthermore, the dramatic element entwined with the harmony classifies it as a waltz which should be recognized by musicians and the layman as unique, harmonious and unusual. In comparison it may be classified as the equal of Joyce's best waltzes. (Belwin, Inc., 701 Seventh Ave., N. Y.)

9—"Camelia"—From the Boutonniere Suite, by Gerard Tonning. No flower of the garden has been more written, sung and told of than the Camelia. The composer's conception is a beautiful melodious ¾ Allegretto Moderato which, either as piano solo for the lone pianist or organist for any instrumental combination to symphonic orchestra, will be particularly delightful, and the repetition only enhances its beautiful inspired melody. (Belwin, Inc.)

Another Patriotic Song Hit

THE music editor of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS is in receipt of a song copy entitled "The Battle Line of Liberty" published by the L. S. Florence Music Company of Haverhill, Mass.

This composition is musically very well constructed and is of an inspiringly practical and patriotic type. It is a very valuable asset for any musician playing pictures and is very appropriate for marching amid military scenes of an American national character.

WHY?

Because we steadily have refused to cheapen or lower the quality of our goods, even though others have sought to undermine our prestige by underselling with cheapened products. That is one of the reasons why nine out of every ten frames sold bear the name "NEWMAN." Insist on that name and save money.

The Complete Plan Book

Compiled by Peter Milne

Pictures Reviewed in Advance

[In addition to Advance Reviews—covering pictures shown too early to be included in The Complete Plan Book—readers will also find under this heading each week the reviews of short features and serial episodes.]

Christie Single Reel Comedies
(Christie Film Co., Inc.—Directed by Al Christie)

THREE of the most recent Christie comedies possessing the distinctive Christie type, are "Good Gracious Bobby," featuring Bobby Vernon and Patricia Palmer; "Salvation Sue," featuring Dorothy DeVore and Earl Rodney; and "Welcome Home," featuring Dorothy DeVore and Earl Rodney.

In "Good Gracious Bobby," the reluctant Bobby Vernon is forced by his two pals to impersonate the chaperon who failed to arrive as mentor pending the visit of three charming young girls. Bobby disliked that job at first, but thoroughly enjoyed it afterwards when he found that his spare time could be profitably spent kissing the girls while jeering at the green-eyed monster enveloping his pals. However, his joy is short lived, although intensely exciting. The real chaperon arrives. In "Salvation Sue," Dorothy DeVore, as a movie queen, was not acceptable to her sweetheart's father as a prospective daughter-in-law, but after the father finds her portraying a little Salvation Army girl he thinks that this is her real self and importunes her to save his son from the movie queen. She does it after several rapid comedy situations.

Dorothy DeVore and Earl Rodney portray a young married couple in "Welcome Home" and turn their bungalow into a regular military barracks, fireworks and all, to make her visiting uncle feel at home when he returns from the war. The major finally tells them that he never saw a trench, but had been in the commissary department only, and in England. But not until after they had almost made his life a wreck between them.

These three Christie comedies show plenty of real fast action without the aid of a slapstick and are clean and amusingly entertaining. While they do not call forth any spontaneous hearty laughter they surely entertain hugely and thoroughly satisfy. Distributed by State Right exchanges.—Tom Hamlin.

"The Carter Case"
(Oliver Films.—First Three Episodes)

ARTHUR B. REEVE'S Craig Kennedy, scientific detective, is the central figure of the new serial produced by Oliver Films, with Herbert Rawlinson and Marguerite Marsh in the principal roles. Of the three episodes shown to the trade last week, the third is the best, as in this number Kennedy gets down to some real scientific work in freeing the heroine from a planned death trap. In the other two numbers, it must be confessed, Mr. Reeve and his collaborator, John W. Grey, showed little regard for the science of serial construction.

The first episode gets away to a poor start, bits of action are started and not concluded, there is none of that element of speed so essential to the successful serial and which Mr. Reeve himself has been wont to develop to its most useful degree. In these early reels there is also much evidence of poor titling, the evidence being in the subtitles themselves. And again Craig bungles quite a bit for a scientific detective.

However there is the merit of the third episode for a consolation. It appears that at this point the producers realized that something was wrong and started in to remedy it. It is to be hoped that succeeding numbers will show the same remedy.

"The Carter Case" has a hero, a heroine, four or five suspicious characters, any one of whom might be the mysterious masked character, and in this respect follows the Reeve formula of serial construction.—Peter Milne.

"The Silk Lined Burglar"
(Universal Special—Six Reels)

"THE SILK LINED BURGLAR" is one of Jack Boyle's "Boston Blackie" stories that are seen from time to time in the Red Book Magazine. This central character of the author is a good crook and he is an ideal one to be transplanted to the screen now and again. In "The Silk Lined Burglar" he assists a girl in opening a safe, not knowing her motive. They manage to get away from the frenzied owner, but not from Secret Service agents, one of whom is the girl's sweetheart. The owner of the safe, a German, demands their arrest, and as there is no proof of this gentleman's violation of the espionage act in his papers, it seems they must face the music, until at the last moment the music turns around and faces them. The German's phonograph records contain the seditious messages. So Boston Blackie gets a job in the Secret Service.

Priscilla Dean has the star part and plays it with sincerity and a good show of feeling. Sam De Grasse is the Boston Blackie in the case, while Ashton Dearholt, Sam Appel, Lillian West and Fred Kelsey make up a good supporting cast.

There is much about "The Silk Lined Burglar" that is good. The only thing open for serious criticism is its extra reel. Running the average length, its tempo would result in even a greater amount of interest being stimulated.—Peter Milne.

"THE WINNING GIRL"—PARAMOUNT

Shirley Mason's Latest "Nice Little Picture"

"THE WINNING GIRL" is more of an interesting lesson in thrift than dramatic fare, although it will be classified as a comedy-drama. One almost expects to see "Buy W. S. S." as a trailer to it all. In this respect it resembles the school of Saturday Evening Post fiction from which it is derived that points a business lesson by means of a set of fictitious characters. After all, however, it is good entertainment though obviously stereotyped as regards its highlights.

Shirley Mason, featured as the daughter of a most unbusinesslike old Major who also boasts a son and three step-children, creates a bright and happy character. In the scenes of tom-boy fun she is delightfully humorous. And Harold Goodwin renders valuable assistance as the brother. There is another homely comedy characterization contributed by Theodore Roberts as the old Major. Niles Welch's war hero is suitable except in the scene when he comes home wounded, when the acting is way over-done.

"The Winning Girl" can be set down as an average comedy-drama. It's the sort of production one refers to as a "nice little picture."—Length, 5 reels.—Released Feb. 23.—Peter Milne.

AD TALK

Shirley Mason, the dainty and vivacious motion picture star, will be seen at the ——— theatre beginning ——— for ——— days in the Paramount photoplay, "The Winning Girl."

She has a long record in filmdom despite her youth, and at the age of four she created the part of Little Hal in "The Squaw Man," on the legitimate stage. She is only five feet high and weighs but ninety-four pounds, and in her role as the little mother of a half dozen little step-brothers and step-sisters, portrayed in "The Winning Girl," she is perfectly fitted.

Her father in the play is a proud old Major who regrets that she has been born a girl instead of the boy that he wanted and expected to be so proud of. He names her Jamesina, or Jemmy for short. After the mother's death the old Major married a widow with several children and Jemmy is soon the busy little mother to all of them.

When a mutual love is shown between Jemmy and a young aviator home on a furlough, his wealthy mother objects to the proposed marriage and the aviator is recalled to duty in France. The old Major finally confides to his daughter Jemmy that he owes every store in town and also has a $2,000 mortgage coming due.

Jemmy quickly rises to the occasion and secures work in a factory where cloth for airplanes is being manufactured. She soon has the entire family of little brothers and sisters working at the same place and the debts soon disappear. Jemmy discovers a German spy pouring acid on some of the cloth for Government airplanes and receives a reward for her exposure. This lifts the mortgage. The wide publicity given Jemmy also wins over the aviator's wealthy mother who admires her patriotism, and when the young aviator comes over on his next furlough the armistice is signed the moment he takes Jemmy into his arms.

A well balanced cast, with Niles Welch as the young aviator and Theodore Roberts, famous for characterizations, as the old Major, assist the dainty star in this story of captivating charm and genuine heart appeal.

THE STORY

Major and Mrs. Milligan named their little baby girl Jamesina, or Jemmy for short. They were disappointed because the arrival wasn't a boy. When Mrs. Milligan dies the Major weds a poor widow with three children and Jemmy at seventeen years is recognized as the tomboy mother of the Milligan children. Ransacking an old trunk, Jemmy dons some finery and surprises her father by her startling resemblance to her mother, his dead wife. Jemmy meets Stanley Templeton, an aviator of wealthy parentage on furlough. The Major smilingly approves this case of love at first sight, but Mrs. Templeton vetoes the proposition.

Jemmy refuses to wed the aviator without his mother's permission and he returns to France for action. The Major confided to Jemmy that he (her father) owes every store in town and a mortgage due for $2,000. Then she accepts work in a factory manufacturing cloth for airplanes and all her brothers and sisters are also soon employed at the same place. The Major protests against this humiliation, but the combined wages soon quiet him. Jemmy catches a German spy destroying a quantity of the airplane cloth with acid and she is given a large reward. This incident gained such wide publicity that now Mrs. Templeton is sorry that she prevented her son from marrying such a patriotic young woman. Jemmy is able to lift the mortgage and pay all the debts, but mourns secretly because she has not heard from her sweetheart for several months.

Then one day as she leaves the factory she discovers young Templeton waiting in front with an automobile. He tells her that his mother praised her for her pluck and many good qualities. During this welcome exchange of confidences the news is flashed that the armistice has been signed. Both the Major and Mrs. Templeton warmly approve of the engagement which is announced.

SUGGESTIONS

Here we have a little star just five feet in height and weighing but ninety-four pounds acting as mother to a lot of little brothers and sisters, and practically supporting them as well in these high-cost-of-living days. She certainly earned the reward which came afterwards and married for love into a wealthy family to a nice boy who as an aviator earned his laurels above the battlefields of France. This is descriptive matter that can be used in newspaper stories, advertising, or on post cards.

The fact that Niles Welch is leading man and Theodore Roberts the sterling character man appears as "The Winning Girl's" father, an old Major, can be utilized. The disappointment of the old Major was keen when his wife gave birth to the girl instead of the boy he expected. But the girl certainly proved that she was a regular fellow.

If you mail post cards to your mailing list they might be worded very effectively as follows: "Dear Mr. Smith—If you have made up your mind in advance that your first born was going to be a boy—and had even gone so far as to name him James—and he turned out a girl after all—WOULDN'T IT MAKE YOU MAD? That's what happened to Jemmy's father, the Major, but he later on said: 'Thank God, she's a girl.' You'll say the same thing when you see Shirley Mason in 'The Wining Girl,' a Paramount photoplay, at the ——— theatre for ——— days, beginning ———. Cordially yours, Manager ———."

CATCH LINES

Jemmy finds that her poverty was a bar in the eyes of her wealthy prospective mother-in-law-to-be, so she went and acquired a reputation. She captured a German spy and the wide publicity and reward gained opened the wealthy one's eyes and earned her admiration.

Even when she arrived in the world she was a disappointment. Her father had his heart set on a boy. But she soon proved that skirts was a proposition that did not count in patriotism or courageous self-sacrifice and her father finally admitted that he was just tickled to death that she was a girl after all.

She was just a small girl named Jemmy, but possessed a determined nature. She finally won out against enormous obstacles and not only won her war hero, but also wealth.

"WHEN MEN DESIRE"—FOX

Theda Bara Makes Miraculous Escape from Germany

AS Marie Lohr, Theda Bara is caught in Strassbourg, Germany, at the United States' entrance into the war. The five reels go to show her attempts and final success at escaping to Switzerland and her American sweetheart. The suspense of the picture lies in the fact that Marie Lohr is ever in jeopardy of being forced into the arms of one Hun or another. After she escapes from one, Major Von Rohn, and poses as a notorious German secret service agent, she is still menaced by a captain and a lieutenant. Her escape is finally made possible by her sweetheart, who lands down in an airplane and sneaks off with her.

"When Men Desire" doesn't contain as much substance as the usual Bara picture and its inconsistencies are rather numerous. The escape in the airplane is more or less a flight of wild imagination, while the manner in which the German officers are hoodwinked by the hero is a telling but misplaced form of ridicule.

The star's performance is up to the standard she always maintains. G. Raymond Nye is a stalwart Von Rohn, who dies hard.—Length, 5 reels.—Released March 9.—Peter Milne.

THE CAST

Marie Lohr .....Theda Bara
Robert Stedman.....Fleming Ward
Von Rohn.....G. Raymond Nye
Elsie Henner .....Florence Martin
Lola Santez .....Maude Hill
Professor Lohr.....Edward Elkus

Story by E. Lloyd Sheldon and J. Searle Dawley.

Directed by J. Gordon Edwards.

THE STORY

When Marie Lohr, of German ancestry, finishes her musical studies in Germany and tries to get back to America, her native land, her path is beset with difficulties. Her German suitor, Major Von Rohn, tries to keep her estranged from her sweetheart, Robert Stedman, an American aviator. Stedman is ordered to conduct a group of Americans out of Germany and forced to leave Marie behind.

She learns that Von Rohn had given her passport to a notorious woman bound for France to propagate against the Americans, when an explosion kills this woman, Marie assumes her identity, but is recognized by Major Von Rohn at the frontier. She had communicated with Robert and when Von Rohn visits her she hides Robert in a closet and locks the door.

In the closet, Stedman hears Von Rohn threatening to make Marie his bride. Instead of killing her for her crime of spying, he will make this woman his own. Stedman rages in the closet and makes a sound. Von Rohn starts.

"Who is in there?" he demands.

Marie makes no reply. Von Rohn strides toward the closet and draws his revolver. He is ready to shoot. But Marie seizes a dagger and plunges it into the villain's back. He reels and falls. She has killed him.

Quickly Marie opens the closet door. Stedman changes clothes with the German, and so the two lovers escape. Just as the mob is about to fall upon them they dash into Stedman's aeroplane and are carried to safety and happiness.

AD TALK

Theda Bara in a typical Theda Bara role is shown in the William Fox production, "When Men Desire," to be shown at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Only in rare instances can a woman win a man's love by posing as a coquette. Stepping into the shoes of a notorious woman is the sole means by which the heroine can find her back into her lover's arms.

Miss Bara plays the part of an innocent young woman who is kept a prisoner by jealous rivals. No matter what she does to escape, she is always caught. At last she dons the garments and the manners of a woman whose bad reputation is well known and through her smiles and coquetry she wins the aid of some of the lovers of the woman she impersonates.

Through these desperate methods she finally succeeds in escaping her persecutors and finding her true lover.

The picture is sure to abound in hair-breadth escapes and innumerable thrilling situations.

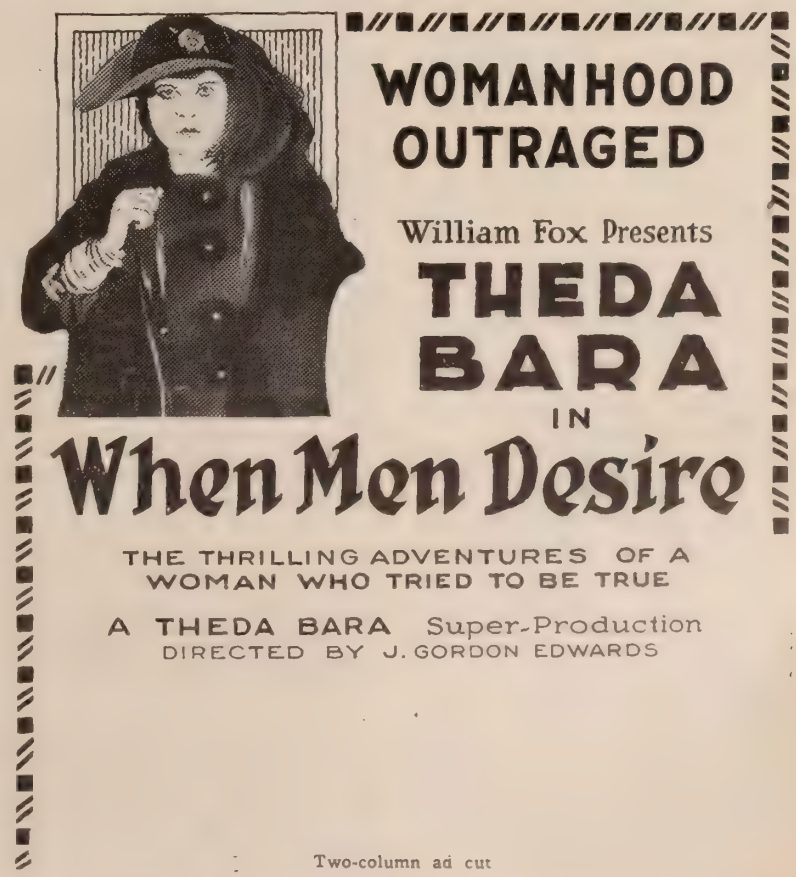
CATCH LINES

When vamping on this earth begins to pall and assumes the common home garden variety, is Theda Bara disheartened? No—indeed. She literarily goes "up-in-the-air." But she vamps just the same. Her first airplane flight is shown in her latest William Fox super-production, "When Men Desire."



There is something revolting to a young girl forced by fate to step into a dead woman's shoes. Especially if the one who passed away was a notoriously bad woman. And the young girl had to act that part consistently to enable her to escape from her persecutors. This is what Theda Bara's role calls for in "When Men Desire," and it is declared that she holds your sympathy and keen interest every moment.

Singing the American anthem is what Theda Bara does in Germany during her portrayal of Marie Lohr in "When Men Desire."

SUGGESTIONS

If you book this picture it is up to you to take advantage of several opportunities presented to properly advertise it. Of course we take it that you consider the star—Theda Bara—your biggest asset, as she has appeared in such stupendous super-productions.

You can arouse the interest of your patrons by catering to their curiosity. Thus if you display a full-face portrait of Theda Bara in your lobby and cover her eyes with a mask, you can have a placard displayed as follows: "Who is she? She is a woman whom men desire. She will lift the mask from her face on ——— night for the first time at this theatre. Come and meet her."

"BLIND MAN'S EYES"—METRO

Bert Lytell Excellent in Murder Mystery Tale

THE reviewer has had occasion before to mention the skilled acting of Bert Lytell. But his performance in " Blind Man's Eyes " is likely to overshadow anything he has yet done on the screen. Again does his delightful naturalness stand uppermost in his characterization of Hugh Overton, the central figure of this story. It is a remarkably well sustained characterization in every respect and when an occasional brief outburst of pent up emotionalism is due, Mr. Lytell never falters.

" Blind Man's Eyes " is different from the star's two previous pictures in that it is a murder mystery story, or rather a mystery story based on a fake murder. Overton is accused of murdering a man who is still alive but who prefers to live in seclusion rather than risk being convicted for his own misdeeds. There is originality in this twist to the plot that manifests itself in the remarkable story interest generated by its unwinding. There may be a few times when the spectator feels that the adaptor missed a headlight or two in the screen version but, after all, the star's performance easily counterbalances all shortcomings of small nature.

Naomi Childers is a pleasing heroine while Frank Currier, Joseph Kilgour and Morris Foster handle other prominent roles appropriately. Length, 5 reels.—Released March 10.—Peter Milne.

AD TALK

Bert Lytell, the Metro star, comes to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in " Blind Man's Eyes." Naomi Childers is the " blind man's eyes " for her father, a leading attorney who is blind.

She also has eyes for Hugh Overton, the role portrayed by Bert Lytell. And with his own eyes, he has eyes for Harriet Santoine, " the blind man's eyes " portrayed by Naomi Childers.

Escaping from prison where he had started serving a life sentence after being convicted of slaying a man, Hugh Overton obtains nearly all the proof necessary to establish his entire innocence. This versatile star has a part that his army of followers will enjoy seeing him in, and an excellent cast appears in his support.

In the role of Harriet Santoine, Naomi Childers manages to obtain the balance of the proof necessary to completely establish the innocence of young Overton by producing the very man he is supposed to have slain. It is a compelling story full of the heart interest and adapted from the novel of the same name by William McHarg and Edwin Balmer.

John Ince directed the production. After registering a series of successes in his recent screen production Bert Lytell is expected to gain several thousands more admirers in " Blind Man's Eyes."

SUGGESTIONS

As all of the recent productions starring Bert Lytell have evidently scored heavily throughout the country, according to reports, it would be first class showmanship to dwell strongly on the capabilities of this versatile young star. Mention his recent successes and tell them that this unique story contains a mystery that will hold the interest and the romance with touches of light comedy to enhance its great entertaining value.

Naomi Childrers not only uses her own eyes to good effect for her own well being, but also uses them effectively in aiding her blind father, a successful attorney. Her perspective is still keen enough to have her eyes show her the one man in the whole world that she wants for a sweetheart. A query directed to all young ladies, requesting them to make their eyes behave by witnessing the havoc that a pair of certain eyes wrought on Bert Lytell, can be used to good effect in the lobby.

Hugh Overton, otherwise known as Philip Eaton, returns to the home of his youth with the object of clearing his name from the stigma of murder. He had been convicted of the slaying of Matthew Latrone, an unscrupulous financier, whose charred body was supposed to have been found after a fire on his country estate.

Overton's tie clasp, found near the body, was the damning evidence in connection with a remark that Overton had once made: " Killing was too good for Latrone." He was sent to the penitentiary for life, but escaped later and now has the proof to clear himself.

Basil Santoine, a shrewd Chicago lawyer, notwithstanding his blindness, is on the train which is bearing Overton to his home town. His daughter Harriet is with him. Also the lawyer's secretary, Donald Avery, who has instructions from Latrone, who is still alive, to prevent Overton from arriving.

Avery mistakes the berth and consequently it is the lawyer, his employer, who receives the murderous blow intended for Overton. The lawyer, not seriously hurt, suspects Overton and invites him to his own home so that he may by close observation, be sure before he accuses him. This pleases Overton, who is certain that Santoine has some papers which will clear him of all implication in the former supposed murder.

Overton falls in love with Harriet, who is known as " the blind man's eyes," and together they manage to foil Latrone, who is aided by the unscrupulous secretary, Avery, in gaining entrance to Santoine's house for the purpose of securing the very papers that Overton is after. Latrone is shot in the scuffle, and Overton, aided by the mysterious papers, managers to clear his name of the former charge and wins Harriet, " the blind man's eyes."

CATCH LINES

" The Blind Man's Eyes " help to clear Bert Lytell in his role of a falsely accused and convicted slayer at the ——— theatre this week. But these same eyes are possessed by a very winsome young lady who also uses them to aid her blind father, a successful attorney.

If you escaped from prison when serving a life sentence after being falsely accused of slaying a man, would you risk returning to the scene of your alleged crime in the apparently fruitless effort of clearing your name? This is what Hugh Overton (Bert Lytell, the popular Metro star) does in " Blind Man's Eyes " at the ——— theatre this week.

In spite of the recent series of successes starring that versatile young artist of the screen, Metro claims that Bert Lytell eclipses all his past performances in " Blind Man's Eyes." This claim can be discussed with a clearer vision after you see him at ——— theatre this week.

"A MIDNIGHT ROMANCE"—FIRST NATIONAL

Romantic Shower Bath, Says Peter Milne

TO Book "A Midnight Romance" is to book a romantic shower bath. Its spray is warm and very light. There are none of those invigorating "needles" in it, which is a roundabout way of saying that as far as action and suspense go the picture is more or less inadequate. People who peruse with delight the moonlit passages of the novel of the day will, no doubt, revel in the romance of Marie and Roger, but even such fans will look for something more substantial than that provided in "A Midnight Romance."

As directed by Lois Weber, the picture shows a number of lavish settings, but the story offered her scant opportunity to inject those little touches and original twists for which she has gained name and fame. Miss Stewart is a delight to look upon as always, but "A Midnight Romance" is overstocked with closeups of her and a pretty face can't make up for action shortcomings.

The story tells of Marie, a strange girl, who is given employment as maid at a seaside hotel. While partaking of a midnight swim in a one-piece bathing suit she meets Roger Sloan, millionaire. After a few delicious minutes she retreats and remains as maid again for nearly three reels it seems. Miss Stewart's expression in this portion of the picture is just "mooning."

AD TALK

Anita Stewart, the popular star, last seen at the ———— theatre in a screen version of Owen Johnson's celebrated novel, "Virtuous Wives," will return on ———— of ———— week in her second First National picture entitled "A Midnight Romance." Lovers of Miss Stewart will certainly enjoy her in this picture, a splendid romantic story done with all the grace and charm of a painted picture. The story was suggested by Marion Orth and produced under the direction of Lois Weber, the most successful woman director in the business today. Miss Weber has gained fame through the pictures she made with Mrs. Charles Chaplin, nee Mildred Harris, as star, and with the present production she has brought to bear on it all her experience, her creative genius and ability to inject the unusual. The results show with more than ordinary charm.

Miss Stewart has the role of a strange girl, one of the survivors of an ocean liner torpedoed by a submarine. She gains employment in a seaside hotel as chambermaid but there is something about her manner and breeding that immediately stamp her as of another kind than servant. Then one night while she is taking a moonlight swim before retiring she meets Roger Sloan. Roger capitulates immediately but the girl will not tell him who she is. Even the next day the girl of the moonlight has lost none of her charm to him. He determines to find her. How he does and how he finally wins her is prettily told in the remaining reels of the story.

Jack Holt is seen as Miss Stewart's leading man while a cast of particular excellence was assembled in their support.

THE STORY

The wealthy Sloans take up summer quarters at a fashionable hotel by the sea. Roger Sloan, the son of the house, is marked by Blondie Mazie and Blinkey Deal as good game. The season has been bad for Mazie and her partner so they invest all their remaining money in some good clothes and take up quarters at the hotel. Mazie soon meets Roger and thrusts herself on him at every occasion. Tired at her obvious play, Roger goes for a walk on the beach one night and there meets Marie who is out for a swim before retiring. Right then and there Roger loses his heart but the night passes without his even learning the girl's name. Afterwards he hunts high and low for her but is never successful in his quest.

Marie is, in reality, serving as chambermaid at the hotel. She had been among those cast ashore after a vessel had been torpedoed. She seems to enjoy her work. One day, however, she is much disturbed when she sees three dignified personages register at the hotel. Now she must avoid them as well as Roger. On the night of Roger's last day at the hotel, Marie dons one of Mazie's evening gowns and attends the dance. Roger sees her again, professes his love but still she will not tell him who she is. That night Mazie, unsuccessful in winning Roger's love, plans to blackmail him. Marie in her power because of wearing the gown, she insists that she send a detective to the room. By a little skillful monoeuvreing Mazie gets Roger beyond the door also. But her plans go amiss. Marie discovers the plot and calls Roger's family. There is a fuss but no scandal.

Then several weeks later Roger gets an invitation to meet the Countess Marie and he is astounded to discover her as the girl of his heart. And while a long line of celebreties awaits to be presented to the Countess she skips out into the garden with Roger where the romance is continued.

CATCH LINES

It was midnight—there were soft summer winds—the whispering of the gentle waves as they lapped the shore—could there be a more romantic time and place? What wonder then that Roger Sloane should fall in love with this mysterious girl without even knowing her name. And the next day he could not find her. For a time he thought that he must have been dreaming—the girl of his heart was but a maid of the sea—but he found her and when he least expected it—see "A Midnight Romance," the prettiest love story ever told on the screen.

Anita Stewart's second First National production. You remember her first—"Virtuous Wives"—this one is of a different type but—well see it—it's the prettiest romance ever shown on the screen.

Produced under the direction of Lois Weber, the greatest woman director. The story is by a doman too—and Anita Stewart is the star—"A Midnight Romance" is the product of woman's mind. See it and see whether women are as good at picture making as men.

She found herself forced to serve others when all her life she had been served—the reason? See "A Midnight Romance."

SUGGESTIONS

You certainly have another fine title in this First National production, one which attracts immediately and one which opens all sorts of interesting advertising possibilities before the live showman. Your advertising should be based largely on the romantic lines of the story if you would present the picture truthfully. And this campaign together with the title should result in some patronage-pulling advertising matter if you lay out your copy carefully. A romance appeals to all and if you present the picture to your patrons with due regard to its romantic qualities you should pull the business.

A unique advertising idea lies in the fact that all those concerned in the picture's production were women. Star, author and the director are women. Play this up. It would be a good idea to circularize your women patrons specially with such an announcement. Compare their work with that of men directors and writers and ask them to come and see if they think the picture better than the usual man-made picture.

If you played "Virtuous Wives" it is a certainty that the star has firmly re-established herself. Advertise her heavily. Give Jack Holt a share of the credit too. His performance is praiseworthy and his many picture appearances have gained for him a large following.

"GAMBLING IN SOULS"—FOX

Madlaine Traverse in Story of Woman's Revenge

THAT picture in which a woman seeks revenge on a man, to find at the very height of her success that she will bring sorrow on one near and dear to her if she permit her plans to carry through, is more or less of a favorite for emotional actresses. It is this vehicle that William Fox has cast in a mold suitable for Madlaine Traverse and, rest assured, this emotional actress plays the stellar role with sufficient vehemence.

In fact the entire picture is played at a high pitch. Action and subtleties combine to speak louder than even the words of the old spoken melodrama with which "Gambling in Souls" might easily be classed.

Doubtless along with its title and its sensational content the picture will find an eager public—that public attracted by flaring lights, lurid paper, etc. It is actionful and its highlights striking—striking in conception and because the director made sure they would be striking.

Miss Traverse is surrounded by a competent supporting cast and the story is surrounded by settings of average worth.—Length, 5 reels.—Released March 9.—Peter Milne.

AD TALK

The role of a beautiful woman's relentless pursuit of a man who deliberately ruined her husband falls to Madlaine Traverse in the William Fox production, "Gambling in Souls," which will be seen at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week.

As Marcia Dunning, this star has one of the best roles of her screen career. When Robert Dunning, her husband, commits suicide because of financial ruin brought about by a crafty broker, Marcia returns the same brutal treatment right back at the unscrupulous broker.

As a roulette wheel operater in a gambling house frequented by this broker's son she manages to ruin him and he in turn robs his father, thereby completing the cycle.

But many tense situations arise at this point. Marcia finds that her own daughter had been secretly married to the broker's wayward son who is now in prison accused of robbing his father.

She is thus placed in a terrible position and the many fast moving developments of the plot and action from then on are said to register a telling production of compelling interest.

Madlaine Traverse has abilities as an emotional actress which are well known and is said to render a most excellent portrayal of the character of the woman who is seeking human justice through human vengeance.

THE STORY

Marcia Dunning's husband, Robert, commits suicide after being ruined financially by a crafty broker. His last note to her tells Marcia all the circumstances and she plans to ruin the unscrupulous broker in turn.

Obtaining employment as a roulette wheel operator in a gambling house in which the broker's son frequents. One of the two owners of the gambling establishment is her good friend. By the use of a magnetized finger ring she cheats the broker's son and he in turn robs his father, thereby ruining him.

In the midst of her triumph Marcia is stricken to learn that her daughter has secretly married the broker's son. She appeals for the return of the young man's losses. One of the gambling partners refuses to agree to this. The friendly partner, who has come to love Marcia, stakes his share in the business against the other's, and loses. Marcia then stakes herself against the winning partner's business. She tries to use her magnet ring, but is prevented. However, fortune favors her, and she wins all back.

The broker's son is saved from prison by Marcia returning the stolen funds for the sake of her daughter, and Marcia consents to marry the partner who has declared his love for her.

Thus happiness grows out of the anguish which gambling had left in its trail.

CATCH LINES

A mother's love wins against hatred in the hour of vengeance's triumph, in "Gambling in Souls," the William Fox production at ———— theatre.

Madlaine Traverse in her role of the beautiful Marcia Dunning, presides for a time as the operator of a roulette wheel in high life gambling. She plays for the biggest stake a woman ever played for in "Gambling in Souls," the William Fox production at ———— theatre.

SUGGESTIONS

If you book this picture you will do well to advertise that Madlaine Traverse is one of the most beautiful women on the screen. Her photographs and cut should be displayed wherever possible.

For lobby display, if you can borrow a seized roulette wheel from police headquarters, it would be a ten strike. You might then even go so far as to have a beautiful local woman operate it. Of course this would mean big crowds and is worth any extra effort on your part to obtain the outfit.

A placard is suggested for all prominent store windows, inscribed as follows: "DON'T GAMBLE on your entertainment. Choose a sure thing. You will find it is 'Gambling in Souls,' which opens at the ———— theatre on ———— with Madlaine Traverse, the William Fox star."

"THE LITTLE ROWDY"—TRIANGLE

Comedy Drama of the Lighter Type; Pleasing Heroine

HAZEL DALY is featured in this late offering on the Triangle program, written and directed by Harry Beaumont. It's a comedy drama of the lighter type, presenting little dramatic strength, a good measure of romance and comedy that is not over-comical.

The writer lacked plot material as is plainly evidenced in the first reel which is devoted exclusively to scenes in a girls' boarding school with the inmates attired in pajamas for the full reel. With the opening of the second reel, Betty, the heroine and "little rowdy," is expelled for her rowdyism and it is then that the romance starts. Her parents have selected the prospective husband but Betty has ideas of her own as to whom she will marry. Father and mother's choice, however, plays the hero after Betty's unpleasant romance with her ideal and he is accepted.

The principal fault attributable to the feature is its lack of dramatic substance and plot material. Real action crops up at intervals but the interest is not sustained. "The Little Rowdy" is not meant to be strong in any one element. Its appeal lies in its wholesomeness and its light comedy.

Hazel Daly, remembered by the fans for her excellent work opposite Bryant Washburn in the "Skinner" stories, is a pleasing heroine. Harry Hilliard in the straight lead and Sydney Ainsworth in the semi-villian role give good support. Length, 5 reels.—Joseph L. Kelley.

THE CAST

Betty Hall.....Hazel Daly
Franklyn Winters.....Harry Hilliard

Written and directed by Harry Beaumont.

CATCH LINES

Expelled from boarding school, Betty Hall arrived at the parental home to find a husband all selected for her. She rebelled. No parent of hers could select her husband! But the choice made for her wasn't so bad after all. See how she was convinced in the Triangle comedy, "The Little Rowdy."

Written and produced by Harry Beaumont, director of the Skinner comedies and now guiding the destinies of Tom Moore, Goldwyn star.

Pretty hard on a girl to have father select a husband for her and then discover that father was right after all! Even Betty Hall had to admit that her stern male parent had some sense. The way she comes round to his way of thinking makes a delightful comedy. See "The Little Rowdy."

AD TALK

On ——— of ——— week the management of the ——— theatre will present for the first time in this city the Triangle comedy, "The Little Rowdy," featuring Hazel Daly. This is the charming story of a young girl, a typical American girl, whose pranks on the teacher get her expelled from boarding school and who comes home to an exasperated male parent bent on marrying her off to the first handy man that presents himself. Betty, the young lady in the case, objects to having her husband selected for her in advance and rebels at father's choice although in reality he is a very fine fellow.

It takes a more or less unpleasant experience with a chance acquaintance to convince Betty that she really loves the fellow selected by her father to be her husband and thereafter she pursues him after he had finally given up all hope of winning her.

It's a simple little story but crammed with good comedy, pretty scenes and pretty romance. Miss Daly appears to distinct advantage in the featured part. She has had a lot of picture experience playing opposite Taylor Holmes and Bryant Washburn in some of the most successful of Essanay comedy-dramas. Her debut here as a star on her own account will be watched with interest by those who have come to know and appreciate her work.

Harry Hilliard is seen in her support while Sydney Ainsworth registers a personal success as the heavy of the story. The picture was produced under the direction of Harry Beaumont, one of the most successful of the younger directors in the business today.

Betty Hall's pranks at boarding school fail to smooth the temper of Miss Elliott, the matron who runs the place. Several times Betty is threatened by the furious lady but to no avail. At last, however, the crash comes. Betty breaks up Miss Elliott's first and only love affair. This is going too far. She is sent home—supposedly in disgrace but in reality in high glee. Her parents are well riled and decide to marry her off to save themselves similar trouble. Father selects a particularly promising young fellow in the office, Franklyn Winters by name, but Betty turns him down with the remark that she will choose her own husband.

Franklyn is persistent but his efforts lead him a merry chase. Then one day while Betty is out riding she is rescued from her runaway mount by Roy Harper, a celebrated novelist. He takes her home to his apartment where Franklyn follows them. He misconstrues the situation and engages the writer in a fight, with the result that Betty becomes more furious than ever at him. But after he has left she realizes that he didn't misconstrue so much after all. Harper immediately starts to make advances toward her and Betty is disgusted.

She leaves in great haste and goes in pursuit of Winters whom she now discovers she loves. Winters has boarded a train bound for nowhere in particular and Betty just manages to make it. So at the next station the two get off and search out the nearest minister for purposes of marriage.

SUGGESTIONS

Of course the central character of this picture, the girl, is the one around which to write your advertising. It's more or less of a one-character picture so the heroine is the one to play up. You could tell a bit of the story, lightly and stop, for instance, at the time that the young lady is expelled from boarding school. This would awaken some interest.

You could also get some good advertisements out of the fact that the girl rebels at having her father select a husband for her.

Use the name of the director in connection with the Skinner pictures. It was on these that he made his reputation.

Human Story That Appeals; Acting Good

IN her third feature production this petite commedienne demonstrates her versatility by running the social gamut; first as the little housekeeper for a bunch of crooks, emerging as a would-be burglar in boy's clothes, and then completing the cycle as a highly finished society debutante.

Her support is most excellent, headed by Melbourne MacDowell. The story is truly human and appealing and moves with satisfactory rapidity. Photography is clear except probably in a few of the grouped close-ups where it appears a trifle hazy. The appeal is general and should captivate any kind of audience in either the large cities or small towns. Nothing sensational, but just a clean pleasing entertainment.—Length, 5 reels.—Released late in March.—Tom Hamlin.

AD TALK

Billie Rhodes, the vivacious little screen comedienne, appears in her latest starring vehicle, "The Lamb and the Lion" at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

She looks mighty little to be doing all the housework for a gang of crooks, but gets away with it in the role of "Boots," a ward of the gang leader.

When she finally persuades them to allow her to accompany them on their next burglary she dons boy's clothes, which makes her look smaller than ever.

The little star has a wonderful opportunity in this production and takes advantage of every moment in her many characterizations. When she is captured by the society woman in the house marked for burglary, this woman had an object in concealing her from the police.

She proposed to humble a wealthy Englishman who had scorned her and the only way she could do it properly was to polish this young "criminal" into a society bud and try to marry him to the son of the man who scorned her.

Then she would be revenged by pointing out to the father the stain upon his boasted lineage.

But she is foiled. "Boots" was of an excellent family when the truth finally was brought forth in a very dramatic manner by her reformed burglar and former guardian. The transition of "Boots" from rags to riches is truly wonderful to behold.

Her pure childish outlook on life is unaffected by the various environments and her clever characterizations of the various episodes in her meteoric career shows the high calibre of her versatile accomplishments.

This little star is said to be fast winning her way into the hearts of the film fans who appreciate clean and pleasing entertainment undisturbed by sensationalism.

THE STORY

"Boots" is the little housekeeper of a bunch of crooks in a large city and is the ward of the leader, "Uncle Ben." She is treated nicely and is the pet of this particular gang, and owing to this she easily persuades them to allow her to join in with them in one of their burglaries. "Boots" derived her name from the fact that she always wore big boots that came to her knees. From reading "Hop o' My Thumb," this little girl figured that she was entitled to the mythical "seven league boots" mentioned in that fairy tale.

Her active entrance into the realms of actual burglary came a cropper. She was captured by the woman of the house and in her boy's clothes was hid from the police by the woman who discovered that she was only a little girl. But this same society woman had just been scorned by a wealthy Englishman who stated that he would have no stain on his lineage. She remembered a passage that she had read in a book on criminal research which stated that a child could be taken from the very depths of degradation and made acceptable in the highest society if her past were not known.

The scorned society leader then placed "Boots" through a two-year course of study and she soon appears as the highly finished product. She meets the son of the Englishman who had scorned her sponsor and it was a case of mutual love at first sight.

To make the denouement at the very altar was the idea of revenge adopted by the woman scorned. She invited the crook leader who had in the meantime reformed at the request of "Boots."

When she sneeringly declared to the father of the prospective bridegroom that the girl was a criminal from the lowest dregs of society and would therefore stain his boasted lineage the old former crook who was present branded it as a lie. In the statements that he made a story is dramatically unfolded to the assembled guests which proves that she is the real daughter of one of the wealthy Englishmen present.

The ceremony is resumed and the story ends happily for all concerned except the woman who was cheated of her vengeance at the eleventh hour.

PRESS NOTICES

From the lower twenty to the upper ten, "Boots the Burglar" wends her way to "Society De Luxe" in the versatile role portrayed by Billie Rhodes in "The Lamb and the Lion."

Billie Rhodes appears as the boy burglar in seven league boots, which carry her from the underworld to the uppercrust in "The Lamb and the Lion," to be shown at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

When she becomes a society "flapper" she feeds her little pet pig from a milk bottle. This same little pig later showed his gratitude by bringing "Boots" and her future sweetheart together. Billie Rhodes portrays the "flapper" and the pig is done by himself in "The Lamb and the Lion."

"THE PROBATION WIFE"—SELECT

Norma Talmadge Delightful in "The Probation Wife"

NORMA TALMADGE is given a splendid chance to show her versatility in "The Probation Wife," a story which is largely concerned with a woman's own development of herself. Its plot is somewhat conventional, but it will delight every woman and it will please most of the men who like to laugh at the expense of "the other fellow." Direction and staging are of the best with many of the situations so originally happening that they will make a strong appeal.

Miss Talmadge is introduced as a young wife, happy with her baby, but there comes to her another married woman who hasn't the same success in keeping her husband loving and faithful. After telling the other woman that few wives know how to mistreat their husbands and adding that once in awhile they must be "treated rough," she proceeds to tell her own story. The opening scenes of this find her an innocent girl in a very questionable resort. There comes a man (Thomas Meigham) who seeks to put her on the right road, but her "guardian" takes the money from her and after a raid the girl appeals to the judge and is sent to a reformatory. She escapes and on the train, again meets Meigham who befriends her and takes her to his own house. Then to give her standing he marries her, in name only.

In the meantime Meigham's former fiancee is making strenuous efforts to entangle him again, even though she is married to another. McMerton, the husband's best friend, then takes a hand, because he realizes that the formally married couple love each other very much. It is the old story of arousing the husband's jealousy. McMerton poses as the lover instead of the true friend and after many humorous situations the former little girl of the slums wins the full love and faith of her husband. And at the end of the story the other wife profits by the moral.

Miss Talmadge has a chance to show many moods and she has never been more attractive than in this one. As the little girl of the fast set, the inmate of the reform school and as the wife she is equally genuine. Meigham is at his best while Alex B. Francis is convincing as McMerton. A genuine picturization is supplied by Florence Billings as the married vampire who seeks to entangle the husband. The settings are genuine and convincing and the photography of the best. AD TALK

Jo Mowbray, the most popular attraction at a notorious cafe, is the character portrayed by Norma Talmadge in the Select Picture entitled "The Probation Wife," to be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

A young wealthy New Yorker discovers her and tries to help her escape from these environments, but she is foiled by the proprietor. Later the place is raided and she is sentenced to three years in the reformatory, escaping during the second year.

She again meets the young New Yorker who formerly tried to help her, and he, believing that there is some good in the girl, marries her. Jo calls herself his probation wife and they live very happily together.

However, a cloud appears on the horizon in the person of another prominent and wealthy New Yorker, and as he and Jo become very friendly, her husband thinks that they are in love with each other.

He is finally determined to bring divorce proceedings when he finds them in each other's arms. But when the real explanations follow happiness is in store for all.

Norma Talmadge gives the character of Jo three separate and distinct interpretations. First as the inmate of a low cabaret; second as a prisoner confined in a reformatory, and lastly as the wife of a wealthy New Yorker.

This star plainly shows you the growth of the heart and soul of the girl who did not have a fair chance. "The Probation Wife" is declared to be by far the best picture that Norma Talmadge has yet done.

THE STORY

Norma Talmadge as Jo Mowbray is the most attractive girl in the Domino Cafe and is taught to steal money from the patrons. When Harrison Wade, a wealthy New Yorker on a slumming tour, notices that she is inexperienced he offers her money, part of which she is to keep for herself, and thus make her escape from her environment. The management prevents her escape, but when the cafe is raided a few days later Jo is sentenced with the other girls to three years in the reformatory, but manages to escape in her second year.

Jo decides that the one way to get the things in life she wants is through some man. That was the only way she had ever been taught. On the train she sees Harrison Wade and offers herself to him for pretty clothes, a home, and whatever else he may be willing to give.

She receives the surprise of her life when Wade informs her that he is going to marry her. Jo soon becomes established in Wade's home, acting as his wife in name only. She calls herself his probation wife.

Huntley McMerton, an elderly aristocrat, whom Wade his introduced to Jo, looks very familiar to her. They become very friendly, and Wade, believing they are in love with each other, starts divorce proceedings. Surprise follows surprise and things turn out as you never expected them to.

CATCH LINES

"A FIGHT FOR LOVE"—UNIVERSAL SPECIAL

Harry Carey in Strong Story Backed by Beautiful Scenes

"A FIGHT FOR LOVE," featuring Harry Carey, is notable for a strong story and some of the most exquisite scenery that the camera has ever revealed. The producing company sought its locations in Bear Valley, Cal., and from this garden spot it brought back scenes so beautiful that they alone are worth the usual admission price.

The story, according to P. S. Harrison, who reviewed it extensively in last week's issue, might offend the straight-laced, and before this type of audience a few eliminations are advised when the fighting becomes extremely rough. On the other hand, the swift, virile character of the picture provides it with an extensive appeal before the majority of motion picture audiences. It deals with northwestern Canadian life and provides the star with a congenial role.—Length, 6 reels.—Released March 24.

Black Michael.....Joe Harris
Kate McDougal.....Neva Gerber
Angus McDougal.....Mark Fenton
The Priest.....J. Farrel McDonald
Indian Girl .....Princess Neola May
Story by Eugene B. Lewis.
Directed by Jack Ford.

THE STORY

Cheyenne Harry, wanted for cattle-rustling, escapes across the Canadian border not more than two feet ahead of the posse that is chasing him. He drifts to an Indian camp and finds it illuminated by the gracious presence of an Indian maiden, whom he immediately favors with his bashful attentions. Then comes Michael, a half-breed whiskey runner, who enters camp with a keg of firewater and a raging fever of jealousy. He tells the Canadian Northwest Mounted Police that Cheyene Harry is in camp.

Harry leaves the camp in a canoe, which he borrows from a missionary father. As he leaves the water around him is spattered with bullets from the rifles of the police. In due time he arives at the local store of the Hudson Bay Company. Kate, the lovely daughter of the factor or manager, is trying to escape the clutches of Michael, the whiskey runner, who seems to divide his crimson love between the white girl and the Indian maiden. Harry steps in and is getting along famously with Kate when Michael steals her, taking her to a little woody delta in a rushing river. Harry pursues and beats the half-breed in a terrific fight. The half-breed falls from a cliff. Before he dies he confesses to the murder of an Indian whom the authorities believe Cheyenne Harry to have killed. Harry and Kate agree to marry.

AD TALK

The fierceness of primitive love and primitive passions is ably portrayed in "A Fight for Love," playing at the ——— theatre. Back we go to the hair-raising days when the Indians and white men traded and when a man's life was worth no more than a pistol shot. Harry Carey, as Cheyenne Harry, never acted a more superb role. Every drop of fighting blood he has (and thousands of devoted audiences thoughout the country know what a fighter Harry is) is up in this picture. And they say that "the bravest are the tenderest, the daring, the most loving," so you can well imagine that the love scenes are as vital and thrilling as any you have ever seen on the screen.

Neva Gerber, as Kate, the whiskey runner's daughter, is "every inch a woman," and quite worth the "fight for love," Cheyenne Harry thinks. Her wildcat defiance of the Indian half-breed, when she is taken to a little island, brought a storm of applause. Seldom has a more cruel and more fear-inspiring character been invented than that of Michael, and Joe Harris acts his role to perfection. As the daughter of the chief, Neola May has scored a triumph. All of the drama of her ancient ancestors, Pocahontas, is instilled into the part which she plays as the Indian girl. You can't afford to miss this tremendous picture.

"MISS DULCIE FROM DIXIE"—VITAGRAPH

This One's a Peach, Says Reviewer

VITAGRAPH'S late feature, starring Gladys Leslie, could be described as an old Southern melody, adapted to the screen, without music, but with every one of the other familiar elements present in good, old Southern style.

"Miss Dulcie from Dixie" tells in its title almost everything that might be expected from the picture and the expectancy of those acquainted with the South of a generation ago, is going to be gratified in the fullest measure, for the South in all its picturesque and quaint glory, is brought to the motion picture theatre and a typical little penniless aristocrat of the Southern clime, Dulcie, portrayed by Gladys Leslie with fine appreciation, brings to the screen all the lovable characteristics of the Southern lass.

Lulah Ragsdale's novel of the same title forms the plot and theme of the story as portrayed on the screen. Joseph Gleason directed and he has succeeded in putting the Southern atmospheric "punch" in every episode depicted. He has snapped some beautiful exteriors and Miss Leslie and her supporting cast including, Charles Kent, Arthur Donaldson, Julia Swayne Gordon and James Morrison, are able assistants in portraying the action. The photography stands out prominently, the lightings are good and barring a lack of real, sound action, this Vitagraph feature will stand the test—applied to program features of the best class.—Length, 5 reels.—Joseph L. Kelley.

THE CAST

Dulcie Culpepper, a southern girl, will receive five thousand dollars from a relative's estate, providing she lives with her Uncle John in his New York City home for the period of six months. The stipulation is a difficult one inasmuch as a feud has existed between the two branches of the family ever since Civil War days. However, Dulcie finds Uncle John easy to get along with. Not so his son by a former marriage. This young man, Orrin, looks with such disfavor on the beauty from the south that she determines to make him like her. She finds her task hard, however, because her Aunt John wants Orrin to make a rich mariage. She also schemes to marry Dulcie to Lockhardt, a middle-aged gentleman of breeding, who entertains a sincere admiration for the girl.

Finally Aunt John, fearing that Orrin will fall in love with Dulcie, orders her from the house. Uncle John, an amused witness to all the proceedings, registers his objection to such a course and Dulcie stays. Then of a sudden Aunt John's attitude toward Dulcie undergoes a change. She is courtesy itself and insists on throwing Dulcie and Orrin into each other's company. The why and wherefore of this change soon becomes apparent to Dulcie when she learns that she has fallen heir to a large sum of money.

Believing Orrin a party to the scheme she returns to the south, broken-hearted. But the old colored mammy had not lived in the family for a long time without learning much regarding it and before Dulcie has cried very much she has succeeded in bringing Orrin to the south, where the petty differences are settled and everything ends happily.

AD TALK

Vitagraph brings to the screen another popular novel of the day in "Miss Dulcie from Dixie," which is adapted from the charming romance of the same name written by Lulah Ragsdale. Gladys Leslie has a role decidedly suited to her personality and dramatic versatility in that of Miss Dulcie, in this Vitagraph picture, which will be seen in the ——— theatre on ———.

Miss Dulcie, Southern bred, is left a legacy of $5,000 contingent on her ending an estrangement between her father and a Northern uncle dating back to the Civil War. Dulcie invades the hostile atmosphere of her uncle's home in New York City and in spite of all obstacles thrown in her path wins not only the legacy but a husband and a fortune. The picture is full of action, with many flashes of humor and none of the heart interest of the novel has been lost in the screening.

CATCH LINES

Miss Dulcie from Dixie land had to go right into the camp of the enemy—New York City—in order to fulfill the terms of a will—it was a pretty hard job for a southern girl to brave the uppishness of her distant city cousin, but did she do it? Well, rather. See "Miss Dulcie from Dixie," a bright and happy comedy-drama.

Cupid usually employs an arrow to cause all his havoc. In "Miss Dulcie from Dixie" he employs a foot. Not a very romantic weapon you say? See the picture and find out for yourself.

"THE FORFEIT"—HODKINSON

Reviewer Considers Picture Good Throughout

STRIKING exteriors of southwestern country, snappy Western action and a story founded on melodramatic episodes characterize Frank Powell's late Sunset Pictures, Inc., feature, releasing on the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation's program. It's a screen version of Ridgewell Cullom's story, "The Forfeit," scenarioized and directed by Mr. Powell and photographed by Percy Higginson and Arthur Boeger. House Peters and Jane Miller are co-starred with William Human, Hector V. Sarne, L. H. Wallen, Blanche Abbott and George Murdock in support.

The theme of the story, in the ante-climax, touches with too strong an accent the tragic, with nothing left to the imagination as to the untimely end of the villain. Instead of having the heroine rush up at the eleventh hour and save the condemned man from the noose, the hanging is carried out, and in this action the author and producer have been true-to-life, if not true to the established principle of eliminating the gruesome in action. The actual hanging is not shown, but the dangling rope after the victim has been cut down and a suggestion of the victim's end are offered. The episode has been handled as discreetly and as carefully as possible, so that those opposed to the gruesome, either in the actuality or in suggestion, should forgive.

There is lively action throughout the run of the five reels and some picturesque Western scenery, typical of the Southwestern country where "The Forfeit" was staged. The photography is excellent, the production has been staged well and the dramatic episodes have been handled artfully by a well-balanced cast of players. As a Western drama, with the melodramatic element accentuated, "The Forfeit" is a good bet. Length, 5 reels.—Released March 10.—Joseph L. Kelley.

AD TALK

A virile story of the great cattle country will be the featured attraction at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, when "The Forfeit," a Hodkinson production starring House Peters and Jane Miller, is shown for the first time in this city. "The Forfeit" was written by Ridgewell Cullom, the well known novelist, and tells the story of Elvine, a girl who marries Bob, a shiftless member of a good family. Because of this marriage Bob is cut off from his relations, and several years afterwards we find the couple living in the cattle country, but earning only a precarious living.

Bob is apprehended as a member of a cattle rustler's gang and is put to death. His wife goes to another part of the country, where she meets Jeffrey Masters, unknown to her, her dead husband's brother. It is a case of love at first sight and the two are married shortly afterwards. Then comes the day when Jeffrey learns that Elvine was once his brother's wife, and with this knowledge comes the story that she had betrayed him into the hands of his enemies!

How this highly dramatic situation is worked out to a happy conclusion will not be told here. It is played with such skill and charm on the screen that the printed word cannot do justice to it in such short space. The starring teams renders a brace of fine performances, while the support is of a high calibre. "The Forfeit" was directed by Frank Powell, one of the leading directors in the art today.

Bob Whitstone was disinherited when he married Elvine Van Blooren against his father's wishes. Bob's older brother, Jeffrey Masters, had also been disinherited, had gone into the cattle country and amassed a fortune. Bob believed he, too, could succeed, but two years after his marriage finds the couple living precariously in Castroville, in the midst of the rich cattle country. A large reward is offered for information leading to the arrest of the Lightfoot gang of cattle thieves. Effie learns their hiding place, and it is not until after he has been hung that she learns her husband was a member of the gang.

Four years pass. At a cattle growers' convention Jeffrey Masters meets Effie, who has resumed her maiden name of Van Blooren. That her husband was Jeff's brother neither of them know. It is love at first sight, and when Jeff returns to his ranch it is with Effie as his wife. Some cattle thieves are operating in the neighborhood, and when Effie meets Sikem, a member of the old Lightfoot gang, her suspicions are aroused. Jeff goes to Castroville on business and there learns that Effie was his brother's wife and betrayer. When Jeff returns Effie tries to explain that she is innocent, but Jeff tells her that they must forget they are man and wife.

Sikem sends for Jeff, saying he has been shot by rustlers. Believing it is a hoax, Effie follows her husband and finds her worst fears realized. Wounded, Jeff is struggling with Sikem. In the melee she is wounded, and when the victorious but battered Jeff staggers to the door and sees her lying unconscious, all his love, which had only been stunned, comes surging back and they face a new life of happiness.

SUGGESTIONS

The main selling argument in connection with this feature is the situation in which the husband discovers that his wife's first husband was his brother and that evidence points to the fact that she schemed to get rid of him. Make this the center of your advertising arguments. You can dress it with words and pictures and make a pretty compelling thing out of it. Advertising copy should also contain the sweep of a western picture of the cattle country, both in decorations and word arguments.

Play up the name of House Peters prominently. He was one of the first of the well-known stage actors to go to the screen, and his many appearances have established a following for him despite his somewhat long absence from the screen. The author's name is a well-known one and Frank Powell has had a number of picture successes to his credit.

CATCH LINES

He learned that his wife had once been married to his brother and also that she had betrayed him into the hands of his enemies and caused his death! Was this the truth? Was his wife that kind of a woman? See "The Forfeit."

A stirring photoplay of the great cattle country by Ridgewell Cullom, the well-known novelist. A story as big as the marvelous scenery against which it is laid.

Featuring House Peters and Jane Miller, two of the most skilful players on the screen today.

He would not believe her love for him until she showed it by risking her life! Why? Because evidence pointed to the fact that she had deliberately schemed to get rid of her first husband, his brother, and marry him! Here is a situation that taxed the woman's faith to the utmost but she won! See "The Forfeit."

EVERY showman knows best how to present his own show. There are times, however, when some important angle may not assert itself to the exhibitor who sees picture after picture week after week.

In the SUGGESTIONS of the Complete Plan Book, the advertising possibilities of each picture are taken up from all angles.

In them you may find THE one that you have overlooked.
Perhaps its just the one that will answer your needs.

"THE SILVER GIRL"—PATHE

Frank Keenan in a Dominating Characterization

"THE SILVER GIRL," starring Frank Keenan provides an entertainment of the average type in which the westerner's matrimonial happiness is almost blasted by one of the city's lizards. The star's carefully studied portrayal lends a certain dignity to the picture that could only be imparted by a man of his personality. He constantly holds the center of the screen whenever he is on and his dominating influence is felt throughout the five reels. There are only one or two scenes in which he gives the impression that he is dominating artificially. In these few scenes one wishes that he would "let down" for an instant.

Mr. Keenan himself directed the picture and has done this task well also. He has brought out the best in his support and has given them all the opportunities necessary to make the picture the smooth running piece of entertainment it is. Among this support Katherine Adams as the wife, George Hernandez in a comedy role of an old prospector and Donald McDonald as the heavy are most prominent.

The western scenes have a refreshing atmosphere about them while the settings are always realistic. Satisfactory entertainment is offered in "The Silver Girl," something which the exhibitor should be glad to receive.—Length, 5 reels.—Peter Milne.

AD TALK

Frank Keenan will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his latest Pathe photoplay entitled "The Silver Girl." This is from a story by Edward H. Peple and provides Mr. Keenan with a role that he handles with ease and discrimination. As Jefferson Hunter, part owner of the Howling Coyote mine, he marries Anne Kepple, daughter of an old friend. She becomes lonely, however, and yearns for more company. So when she sees Hunter turn down a chance to go to New York she resents it. In time he grows to understand her desires and so before long they are settled in the big city, she to take up a life of society, he to attend to the business intricacies of a big amalgamation.

How New York treats these two from the vast open places of the west, how it inserts itself between them for a time and makes their existences unhappy, and how finally the west gets in its healing power and patches up the differences that threatened to keep man and wife apart from each other forever are events that are told in absorbing detail in "The Silver Girl."

Mr. Keenan's acting is rare, and in the role of Hunter he displays that wonderful power of character delineation that has brought him to his present enviable position in the acting art. Katherine Adams, George Hernandez, Donald McDonald, Irene Rich, Cliff Alexander and Herschell Mayall render support of an exceptionally good sort. Jack Cunningham, the well-known scenarist, prepared the continuity from the Peple story, while the picture was produced under the direction of Mr. Keenan and Eliot Howe.

SUGGESTIONS

When you have a Frank Keenan picture be sure to bring out the star's ability as a character actor. In connection with this production you might say that it is one of the first made under his new contract wherein he has direct supervision of all the work on his pictures. In a story or even in an advertisement you can add that he insisted on this new contract so that his pictures would come up to the high standards he sets himself.

"The Silver Girl" is a story of westerners in the east. You could get a good "sob" note into your copy by saying that New York all but wrecked the marital happiness of Jefferson Hunter, western miner, and his wife. Sketches and pictures should be apropos of this idea. In the background of an ad you might have a picture of the city street, in the front Keenan in western garb. Anything that will carry out the contrast will suffice.

When Jefferson Hunter, part owner of the Howling Coyote mine in Nevada, marries Anne Kepple, daughter of an old friend, his partner, "Chuck" Wilson, deserts him. He intends to get away from the "crowd" and sets off across the desert, but homesickness soon sets in and one day he comes wandering back. His appearance is the signal for great rejoicing on Anne's part, for now her husband will have no excuse for not taking her to New York, when before he had insisted that he has to stay at the mine to look after it. So off they go and soon after are well established in the city—that is, Anne is established on a society routine. Hunter himself doesn't like the city very much and doesn't look with any great favor on Nathan Hargrave, a lawyer who pays particular attention to his wife.

Hunter's business plans miscarry. In the west Gilman Parton, a land-shark, is trying to block the deal he is engaged in putting through. Wilson comes east with the tale and Hunter tells his wife they must go back. She refuses and Hunter sets out with Wilson. But Wilson isn't used to the city and a pretty steep taxi bill makes his pull his revolver. It takes them part of the night to get out of the mess, and when Hunter finally returns home he finds his wife in Hargrave's arms. Infuriated, he bids Hargrave shoot him, but the wretched man is so nervous that his aim goes afar. Hunter leaves the city and returns to the west, but it is not long afterwards that Anne, realizing the true worth of her husband, follows him, seeks his forgiveness and receives it.

CATCH LINES

New York had dazzled her. It had obscured the true worth of her husband and had lifted another man—a man of smaller soul—to first place in her eyes—and in her affections, too, she thought. That's a way of doing things that New York has. See how the city was finally beaten in "The Silver Girl."

"Shoot! My wife there will say that you did it in self-defense if you kill me. Shoot!" This was the command of Jefferson Hunter to Nathan Hargrave, social parasite who had sought to steal his wife from him. Did Nathan Hargrave shoot? Did he have the nerve to obey that command! See "The Silver Girl."

Frank Keenan in a different type of role—a loving husband whose happiness is overshadowed by a great city! How? See "The Silver Girl."

The ——— theatre is certainly the home of good acting all this week. Frank Keenan is heading the bill in his latest Pathe picture, "The Silver Girl." See this leading exponent of screen and stage acting in his greatest camera achievement.

SUGGESTIONS

Play up the fact that the heroine, a southern girl, invades the northland and finds romance. Your arguments, written around this situation should be light and amusing. Gladys Leslie is growing more popular with each picture, so use her name. Also mention James Morrison, long time a favorite in Vitagraph pictures, who makes his return to the screen here after quite an absence. If your patrons are picture followers they will also recognize the rest of the names in the cast. Use them.

"GO GET 'EM GARRINGER"—PATHE

A True Wild and Woolly One with Two Popular Players

THIS is a western of the type in which the producers resort to fast riding, shooting and kindred action on which to build up their interest. Certainly no one can complain regarding the speed of the picture, for it runs at a gallop from opening to close.

The leads are well taken by Helene Chadwick and Franklyn Farnum, popular players both, while the support is effective.

As was stated in an extensive review of the picture published in last week's issue of Motion Picture News, "Go Get 'Em, Garringer" will find its field among those patrons who hanker after the nick-carterfied type of story. With its collection of flying bullets and dead men one can almost hear the small boys in the gallery stamping their feet in the excitement of it all.—Length, 5 reels.—Released March 23. Peter Milne.

THE CAST

Wilma Wharton .....Helene Chadwick
"Drive" Garringer.....Franklyn Farnum
"Bull" Ross.....Joseph Rickson
"Red" McCarthy.....Dick Loreno
Story by John Clymer.
Scenario by Frank Smith.
Directed by Ernest Trasker.
Produced by Astra for Pathe.

THE STORY

The operations of the Parsons Land Reclamation Company along the Arizona-Mexican border are objected to by the Triple Arrow bunch of bandits led by "Shag" Benson, with "Bull" Ross, his trusty lieutenant.

Parsons' workmen are finally so scared that they refuse to work any longer until the bandit gang is broken up, and "Drive" Garringer (Franklyn Farnum) is directed by the Parsons executives to capture the bandit gang.

The sheriff is in the pay of the bandits, but Garringer is able to secure a capable and fearless ally in the person of Wilma Wharton (Helene Chadwick), who lives with her aged father, who is obsessed with the idea that the land contains pay dirt.

"Bull" Ross persuades Wilma to go through a "fake" marriage ceremony with him so that she might have protection against "Shag" Benson's importunities. The marriage is real instead of fake and Ross hides Wilma in the Mexican quarters.

Garringer, with the aid of "Red" McCarthy, finds Wilma in the Mexican "dobe hut," but in turn they are entrapped by Benson and his bandit gang and Garringer is wounded. Wilma stops hostilities for a time by showing the bandits a Triple Arrow secret sign which she had at one time obtained from Benson. She slips out the back door and secures a physician to attend to Garringer. The wound is not serious and Garringer leaves Wilma after noticing her wedding ring and the fact that she possessed knowledge of the bandit's secret signs. She later has an opportunity of explaining the "fake" marriage, and fortunately Ross is killed by the bandit leader, which leaves her free to marry Garringer after he has put the bandit gang to rout.

AD TALK

Franklyn Farnum will be with us again in the character of "Drive" Garringer in "Go Get 'Em Garringer," which comes to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

The star's leading woman in this wildly exciting western melodrama is Helene Chadwick, who portrays the role of Wilmar Wharton, daughter of an old prospector along the Arizona-Mexican border.

It is SOME contract to undertake when you are ordered to break up a bandit gang which is reinforced by a crooked sheriff, but "Drive" Garringer plunges fearlessly ahead and does a thorough job.

You would think that this would be a contract that would take up every moment of a man's time, but Garringer manages to slip in a little romance amidst the flying bullets.

The thrilling action of this Western melodrama cannot be described with any more justice than an attempted word picture of a battle in the world war. It is a stirring relief from the ever-present society drama and a decided novelty for the regular film fans.

A "fake" marriage entangles the heroine with the villain, who has engaged a real sure-enough minister of the gospel unbeknownst to her. She enters into the supposedly "fake" ceremony to protect herself from the pestering advances of a still greater villain.

Her husband in name only receives his quietus in true western fashion from a bullet sped by the gun of the still greater villain, and the hero steps in and wins the girl in this auspicious moment. It's a red-blooded thriller.

CATCH LINES

"Go Get 'Em Garringer" is a command that Franklyn Farnum, in his role of "Drive" Garringer, receives from the board of directors of a reclamation company on the Arizona-Mexican border. Five reels of western thrills shows how thoroughly he interpreted the command of "Go Get 'Em Garringer."

The red-blooded "shoot 'em up" stories that brought the cold shivers down your back when a boy will also fill you full of "pep" and "ginger" today. Franklyn Farnum succeeds in doing it on the screen in the truly western thriller, "Go Get 'Em Garringer."

When Helene Chadwick as Wilma Wharton in the five-reel western melodrama, "Go Get 'Em Garringer," chooses to go through a "fake" marriage with a western bad man to escape the persecution of a still greater villain, and afterwards discovers that the ceremony was performed by a real minister of the gospel, she just waited a few days until her new husband-in-name-only received his reward by that great solver of western difficulties—the bullet.

SUGGESTIONS

If you book this picture you should mention that the old favorite, Franklyn Farnum, is back again with one of those red-blooded western thrillers calculated to awaken even the most blase from their lethargy. Any western atmosphere that you can easily display for your lobby is always very effective.

Also declare that this is a unique novelty in film production and does not pretend to be a fashion show of beautiful gowns and kid-gloved "slickers." It is just keenly interesting intense red-blooded melodrama, with enough excitement to satisfy the cravings of the wildest boy in school and enough romance to create a pleasurable flutter within the breast of every debutante.

"THE PROBATION WIFE"

Norma Talmadge in "The Probation Wife" has a role that carries her from the Bowery to Millionaire Row, with a stop-over in jail.

To secure love, happiness and wealth is the good fortune of Jo Mowbray in "The Probation Wife," a Select picture starring Norma Talmadge, but before the good fortune arrives she is compelled to run the social gamut.

SUGGESTIONS

Wherever this picture is booked every exhibitor, of course, will not fail to remember and center all publicity on the star. Norma Talmadge cut-outs for the lobby, etc., and Select exchanges have a wide assortment of cuts showing the star in various poses. The advertising lay-outs submitted by the producers are also very striking.

The remarkably good taste that Miss Talmadge is credited with showing in beautiful gowns certainly has a strong women-appeal. In "The Probation Wife" she runs the gamut of feminine attire from cabaret dive to jail to society. Her latest can be more strongly exploited if you mention her last two productions, "The Forbidden City" and "The Heart of Wetona."

YOU need a short filler for your program.

"BRASS BUTTONS"—AMERICAN

A Lot of Snap and Zest to This Comedy Drama

WHEN William Russell sets out to do comedy-drama he works on the assumption that situations with a touch of novelty and fast action are the essential requisites after the comedy. Certainly that must have been his method in the producing of "Brass Buttons," for it is fast and it is novel—more, it is one of the best comedy-dramas with a male lead that we have seen in many and many a day.

Stephen Fox, who has prepared many other stories for the star, wrote "Brass Buttons" and evolved a plot, ridiculous, to be sure, but with a number of original twists and many humorous situations. We need not tell it here. Suffice it to repeat that as comedy-drama "Brass Buttons" is an adequate synonym for excellent.

Russell imparts a lot of breeze and personality to the stellar role. His support embraces Eileen Percy as the opposite lead, Frank Brownlee in a good part as a policeman, Bull Montana looking naturally tough and rough as the crook and Helen Howard in a smaller role. Henry King, a director responsible for a lot of good natural comedy in the past few years, staged the production.—Length, 5 reels. —Peter Milne.

AD TALK

William Russell will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in another one of his rollicking American comedy-dramas, entitled "Brass Buttons." Mr. Russell has given us some great comedy in the past but the management sincerely believe that in "Brass Buttons" he presents the swiftest, snappiest, action-comedy that he has yet done. Written for him by Stephen Fox, author of many of his successes and one of the exceptionally skilled writers in the picture field, it tells the story of a New York man who posed as a policeman to win the girl of his heart, believing her to be a lady's maid. The girl is willing to let him think so, but of course she happens to be the lady herself. But while in the uniform the gallant lover is called upon to resist the attack of a gunman and he does it so well that the Mayor of Sawtooth, Ariz., who happens to be hard by hires him to come west and clean up his town.

But that is another part of the story altogether and those who figure on seeing it had better come early in the week to the ——— theatre for crowds are anticipated. Mr. Russell puts a lot of ginger into his role and keeps things moving right up to the finish. Eileen Percy is a delightful heroine. "Bull" Montana as the gunman gives a characteristic performance while Frank Brownlee and Helen Howard complete the cast of principals. The picture was produced under the direction of Henry King.

THE STORY

Kingdon Hollister follows Bernice Cleveland home because he is infatuated with her. Conferring with Callahan, the cop on the beat, he learns the name of the family but from his description of the girl the honest policeman takes him to mean the lady's maid. So nothing is to be done but for Kingdon to change places with Callahan for a certain period each night. Kingdon finally meets the girl of his heart and she plays the lady's maid for his special benefit. Then one night while Kingdon is masquerading he is attacked by Jake, "the Priest," a tough character just released from jail. The way Kingdon handles him pleases Mayor Dave McCullough of Sawtooth, Arizona, who has come to New York to hire gunmen to restore law and order to his city. Instead he hires Kingdon and that gentleman leaves for the west promising to bring the town to rights in twenty-four hours, then to return and marry Bernice.

All this time Officer Callahan is a prisoner in Kingdon's car. Out west Kingdon makes speedy work of the rough element by herding them all into a special train and deporting them. He then returns to find the furious Callahan and the loving Bernice. He doesn't bother much about Callahan. And the policeman's reputation isn't damaged to any great extent after all, in fact, it is quite the other way around for he gets the glory of capturing the gangster. Of course Kingdon discovers who Bernice is and Bernice discovers who Kingdon is—so everything ends happily.

CATCH LINES

Of course it was against police regulations, but then Officer Callahan had a kind heart and even though he had some of the roughest points of Ireland on his face, he essayed to play the role of Cupid! Some Cupid too! See "Brass Buttons".

Kingdon Hollister was a New Yorker and he didn't know the town of Sawtooth, Arizona, existed. Neither did you probably. But Hollister decided it must be a fast little place when he learned that Cold Deck Dallas had the habit of shooting buttons off people's vests. But Cold Deck didn't figure on "brass" buttons. He couldn't shoot Hollister's brass away. See "Brass Buttons."

William Russell in his latest American comedy-drama, a picture of laughs and thrills, one that you and all the family will enjoy. Don't miss it.

Pretty soft to be an officer of the law and able to speak to every pretty girl you take a fancy to. The trouble was that Kingdon Hollister didn't figure on a gangster's jealousy! He almost paid for his neglect with his life. Almost! But not quite—see "Brass Buttons".

SUGGESTIONS

Here is the sort of picture that ninety-nine out of every hundred patrons of your theatre will probably be tickled to death with. Fast comedy-drama, based on novel situations with a good lot of humorous characterization and subtitles. If you have played the other William Russell comedy-dramas you should have no trouble in bringing the crowds in for this one. They know what Russell can do, the fine type of story and support that he gets. All you have to announce is "William Russell in his latest American comedy-drama" and you have said a lot.

If, however, you are strange to the Russell series advertise the picture by dwelling on the breezy character of the story, the compelling personality of the star, the comedy situations of which there are not a few in the five reels in point and all the other merits of the play. See the picture yourself first for it certainly will pay you. You'll then have the chance to dope out advertising that will suit your clientele. But all advertising should be light, briefly worded and couched in a manner appropriate to the story itself. Fit the advertising to the picture. Make it suggest the contents of the reels. You certainly will attract in this instance for the contents are enjoyable all the way through.

"THE LAMB AND THE LION"

tell of her remarkable rise to stardom in big productions after her successful experience in the single reel comedies. "The Girl of My Dreams" and "Hoop-La" should be mentioned as her recent big successes.

She is only five feet tall and an experienced swimmer and equestrienne and one of the too few comediennes of the screen. Mention her many characterizations required in "The Lamb and the Lion" during her evolution from "Boots," the burglar's assistant to the polished society debutante.

Every feature reviewed and released during the past three months is listed alphabetically, with comments that are proving very valuable to the readers of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

The worth of the production as a picture and also its drawing value from the box office standpoint is carefully compiled.

In the index also appears the date of issue in which the original plan book was published, covering the subject in a thorough manner.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released previous to December 22, 1918.

Elgin Patrons to See "Little Women" Picture

ACCORDING to reports from Elgin, Ill., Manager William B. Newman of the Grand theatre of that city, has promised a patronage clamoring for "Little Women" that he will bring it to his playhouse in April. There has been considerable interest since the release of the picture and its showings in Chicago theatres, both for the popularity of the story itself and because of the personal friendship with many in Elgin of Conrad Nagel, the star, who plays the part of Laurie in the picture. Mr. Nagel's several visits to Elgin with Oliver Edwin Hinsdell, at one time a member of the "Experience" company, with which Mr. Nagel played leading role, have widened his circle of friends here, and their great pleasure in his stage performance in "Experience" here is keeping them impatient to see his work as a picture star.

Manager Newman of the Grand is a busy man. He says that he has many forthcoming high class and new attractions booked for near date, promising list of them when he is not so busy. He has announced, however, that he is bringing Hart here to disperse the glooms among the Hart fans, many and enthusiastic, who have been wanting Bill back for a long time. "Branding Broadway" is coming to the Grand in April.

Schlank Judges Demand by Exhibitors

THE remarkable interest shown by the exhibitors in the new policy of the Capital Film Co., "Famous Stars in Short Features," has led Ike Schlank, president of the Capital organization, to practically place the releasing of Capital subjects in the hands of the exhibitors themselves.

"Giving the public what it wants," is the Schlank philosophy, which led the Capital Film Co. to adopt this policy. "The public's demands are best judged at all times by the theatre managers themselves. The exhibitor has, or should have, his hands on the pulse of the public at all times.. Accordingly we are placing the choice of subjects for all of our future releases entirely up to the exhibitor.

"A systematic follow-up system, appealing directly to the wants of managers," says Mr. Schlank, "has been installed, and we have already been surprised that, in the deluge of correspondence and suggestions which we have received, there is a startling uniformity of opinion.

"It is very much like submitting our schedule of releases to the exhibitor, and allowing them to vote and elect the type of picture they want each week. All of the correspondence in this channel is carefully read and all the suggestions contained in them are collected and itemized for continuous reference.

"It is the belief of the various managers of the branch exchanges of the Capital Film Co. that this selective release policy is going to prove one of the biggest winning cards ever placed in the exchange game."

According to reports, the results already obtained carry sufficient proof that the exhibitors have a keen sense of the psychological value of the various types of drama, comedy-drama, and comedies.

Mr. Schlank admits unhesitatingly that it is the co-operative aid of the exhibitors themselves that is putting the Capital Film Co. over with such success, and relieving the various managers of untold worries.

"It is up to us," states Mr. Schlank, "to more than reciprocate and see to it that our pictures are as unanimously popular as the willingness on the part of the managers to aid us in releasing the best possible drawing cards."

Butterfield Plans New House for Lansing

COL. W. S. BUTTERFIELD, of the Butterfield circuit, spent a few hours in Detroit recently and announced that his organization will expand considerably during the coming year. The improvements would have been made in 1918, he declared, but the war made material too difficult to obtain. He will erect a new theatre on Washington avenue in Lansing that will seat 1,750 people and be exclusive for motion pictures. The size of the building will be 99 x 165. Work will be commenced soon to have the house ready for next fall. There will be a new Butterfield theatre in Kalamazoo that will seat 1,150 and be exclusively for moving pictures. The Majestic will go to vaudeville in conjunction with big special pictures about May 1, and next fall that theatre will be reserved exclusively for vaudeville. Mr. Butterfield has taken a lease on the Royal theatre, Flint, and will immediately remodel the same so that it will seat about 500 people. It is also to be exclusively for motion pictures.

"Heart of Humanity" Shown to the Press

ONE of the preliminaries attendant upon the showing of "The Heart of Humanity" at the Temple in Elgin, Ill., was a special private showing at 10 o'clock on Thursday, March 6, to an audience of business men, press representatives and friends bidden by Manager W. P. Fay to pass judgment on the picture. Encouraged by the success of "Mickey," shown to capacity houses for three days in the last week of February, Manager Fay increased his advertising effort and expects to put "The Heart of Humanity" over big.

Irving Mack Resigns From Universal in Chicago

IRVING MACK, for the past two years publicity and advertising manager for the Universal Chicago office, has tendered his resignation to Tarkington Baker, publicity director of the Universal Film Co., to take effect March 8.

Mr. Mack will inaugurate something new in the picture field. He is starting an advertising agency for the sole purpose of helping the exhibitors in Chicago and territory to advertise and to help them put their picture over big. Already he has signed up four of Chicago's biggest picture theatres to do their newspaper and special advertising and expects quite a few more to flock in for his services as soon as they learn of his business.

In addition to his Moving Picture Advertising office, Mr. Mack will also be the publicity representative in Chicago for several moving picture stars, as well as several film companies. Mr. Mack will make his office at the Mid-City Printing Co., at 40 North Wells street, Chicago, who are printers of picture theatre programs and other advertising specialties, of which Mr. Mack is also part owner.

Although Mr. Mack is one of the youngest Publicity men in Chicago he was the first one to handle publicity for any exchange in Chicago. In 1916 he tried to convince several exchange managers that they needed a publicity man to represent them at the newspapers and to furnish an advertising service to the exhibitors but he was scoffed at and told that they didn't need any publicity, but Joe Brandt of the Universal organization, being himself a former publicity man, knew the value of publicity and gave him the position as advertising and publicity manager of the Universal Chicago Office and territory. At that time Chicago and Canada were the only two Universal Exchanges to have publicity men but now everyone of the 53 Universal Exchanges has a publicity man.

Before joining Universal he was assistant publicity manager for four years at Jones, Linick and Schaeffer and before that was connected with the advertising department of White City, a Chicago Amusement Park.

Mr. Mack has a wide acquaintanceship with the Chicago newspapers and has been responsible for the Universal getting twice as much if not more publicity than any other Film Co.

Goyette Buys Houdini Serial for Michigan

IT is announced from Detroit, Mich., that R. E. Goyette, of Goyette Productions, has purchased the state rights for Michigan for "The Master Mystery," the 15-episode Houdini serial and has formulated a comprehensive plan for its distribution. He has already started a billboard campaign in Detroit using 200 billboards at the expense of nearly $2,000. He expects to spend almost $5,000 before the serial is released.

Among the leading first run houses in the city to book the serial is the Majestic theatre. While Mr. Goyette will personally give the serial his attention he has arranged for the booking and selling through the Arthur S. Hyman Attractions.

On the Screens of Dubuque

THE second Marguerite Clark Success Series picture, "The Crucible," was shown at the Grand, March 2, and scored another point in favor of the Success Series. The picture drew splendidly in the afternoon, and the evening crowds were even larger. As a business getter a Marguerite Clark Success Series picture seems to be a safe bet.

THE SUNDAY, March 2, feature at the Princess theatre was "The Man Who Wouldn't Tell," starring Earle Williams. There was a decided increase in attendance at this picture over the attendance of his previous vehicles.

"THE SON OF A GUN," a five-reel western picture, starring Gilbert Anderson, brought the crowds to the Star theatre on March 1 and 2. Any western picture draws well at the Star, and a Gilbert Anderson picture is one of the best paying propositions at a theatre where the patrons dote on plays of adventure and excitement.

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG was presented at the Family theatre, March 2' in "A House of Glass," a picture well worthy of her talents. Miss Young is an actress of great dramatic ability and she has a following in Dubuque that not many stars can boast. Her pictures are usually well liked, and always draw a satisfactory house.

"UNCLE TOM'S CABIN" with Marguerite Clark, came to the Princess theatre on March 3 and 4. The usual Marguerite Clark audience was in attendance, and while they were a bit disappointed in the picture, Miss Clark's acting repaid them. In the roles of Topsy and little Eva Miss Clark proved that she has lost none of the youth and girlishness that made her first pictures so successful; her characterization of Topsy was one of the best comedy characters presented by Paramount during the latter part of 1918.

WITH his infectious smile, Douglas Fairbanks tumbled right into the hearts of the Family theatre patrons and there he remained. On Tuesday evening, March 4, he appeared at the Family in "Bound in Morocco," and drew capacity houses. Everyone commented favorably on the picture.

THE PROGRAM at the Grand for Monday and Tuesday, March 3 and 4, was "The Make Believe Wife," a recent Billie Burke offering. As the unconventional young society woman who turns out to be a most lovable person with a delicious sense of humor, Miss Burke had one of the best roles she has done for many months. The supporting cast, especially David Powell, was well liked and well suited to the roles they portrayed.

FRANK KEENAN was seen at two Dubuque theatres on Tuesday, March 4. The Dreamland presented him in "More Trouble" and the Star in "Wars Women."

Capitol in Springfield Has Big Sunday

IT is reported from Springfield, Ill., that Sunday, March 2, was one of the biggest days the Capitol theatre of that city has ever had. Manager Maisel had on "The Lightning Raiders," chapter 9, and a Chaplin comedy. Business was of the turn 'em away kind, in a measure due to the excellence of the weather. For the rest of the week the Capitol had on: Monday, Tom Moore and Madge Kennedy in "The Fair Pretender"; Tuesday, "Love's Pay-Day," with Rosemary Theby and "The House of Terrible Scandals," a Fox comedy; Wednesday, Emmy Wehlen in "His Bonded Wife" and "The Real Roosevelts," a two-reel production, based on the life of the famous fighting family; Thursday, "The Girl of the Golden West" and "Wanted $5,000," a Pathe-Lloyd comedy; Friday, Henry B. Walthall in "And a Still Small Voice," and Strand comedy; Saturday, Billy West in "Ship Ahoy," and the fifth chapter of the "Terror of the Range" with George Larkin and Betty Compson.

Here and There in Fond du Lac

"CONTRARY to the usual expectation the advent of Lent has not been marked by a decline in patronage," says Manager O. J. Vollert of the Idea theatre. "As a matter of fact," he added, "our business has continued excellent throughout the first week of Lent. It is possible that the fine weather has helped out."

ETHEL BARRYMORE in "The Divorce" furnishes the premier attraction at the Idea on Monday and Tuesday, March 10 and 11.

FOR years it has been the policy of Manager William R. Ainsworth of the Orpheum as well as that of the managers of other moving picture houses to "lay down" during Lent on the theory that there isn't any business anyhow. Ainsworth, however, decided on an innovation this year. Instead of playing his low card he played his high one-result capacity business on Ash Wednesday with Gaby Deslys in "Infatuation." And the good business started on Ash Wednesday kept right up through the three days' engagement. Manager Ainsworth declares that hereafter he will go after business in Lent a little stronger than at other times and will get it.

MANAGER AINSWORTH of the Orpheum presented Tom Mix in "Treat 'Em Rough" Saturday and Sunday, March 8 and 9. On Saturday he delighted the boys and girls by putting on one of his famous six-cent matinees and "stood them up."

THE ladies of the Presbyterian Church who sponsored the presentation of the Artcraft picture—Elsie Ferguson in "Heart of the Wilds"—at the Bijou Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, March 3, 4 and 5, were able to replenish their treasury to the extent of $60. What is more they had the satisfaction of giving their friends an opportunity to enjoy an excellent picturization of "Pierre of the Plains." The photography by Walter Stradling left nothing to be desired.

WHILE war pictures have been almost tabooed in Fond du Lac since the armistice was signed, Manager Smith took one more venture in offering Frank McIntyre in Rex Beach's "Too Fat to Fight" which opened a three days' engagement Thursday, March 6, to fair business.

THE program of the Scenic theatre, Waupun, for the five days ending Thursday, March 6, included the following excellent features: Saturday, March 1, Edith Storey in "The Demon" and Fatty Arbuckle in "Good Night Nurse"; Sunday, March 2, Betty Compson and Geo. Larkin in "The Border Raiders" supplemented by the Katzenjammer Cartoon; Tuesday, March 4, Harry Morey and Florence Deshon in "A Bachelor's Children"; Wednesday, March 5, Fritzie Brunette in "The Velvet Hand" and a Hooligan Cartoon; Thursday, March 6, Ruth Rowland in "Hands Up," Lonesome Luke Comedy and Pathe News.

CHARLES RAY in "The Family Skeleton" was the feature at the Davison theatre, Waupun, Sunday, March 2.

'George Smith Travels in Italy

GEORGE A. SMITH, known throughout the film trade through his long connection with the Pathe organization of which he was manager of serial sales, and who more recently has attained fame as a result of his work with the film section of the Department of Public Information, writes a Chicago friend as follows: "Spending ten days at Nice as Uncle Sam's guest. Visited Monte Carlo today."

This would seem to indicate that Mr. Smith is making the rounds of the foreign centers in the interest of the Film Division of the Department of Public Information.

Friends of Mr. Smith are looking for his early return to the states and the resumption of his place as an executive with some of the big film distributors.

They Say in Chicago That—

MISS L. M. BELFIELD has been placed in charge of the American Film Company's Publicity Department, located in Chicago. Indications are from Miss Belfield's experience that the exhibitors will be well supplied with the snappiest kind of up-to-date publicity for the "Flying A" pictures.

IKE SCHLANK, President of the Capital Film Co., whose general offices are in Indianapolis, has been in Chicago for a few days and is particularly enthusiastic over the reception the exhibitors are according their service.

BEEHIVE EXCHANGE, Chicago, Milwaukee, Indianapolis, is looking for big things from their thousand feet reel of thrills, called "Washington Sky Pilot," the picture that made little old, blasé New York sit up and take notice, when it was shown in the Rivoli. Every indication is that Mr. Cropper will not be disappointed. Chicago exhibitors have started already to ask for the picture, in which you see the "Capitol do a Jazz dance," as per the New York Tribune statement.

THE inhabitants of Chicago's Film World are somewhat puzzled over the title of the new Jack Pickford picture, "In Wrong." They seem to figure that the young man's recent experiences with Uncle Sam indicate that he was "In Bad" with emphasis on the "Bad."

THE announcement just sent out by the Exhibtors' Mutual Distributing Corporation, announcing the appointment of Max Levey to the managerial chair of their Chicago office, is a classy card—Well, why not? Some classy manager—Good luck, Max.

MESSRS. LUBLINER & TRINZ are tickled pink over the business their new "Ellantee" theatre is doing, which opened Saturday evening, March 1. The opening night it was absolutely impossible to handle the crowds.

MAE J. WHITE, for years associated with the Jones, Linick & Schaeffer organization, has been placed in charge of the Allied Amusement Association office, just open in the Consumers building. Miss White's all round experience in the amusement world particularly fits her for this exacting position.

CHICAGO'S Own Screen News Magazine presented by Willis & Eckels of Filmcraft. and now being distributed by the Celebrated Players Film Corporation, has created a startling interest that entails every first-class theatre in Chicago. Joe Friedman, manager of the Celebrated Players, announces that extra prints of the new local weekly will be added at once to take care of the unparalleled demand.

HENRY WEISS has a new one. He bets a man when he books their "Shoulder Arms," with Charlie Chaplin, that it will break all records. The wager is usually a silk shirt to cost $10.00—this is the solution of why Weiss has a collection of silk shirts that would make any of the big haberdashers' of the country stock look sick, and accounts for the blinding colors seen in the Central Film Chicago office every day.

J. F. DITTMAN, of Freeport, Ill., the owner of several of Freeport's picture houses, is said to have the most complete general office in the state of Illinois for the conducting of his business.

MR. MORTIMER of the Jewel, New York office, is in Chicago territory, to handle publicity on the percentage bookings throughout the midwest for "Hearts of Humanity," the Jewel super-film, which is proving a great repeat attraction. Practically every house playing it once has booked it a second time.

JOE SCHNITZER, general sales manager of Universal special attractions, has been in Chicago, conferring with Sid Goldman, the district manager and the managers under him.

THE Select Special, "The Hidden Truth," is making a success as a result of its star's popularity—Anna Case. The Edison phonograph people, who distribute Miss Case's records, are exploiting the star in conjunction with the local theatres in each city.

LEE GOLDBERG, manager of the Louisville, Ky., First National office, has been a visitor at their Chicago office.

THE Warrington theatre at Oak Park will be opened as a picture theatre by H. H. Goldson.

CARL MUELLER, of Rock Island, Ill., has been a Chicago visitor.

CLARENCE PHILLIPS has been made manager of the Capital Film Chicago office; A. C. Fox, manager of the Minneapolis office, and A. G. Garland has been given the managership of the Des Moines office.

CHAS. DAHLER, of the Abingdon theatre, Abingdon, Ill., paid Chicago a visit recently.

W. G. MAXEY, President of the Bartola Musical Instrument Co., accompanied by D. W. Barton, the inventor of the instrument, has been in Chicago reorganizing their Chicago office.

M. C. HUGHES, who has been the manager Program Department, Metro Chicago office, has been appointed manager of the Metro Detroit office. In the future, both the program department and the Screen Classics will be handled by C. E. Smith, as formerly.

MANAGER KUNTZ, of Kuntz Bros.' "Princess" theatre, Springfield, has been a visitor in Chicago.

S. A. SHIRLEY, district manager of the Metro organization, has left for Kansas City.

RALPH BRADFORD, manager of the Triangle Chicago office, has great expectations for their coming release of their special "It's A Bear," featuring Taylor Holmes and Olive Thomas, to be released March 16.

"SHADOWS OF SUSPICION," featuring the late Harold Lockwood, released March 17, is attracting a great deal of attention for exhibitors and bids fair to do enormous business.

WALTER SPOOR'S "Academy" theatre, Waukegan, Ill., shattered all records with "Hearts of the World."

ANDREW KARZAS, proprietor of the Woodlawn theatre, is inviting sincere flattery in the form of imitations by his form of newspaper advertising and neighborhood display work. It is current talk that his display for "Mickey" and "Out of the Fog" were the most striking lobby sets seen in Chicago this season.

LEO LANDAU, manager of the Butterfly theatre at Milkaukee, struck the innovation cord of newspaper advertising, this week, by calling to the attention of the patrons what he did

STANLEY W. HATCH has resigned as Detroit manager for Metro and M. C. Hughes, who comes directly from Chicago where he had been in charge of the Program, is his successor. For many months Mr. Hughes was district manager in Canada for Metro.

THE Arthur S. Hymen Attractions has taken the Michigan rights to the Outing-Chester pictures. Mr. Hyman has arranged for three prints of these educational subjects.

TWO exhibitors in one of the largest cities in the Detroit territory were caught last week sub-renting films belonging to the Famous Players-Lasky corporation. One of the exhibitors who was buying service and sub-renting it to another house actually allowed the other fellow to advertise and run the film ahead of himself. It has been the custom of the exchange to ship the films two days in advance to insure timely arrival. Hereafter special precautions will be taken to eliminate unscrupulous exhibitors from the business.

THE MADISON THEATRE, Detroit, last week celebrated its second anniversary with a big double bill showing Wallace Reid and Fatty Arbuckle.

CARL NEWMAN, proprietor of the Strand theatre, Sturgis, Michigan, has purchased the Crystal from Leo Kane, which gives him control of the town.

RAY HANCOCK, of the Arcade theatre, Charlotte, Michigan, has leased the Columbia in Grand Rapids and is remodeling and refitting the playhouse throughout.

H. K. MOSS, Triangle manager for Detroit, and Charles G. Branham, manager of the Majestic theatre, have closed negotiations whereby the Majestic will play Mack Sennett and Keystone reissues. Many state houses have contracted for these reissues.

DAVE MUNSTUK, of the Strand Features, Detroit, has purchased "Sapho," with Florence Roberts and a big cast and is doing good business with it.

How Keenan Looks to Springfield Folk

A REPORT from Springfield, Ill., to MOTION PICTURE NEWS on "Todd of the Times" reads as follows:

"Frank Keenan had in 'Todd of the Times' one of the best pictures he has yet appeared in, and the play had three big days at the Princess starting March 2. It was a relief to see the sterling actor in something that wasn't 'hard-boiled' and many picture fans who had begun to tire of him came back when they found out he was really cast in a suitable production. This information was obtained from W. K. Sines, publicity manager of the theatre.

"Other attractions coming to the Princess in the near future are: Grace Darmond in 'What Every Woman Wants,' on March 5 and 6; Henry Walthall in 'A Long Lane's Turning,' on March 7 and 8; Florence Reed in 'Her Code of Honor,' on March 9, 10 and 11; Sessue Hayakawa in 'Heart in Pawn,' on March 12 and 13; Bessie Barriscale in 'A Trick of Fate,' on March 14 and 15; Nazimova in 'Out of the Fog,' on March 16, 17 and 18."

Interesting Items of Elgin

ELGIN liked "He Comes Up Smiling" when it came to the Grand the week-end of March 4 and showed to good crowds of pleased patrons.

THAT war tax and war alarms must have failed to make business at the Star cease from prospering is conclusion drawn and encouragement given contemporary picture men in town in hearing of the purchase of the T. A. Munshaw home, one of Elgin's best residences, by Manager Ralph Crocker of the Star, made recently. Manager Crocker will soon move his family into their new home.

THE Fox production of "Salome" is one of the forthcoming special attractions booked for near date at the Temple by Manager Fay, who is making rival managers "sit up and take notice" by his plunging into the high class, new production class of features. It will come to town early in April.

GRACE CUNARD in "After the War" was advertised in feature of the bill the first week in March at the Temple. Other pictures of the week included William Desmond in "Life's a Funny Proposition," the Houdini serial, Carmel Myers in "The Little White Savage," Fritzi Brunette in "Sealed Envelope," the comedies, "Easy Payments," "War Gardens," "Bungling Burglars," "Sing, Rose, Sing," and "O, Baby." Eddie Polo in "The Lure of the Circus," a Wolfville drama; "Dismissal of Silver Phil," "Wolves of the Range," the Screen Telegram, and Current Events completed the bill.

"WHERE THE WEST BEGINS," with William Russell, led off the entertainment bill at the Star the first week in March. Margarita Fisher in "Molly of the Follies" excited good patronage and pleased interest on the Saturday of the previous week. Other pictures of the first March week were Gladys Leslie in "The Beloved Imposter," Fatty Arbuckle in "The Sheriff," the Screen Supplement, Billy West in "He's In Again," Pearl White in "The Lightning Raider," G. M. Anderson in "Son of a Gun," and a Sunshine comedy, "Oh, What a Knight."

"ON THE QUIET," the first John Barrymore picture made after his return to the screen stage, drew pleased houses to the Grand on Monday and Tuesday, March 3 and 4. The late week was given to showing of "The Girl Who Came Back," with Ethel Clayton, and Marguerite Clark in "Out of a Clear Sky."

"THE FIGHTING ROOSEVELTS," encouraged by special window display of be-sombreroed and be-spectacled Teddy bears, drew good crowds to the Orpheum on Saturday, March 1. There was a special well-attended school children's matinee at 10 o'clock in the morning, with special admission price of 5 cents.

"THE ROMANCE OF TARZAN," sequel to the "Tarzan of the Apes" picture, which crowded the Orpheum on three separate showing periods, came to that playhouse on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of the first week in March. It pleased as greatly as the first picture and, despite poor weather, brought out excellent crowds.

TREMENDOUS success with the showing of "Mickey" has encouraged Manager Fay to yield to many requests to bring the picture back for return showing at the Temple. He has booked it for re-showing on March 27, 28 and 29. Manager Fay terms this picture the most all-around satisfactory picture he has ever shown in his theatre.

"A PICTURE with beautiful scenery and a nice story" is the rating given in reports from the Grand of "The Shepherd of the Hills," a special attraction shown at the local playhouse the first three days of the last week in February. The picture was shown to capacity houses afternoons and evenings and made universal appeal.

News and Gossip of Springfield Theatres

BY a coincidence the Gaiety in Springfield, Ill., had two Mabel Normand pictures on February 27, 28 and March 1. The new Goldwyn star was featured in "Sis Hopkins," and then Manager Thornton booked the ten Sennett re-issues and drew "My Valet" for the same days. Miss Normand was fine in both pictures and surely furnished a goodly assortment of comedy for the crowds which attended.

THE sharp drop in temperature the week of February 26-27-28 resulted in very poor business at all the Springfield picture theatres.

MRS. HARRY LOPER, wife of the manager of the Lyric theatre, is recovering from a recent operation.

THE Gaiety booked "The Heart of Humanity" for a week's run, starting Sunday, March 9. Manager Thornton made a trip to Decatur to see the picture and pronounced it one of the best he had ever seen. The Gaiety had "Fatty" Arbuckle in "Love" on the same program, making an extraordinary bill. A special augmented orchestra was engaged and a heavy advertising campaign put over.

REX LAWHEAD, formerly of Chicago and New York, is now manager of the Lincoln Square theatre in Decatur. This house is the most pretentious in Central Illinois but has lost money since its building. Mr. Lawhead is following the system used by the big theatres, such as the Riviera, Pantheon, Woodlawn and other Chicago houses, and with some of the best features of the Strand, Rialto and Rivoli, New York.

JOHN DAVIDSON, excellent villain in many World and Metro pictures, made a personal appearance at the Chatterton here in Booth Tarkington's "Penrod." He drew many picture fans to the attraction.

HARRY LOPER looked over his list of pictures coming—and gone—and said: "I sure have had a run of comedy-dramas lately." And Harry has. Some of them were "The Spender," "The Gold Cure," "Sauce for the Goose," "$5,000 an Hour," "Hell Roarin' Reform," "His Bonded Wife," "In for Thirty Days," and "Johnny-on-the-Spot." And the beauty of it all was that there wasn't a bad picture in the lot.

WILLIAM FARNUM came to the Lyric for three days in "The Man Hunter," starting March 6. Norma Talmadge comes to the same theatre on March 13 for three days in "The Forbidden City," which will be her first appearance here in about four months.

ETHEL CLAYTON had four big days at the Vaudette in "Maggie Pepper," and the Gaiety also had four big days at the same time with W. S. Hart in "Breed of Men." Both pictures pleased most gratifyingly.

THE Gaiety has ordered a new screen, to be put in in time for the first showing of "The Heart of Humanity." For this picture the Gaiety orchestra will be doubled.

SEVERAL reformers are on a ticket to be voted on at the April election, and it is rumored that they are antagonistic to the playhouses. At this writing it looks as though the old—and satisfactory—bunch will be re-elected.

GOVERNOR LOWDEN is not as much of a picture fan as was Dunne when Governor. Dunne went nearly every day and on Saturday nights could usually be found occupying a box at the Majestic. Some of the "big guns" at the State House are ardent fans and never miss a single feature.

REPORTS from the family theatres—Empress, Palace, North End Circle and Pekin—are that business is very satisfactory.

NOTHING new has developed on the censorship fight. Chicago is still after local censorship, and the Buck bill provides for State censorship. Local exhibitors are imploring fellow-showmen to get into the game and defeat the Buck bill. In fact, some of the exhibitors seem to think the producers will do to Illinois as they have threatened other States—refuse to send pictures into places where censors rule.

HOUDINI made his first appearance in films in this city at the Royal theatre on Friday and Saturday, March 7 and 8, in "The Master Mystery." Other pictures shown at the Royal, starting with the week of March 2, were: Sunday, "The Lure of the Circus," and Helen Gibson in "Dead Shot;" Monday, "Wild Honey," with Doris Kenyon;" Tuesday, William Farnum in "Riders of the Purple Sage," and "The Hand of Vengeance;" Wednesday, "By Hook or Crook;" Thursday, "The Girl in His House;" Friday, the Houdini serial.

BARRING one or two days last week, when the weather was bad, business has been pretty good at all the theatres. Reports from all the houses indicate better patronage than last year. The Lenten season, which starts March 5, always has a tendency to cut patronage, though not as much for the motion picture houses as the vaudeville and legitimate theatres.

"SMILES" brought roars of laughter out of the Lyric theatre, where it was shown on March 2 and 3. The Lee children were really funny, and the antics of the little stars kept everyone on the edge of his seat all the while the play was on. While the picture had but little plot, it had everything that the audiences liked, which was better than it was plot-perfect. It is hoped that Fox will turn out some more winners like "Smiles."

THE case of the colored folks against one of the local motion picture theatres has been transferred to the County Court and will not come up for some time.

IT is reported that a Chicago amusement company has secured an option on a desirable location here and will build a large motion picture theatre in the next few months. It is hoped that all the facts will be ready for publication in next week's MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

PAULINE FREDERICK had in "Paid in Full" the best picture that the Vaudette had her in since signing for Paramount service nearly two years ago.

THE Capitol has contracted for the new serial with Ruth Roland.

BEN ROVIN is enjoying the town from the tonneau of his new Velie and seeing streets he never knew existed in Springfield. Ben in the meantime is doing a fine business down at his Amuse-U. Rovin prides himself on being a 100 per cent Fox exhibitor, and says every one of their pictures makes him money.

THE Empress theatre, owned by Mrs. Duer, has contracted for Paramount-Artcraft pictures.

GUS KERASOTES had one big day and one poor day with Annette Kellerman in "Queen of the Sea," shown at the Royal. The poor day was due to the extremely bad weather. Next day, when things had righted themselves again, the picture drew big.

LOUIS KERASOTES reports that Sunday's business, March 2, came very near making a new record for the Savoy. The bill was the last chapter of "A Fight for Millions," J. W. Kerrigan in "The Raiders of the Range," and Alice Howell in "Behind the Front;" on Monday, Mary Miles Minter in "Rosemary Climbs the Heights," and Syd Chaplin in "Flirting With Mermaids;" Tuesday, "One Law for Both," with all-star cast; Wednesday, Florence Reed and Milton Sills in "Sins of Ambition;" Thursday, Edith Roberts in "Set Free;" Friday, last chapter of "The Iron Test," and other attractions; Saturday, a special feature.

Gathered in Green Bay

ADMIRERS of Mabel Normand found plenty of opportunity to see her to advantage during a three day period, February 26-27-28. She appears in "Sis Hopkins," a Goldwyn film at the Colonial, and in "Mickey," a Paramount film, at the Orpheum theatre those dates. Both pictures attracted large audiences.

MARGUERITE CLARK played in "Rich Man, Poor Man," a Paramount picture, in the Orpheum theatre March 6, 7, 8, 9.

VIVIAN MARTIN was the attraction at the Colonial theatre March 7 and 8 in the Paramount offering, "Mirandy Smiles."

CONSTANCE TALMADGE was a "hit" in "Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots," a Select film, at the Grand theatre March 1 and 2.

"A DAUGHTER OF THE OLD SOUTH," with Pauline Frederick in the lead, played at the Colonial theatre February 28-March 1. The picture is from the Paramount studios.

EMMY WEHLEN played in "Sylvia On a Spree," a Metro comedy, March 2, in the Colonial theatre.

"THE GREATEST THING IN LIFE," the great picture by D. W. Griffith, was presented in the Grand theatre March 3, 4 and 5 before large audiences. A ten-piece orchestra played while the picture was run.

BRYANT WASHBURN played at the Colonial theatre March 3 and 4 in the Paramount film, "The Way of a Man With a Maid."

WILLIAM S. HART was an attraction at the Orpheum theatre February 27 and 28-March 1 and 2 in the Paramount picture "Selfish Yates."

"THE WOMAN ON THE INDEX," a Goldwyn film, played by Pauline Frederick, was shown at the Colonial theatre March 5 and 6.

CHARLES RAY was seen in the Paramount picture "The Law of the North," February 24 and 25 in the Colonial theatre.

CHARLIE CHAPLIN appeared in "Shoulder Arms" March 4 and 5 in the Royal theatre. The picture had previously been shown in another house, but the comedian drew many patrons to the house.

"THE HEART OF WETONA," with Norma Talmadge in the star's part, was screened in the Grand theatre March 5, 6, 7 and 8.

MARY MILES MINTER played in "Wives and Other Wives," a five-act comedy from the American film studios, at the Royal theatre March 5 and 6.

"THE HUN WITHIN," a Paramount-Artcraft picture, was produced at the Grand theatre February 25, 26 and 27. Dorothy Gish took the leading role.

CARMEL MYERS was seen in "Who Will Marry Me?" a five-reel Bluebird production March 6 and 7 at the Royal theatre.

Seeing Shows Around Dubuque

THE Belknap theatre at Hopkinton, Ia., has booked the Success Series pictures. The first one to be shown was "Wildflower," with Marguerite Clark. The picture was shown on Saturday, March 8.

THE pictures shown at the Plaza theatre at Manchester, Ia., from Wednesday, February 26, to March 5 were as follows: "Unclaimed Goods," with Vivian Martin; "The Tiger Man," with William S. Hart; "Our Mrs. McChesney," with Ethel Barrymore; "Where the West Begins," with William Russell; "The Family Skeleton," with Charles Ray, and "The Iron Test," a new serial featuring Antonio Moreno.

"A FOOL THERE WAS," a William Fox re-issue starring Theda Bara, was the program at the Nemo theatre at Earlville, Ia., on March 4. A Mutt and Jeff comedy was used as a program filler.

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG was presented at the Star theatre at Decorah, Ia., on February 27 in "The Reason Why," one of her best photoplays. On Friday and Saturday "Hidden Fires" was presented. Mae Marsh was the star and proved herself a most versatile little actress, playing a double role. On Monday J. Warren Kerrigan, the idol of feminine picture fans, was presented in "One Dollar Bid."

DURING the month of March the manager of the Plaza theatre at Manchester, Ia., is showing first-run Paramount, Artcraft, Metro and Exhibitors' Mutual releases.

ON Saturday, March 1, the manager of the Palace theatre at Waverly, Ia., presented "Shoulder Arms," the Charlie Chaplin version of the war. The picture was shown at increased rates and drew splendidly. In addition to the Chaplin picture a Neal Hart release, "Beating the Limited," was shown.

JANE AND KATHERINE LEE drew crowds to the Cozy theatre at Dyersville on Friday, February 28, in that riot of laughter, "Swat the Spy." On Satrday and Sunday the William Fox production, "The Caillaux Case," was shown.

DURING March the Cozy theatre at Dyersville, Ia., will show two Charlie Chaplin features, "A Dog's Life" and "Shoulder Arms."

OELWEIN, IA., boasts of two excellent theatres, the Gem and the Orpheum. Both are under capable management and show the best possible pictures. The Gem as a rule runs Paramount and Artcraft pictures, while the Orpheum has Pathe and Goldwyn subjects. On Tuesday and Wednesday, March 4, the Gem presented "The Gypsy Trail," with Bryant Washburn, while the Wednesday bill at the Orpheum was "Hidden Fires," with Mae Marsh.

With Dubuque Exhibitors

A ROLLICKING cowboy undertakes to teach a school and things begin to happen. That was the beginning of "The Pretender," the William Desmond picture that was at the Liberty theatre in Dubuque on Thursday, February 27. The picture was immense—in fact, it was the best William Desmond feature shown at this theatre in months. And it drew one of the best houses of the month.

THE Family presented "Human Clay," with Mollie King, for the February 27 program. As a story of regeneration "Human Clay" has seldom been equaled. Miss King is an excellent actress and is well liked at the Family.

EVELYN NESBIT in "I Want to Forget" played at the Princess theatre on February 26 and 27. Miss Nesbit is in a class all by herself—her acting is original, and she is truly a refreshing sort of an actress.

Additional News of Dubuque

"AND A STILL, SMALL VOICE," the latest Henry Walthall play to be shown in Dubuque theatres, was presented at the Dreamland on February 26 and 27. The actor proved that he is still good by his work in this picture; that he had lost none of that magnetic power that attracted attention when it was displayed in "The Birth of a Nation."

MAY ALLISON in a comedy drama is a real treat. One of her recent pictures, "In for Thirty Days," was shown at the Dreamland theatre February 28 and March 1, and proved to be both a splendid entertainment and a good crowd-getter. A clever story, fine direction, and May Allison as a star made this picture one of the best Metro productions in months.

DUBUQUE'S one motion picture star, Frank Keenan, was welcomed at the Grand on Friday, February 28, in a Pathe picture, "The Midnight Stage." Dubuquers are very proud of Keenan and never miss an opportunity to see him. As the grand old Southern gentleman, John Lynch, and as the bandit, Rivers, Keenan, scored a big hit.

"SHOULD A WOMAN DIVORCE" and a two-reel Billy West comedy were the attraction at the Star theatre February 27 and 28.

THERE were no pictures shown at the Grand on February 26 and 27, as the house was occupied by two road shows.

T. J. MASTERSON, a former operator at the Dreamland theatre, is now a reporter on the Times-Journal.

"THE LITTLE AMERICANS," a Mary Pickford picture, proved as good a drawing power February 28 at the Family theatre as it was on its first showing in this city, almost two years ago. It attracted good houses all evening and the audiences seemed to like Mary as well as ever.

JEWEL CARMEN, William Fox star, was at the Liberty theatre February 28. In spite of the stormy weather the picture drew an average house.

THE March 1 program at the Family theatre consisted of a Charlie Chaplin comedy and "Naughty, Naughty," an Enid Bennett feature. Manager Yount reported big business.

JANE AND KATHERINE LEE walked away with the honors of the day on March 2, when they were presented at the Liberty theatre in "Swat the Spy." The picture was one big laugh. The Lee children certainly have established a reputation for being gloom chasers.

A CHARLIE CHAPLIN comedy, "Who Got Stung?" played to full houses at the Liberty theatre on Saturday, March 1.

Additional News of Elgin

BERT LYTELL in "The Spender" came to the Orpheum on Sunday and Monday, March 2 and 3, playing to satisfied houses. Another picture of the week was "The Sea Waif," with Louise Huff.

"THE SHEPHERD OF THE HILLS" and "Mickey," two feature films recently shown at Elgin playhouses, are to be ventured by Manager Cook of the Crystal, Dundee, the former on March 21. Douglas Fairbanks in "A Modern Musketeer" is booked for March 18. The date of "Mickey" is not announced as yet.

Bishop Cranston Visits Lasky Hollywood Studio

AMONG the visitors to the Lasky studio in Hollywood recently was Bishop Earl C. Cranston, who was, before his retirement, head of the Methodist Episcopal Church in America. With Mrs. Cranston, he was taken over the mammoth plant, and was said to be completely amazed at the realism of the sets and accuracy of methods.

Bishop and Mrs. Cranston were particularly impressed by the sets erected for Cecil B. DeMille's new picture, "For Better, For Worse." One of the sets, representing a Fifth Avenue mansion, contains furniture, rugs and paintings valued by Famous Players at $60,000.

In talking to Mr. DeMille, Mrs. Cranston said:

"The modern motion picture is undoubtedly the greatest educational force in the world today. Anyone who ignores it or neglects to take cognizance of it is thoroughly behind the times. Its influence for good in every department of life is incalculable."

Bishop Cranston, who is eighty-seven years old, found the studio a veritable wonderland also, and both he and Mrs. Cranston stated that their visit had been one of the most wonderful experiences of their lives.

Bershon Prepares "Heart of Humanity" for the Road

MANAGER DAVE BERSHON is now at work preparing for exploitation of the Allen J. Holubar war picture, "The Heart of Humanity," starring Miss Dorothy Phillips. This film is now in its third weeks' run at the Kinema theatre, Los Angeles. It is planned that this film will be booked as a road show attraction throughout this territory, and the prices to be maintained are 25, 35 and 50 cents.

One of the features of the last week's showing at the Kinema was the personal appearance of Miss Phillips and members of the cast. Miss Phillips appeared on Sunday night, William Stowell on Monday night, and others each night during the week. Miss Phillips sang a song written by two American soldiers and dedicated to her, which is titled "The Heart of Humanity." It is probable this song will be made a feature of the showing throughout the Southern California territory.

Fox Drive on Exchanges Proves Success

THE second annual drive of the Fox Film Corporation to bring every exchange up to a one hundred per cent. efficiency basis is meeting with great success in the coast territory, according to T. Z. Mooney, special representative in this territory, who has just returned to Los Angeles, after a trip to Seattle, Portland and San Franciso.

"It is my belief everyone of the Fox Exchanges in this territory will reach the one hundred per cent. basis," Mr. Mooney told a News representative upon his return to Los Angeles. "During the drive in 1918, the Fox Exchanges made thirty-seven hundred new contracts, and this year it is expected this number will be doubled. There is every reason to believe this will be done, because the Fox organization now has more subjects for the market, and we do not anticipate any difficulty in going into every town in every territory in the country. When we do this we will have reached the 100 per cent. efficiency basis of the exchanges. The drive began on February 17 and was to close on March 17, St. Patrick's Day. Just why the latter date was taken is not definitely known, but I suppose it is in honor of the three Irishmen of the Fox organization, Mr. Sheehan, Mr. McBride, chairman of the executive committee, and myself."

Mr. Mooney stated that the film business was enjoying the greatest patronage of its existence in this territory. All of the theatres are playing to capacity business, and it is Mooney's estimate that the loss occasioned by the close-down of the "flu." will be recouped by the theatre men before April 1. In all of the cities of the west coast territory, the theatres are nightly having lines of waiting customers extending a block or more from the entrance, and this condition is entirely new in a number of cities.

Jack Mower Returns From His Goat Ranch

JACK MOWER, that tower of power, has returned from his goat ranch and is overhauling his beach bungalow at Laguna. Jack is a real water fiend, and is preparing for a long summer session by the Pacific. He has a collection of south-sea craft, from out-riggers to dug-outs, and surf boards galore. Jack is always an exhibition when he goes swimming, for everyone has heard of his dare-devil surf board riding. He was born and raised in Oahu.

In and Around Denver

HARRY CAREY, Universal star, took Denver by storm for three days and nights, drawing crowded houses at the Strand on Curtis street, the Ogden and the Webber, Denver's two leading suburban houses. To say that he went over big would be putting it mildly. "Roped" was on for a showing at the Strand when he appeared there. Incidentally, Carey got more free advertising than any film star who has appeared in Denver. All four of the metropolitan daily newspapers played up his visit with attractive reading matter ranging from a half column to nearly three columns. He leaves here with the very positive endorsement of every fan in Denver.

FOR the first time in history Denver was selected for the meeting of Universal's intermountain branch managers, which was held here Saturday, March 1. Those who attended the conference, which was presided over by General Sales Manager Joe Schnitzer of New York City, were the following: Joe Brandt, treasurer, New York; G. A. Metzger, western division manager, Portland; George Bourke, manager of the Butte office; G. A. Hager, manager at Salt Lake; Edward Armstrong, division manager, Denver, and his assistant, H. J. Quinn.

THE meeting was called for the outlining of the future releasing policy of Universal special attractions and serials.

MR. SCHNITZER is going back to New York direct from Denver, and says he has secured the widest distribution of any picture ever made, referring to the one-reel production, "Careless America." This picture was recently shown simultaneously at twenty Denver houses, including all on Curtis street. The Denver incident has been repeated in every principal city of the country—simultaneous showings at every theatre. Mr. Schnitzer is well satisfied with his campaign.

THE Rocky Mountain Screen Club will give its second annual smoker at the Kenmark Hotel, Saturday evening, March 15. It is expected that 150 will attend. The tickets will be sold for $1.50, which includes the dinner. There will be two boxing bouts between local artists, and several special vaudeville acts by professionals from local theatres. The entertainment committee, of which Harry Huffman is chairman, have full charge of the affair.

A. S. AARONSON, special home office representative of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, has been visiting the Denver exchange and local exhibitors for the past ten days. During his visit, H. Bradley Fish, local manager, made a trip into northern New Mexico and on his return accompanied Mr. Aaronson to Salt Lake. Mr. Aaronson will visit San Francisco before his return to New York.

BEN S. COHEN, vice-president and general manager of Foursquare Pictures Corporation of Colorado, has returned from a two weeks' visit in New York. Since his return he has moved his headquarters from 1735 Welton street to 729 Seventeenth street, consolidating with the offices of the Film Clearing House, of which he is also now the local representative.

CARL RAY was in Denver after making his semi-annual visit to his house in Cheyenne, the Amuse theatre. He was accompanied by Earl Nye, manager of the Amuse. He left for his home in Los Angeles Thursday.

GEORGE GREAVES has booked the entire Goldwyn star series for the Rialto at Pueblo and the Princess at Cheyenne.

MANAGER KLEINE of Metro reports four first runs on Curtis street in a single week. The Strand presented "Peggy Does Her Darndest," on March 2 and 3; followed by "The Gold Cure" March 4 and 5, and "Johnny on the Spot" March 6 and 7. The Isis started Harold Lockwood in "Shadows of Suspicion" for a first run beginning March 6.

THOMAS KIRBY, owner of the Grand at Sheridan, Wyo., was the guest of Mr. Kleine this week. While here he signed for the whole list of Screen Classics.

SUPREME PHOTOPLAYS CORPORATION of Denver has contracted for 52 of the Outing-Chester pictures, and will release one each week in this territory beginning April 15. They have also just purchased from the trustee the entire stock, about 450 reels, of the Yale Photoplays Corporation and the Monarch Feature Film Company, which maintained offices at St. Louis, Kansas City, Oklahoma City and Des Moines. The pictures are now en route to Denver. They have just engaged two new salesmen, Eugene W. Woodbury, a local man, and R. H. Kennedy, formerly with Triangle at Dallas, and recently with the Denver exchange of Triangle.

Fairbanks Leases Clune Plant in Hollywood

ACCORDING to Business Manager John Fairbanks, arrangements have been completed for the leasing of the Clune Studio in Hollywood. This will be the future home of the Douglas Fairbanks productions for release through the United Artists Corporation.

Under the supervision of Robert P. Fairbanks, manager of production, the Clune Studio is now undergoing a complete overhauling, which includes the building of a new indoor glass covered stage, to be equipped with a special lighting system, a large outdoor stage and a new administration building.

The first production to be staged in the new Fairbanks' studio will be a propaganda film for the Fifth Victory Loan in accordance with a recent request from Joseph Tumulty, Secretary to the President, and Frank R. Wilson, director of publicity for the Treasury Department.

A complete outdoor gymnasium will be one of the features of the new studio for the special benefit of Douglass and his trainers.

The new studio is beautifully located in the heart of Hollywood, with a picturesque range of California mountains for a background.

The offices in the administration building will be occupied by general manager, John Fairbanks, manager of production Robert P. Fairbanks, scenario editor Ted Reed, head bookkeeper Leeds Baxter and his assistant William Nolan, with separate offices for directors Albert Parker and Joseph Henaberry, and their assistants Albert McQuarrie and Arthue Coe, a large room for the stenographic force and an office for Bennie Zeidman, publicity representative, that adjoins the main stage.

The buildings will be painted steel gray in keeping with Doug.'s orders to have everything look cheerful.

Clarence Badger Completes Kennedy Picture

CLARENCE BADGER, directing Madge Kennedy for Goldwyn, has completed his latest story, which shows a lot of California outdoor scenery. He went to Barstow and leased a train, after strings of red tape had been untangled in the government offices. One car was fitted with big dynamos to generate light for shooting interiors. A hundred people accompanied Badger who was working at high tension. Some perfect storm effects were gotten accidentally when a terrific storm came up in the yucca forests, giving the film an added realism that could not have even been planned, because nature cannot be duplicated in this particular fashion. Work will start this week on "Paula's Divorce," the next feature under his direction.

Seattle Film Man Visits Los Angeles

MIKE ROSENBERG, owner and general manager of the DeLuxe Feature Film Company of Seattle, spent two days in Los Angeles, the week of March 1, investigating independent subjects now in production.

"The Northwest is in very excellent condition," Mr. Rosenberg said, "and I do not believe there is any time in the past when the theatremen have had such excellent business as at the present, or prospects greater for the future. Every theatre is playing to good business, and the exchangemen and theatre owners are particularly optimistic for the future."

The DeLuxe Feature Film Exchange recently purchased "Mickey" and "Yankee Doodle in Berlin." The former subject was shown at the Clemmer theatre, Seattle, and made new records for that house. The business on this film throughout the territory, it is expected by Mr. Rosenberg, to make new records for his firm.

While in Los Angeles, Mr. Rosenberg was in conference with D. W. Griffith and other big people of the industry here, and it is expected that he will shortly be in position to make announcement of a number of new subjects that his exchange will handle for the Northwest.

What They Say in Seattle

JOE DANZ, manager of the Little theatre, announces that he has completed arrangements with the Fox Film Corporation's house in Seattle, that his playhouse will present first run pictures that company produces.

R. R. NAVE, manager of the Triangle office for the Northwest, has been congratulated by many other managers along the row for the manner in which he handled the few extraordinary situations that recently came up on account of the strike, the Flu, etc.

THEATRES in the Northwest are realizing right along the necessity of improved machinery apparatus for their houses. Among those adding new apparatus are J. Rantz, manager of the Dream and Rialto at Bremerton, who purchased two new Powers Six "B" and also a General Electric motor generator set. Mrs. Malone, of the Colonial theatre, Charleston, has purchased her second Powers 6 "A." Both parties purchased them from The H. A. Johnson Company, of Seattle.

RAY R. KELSALL has returned to the H. A. Johnson Company and has been promoted to manager, after spending a few months with Uncle Sam, who paid him $36 every month. He received $6 more than some did over at Camp Lewis because he was a corporal and the government realized that a man formerly connected with the picture business needed at least that much more a month to spend for cigars and stamps so he could keep in touch with and humor old customers. All the boys, except those who knew him, were sorry he came back, as there are some on the row who would like his job.

GUY NAVARRE, sales manager for eastern Washington for The Famous Players-Lasky Company, has just returned from a successful trip over his territory. Things are looking natural now, as the flu is practically a thing of the past, remarked Mr. Navarre.

J. A. ALLEN, special representative from the New York office of the Famous Players-Lasky Co., and Mr. Herman Wobber, district representative for the Pacific Coast, of the same concern, were recent visitors to the Seattle office of the concern, where they were in conference with Manager Dick Rosebaum.

MANAGER C. B. HUBER of the American, Sunnyside, Wash., was a recent visitor on Film Row.

F. E. SAMUELS, special representative of the General Film Company, New York, spent six days with Seattle manager, R. H. Allan, recently, and was pleased with the affairs of the Northwest branch. From Seattle Mr. Samuels left directly for Los Angeles, Cal.

"THE BIG FOUR CHAPLIN" releases of the General Film Company have been placed with The Rex, Seattle, John Hamrick, manager, as first runs. A number of other cities and towns in this district have also closed for them.

C. H. CODE, traveling representative for The General Film Company, has sent in to the Seattle office many new contracts he made in Montana and eastern Washington.

MANAGER HUOT of the Film Clearing House, has announced that a contract has been signed with Jensen and Von Herberg, managers of the Coliseum, Seattle, for the playing of the first of the "10-20-30 Series" in that house.

E. C. KIRKPATRICK, who was recently added to the Goldwyn office in Seattle, has been promoted to succeed Mr. McCormick as assistant general manager. Mr. Kirkpatrick is well known in different sections of the country as a man who is well acquainted with the motion picture industry.

C. O. WINRICK has left the First National to take charge of the accounting department of the Seattle Goldwyn office.

AMONG other additions to the Goldwyn office in Seattle are Mr. A. Mallot, formerly with the Fox people, and Mr. W. H. Bockmeyer, both having been added to the sales force. Mr. W. H. Bochmeyer is making his debut in the film business and is a brother of Mr. Bochmeyer, manager of the Cincinnati district for the Metro Company.

H. S. NELSON, salesman for the Mutual Concern, has acquired control of the Rose theatre, Colfax, Washington.

"MICKEY" has made another drive at the Clemmer, Seattle, where Mr. Clemmer ran this film for the second time. Many did not expect "Mickey" to go so well on the return engagement, but since the line leading to the box office was a half a block long for practically every day in the week, they admit they were wrong.

AL ROSENAUM, manager of the De Luxe Film Company, Seattle, has taken a trip to San Francisco, where he will confer with Sol Lesser.

R. E. HICKS, who is both proprietor and manager of the Cabrillo theatre, has added another business to the line of activities which fill his time there days, by becoming first vice-president of the Industrial Loan and Investment company, of San Diego, capitalized at $50,000.00.

EVELYN NESBIT in "Her Mistake" was the attraction at the Pickwick for the week, with William Farnum following in "The Man Hunter."

AT the Plaza, "Little Women" drew well, as did always the Louisa M. Alcott story when presented on the stage.

With Los Angeles Producers

D. W. GRIFFITH is now editing his untitled fifth Artcraft release, and producing the sixth, as yet unnamed. Several stories are being considered for Dorothy Gish's next Paramount, while "Peppy Polly" now filmed, is being edited. It is evident that Mr. Griffith and the Gish Company anticipate more extensive production on a more elaborate scale, for with the removal of the Clara Kimball Young Company and the Mary Pickford organization, it is announced the Sunset Studio will not rent space to companies, as all space and equipment will be required for the future activities of the Griffith and Gish companies.

VICTOR SCHERTZINGER, who has been affiliated with Thomas H. Ince for the past three years, serving in the capacity of composer of incidental music and for two years directed the making of many of the Charles Ray and Dorothy Dalton releases, has left Mr. Ince, and has now signed to direct for the Goldwyn Company, and no star has been assigned to Mr. Schertzinger, as he will not take up his new work until shortly after the arrival of Mr. Goldwyn.

CHARLES GERRARD, who has been playing with the Goldwyn forces, in answer to a wire from Joseph Schenck, has gone to New York, where he will play under the direction of Chester Withey in support of Norma Talmadge.

A LARGE PORTION of the Goldwyn exterior lot is now covered with specially constructed scenes representing portions of New Orleans on which the Mardi Gras scenes will be filmed by Reginald Barker for the coming Rex Beach picture adapted from the book "The Crimson Gardenia." This story has a very big cast of well-known players, the list including Owen Moore, and Hedda Nova in the leading roles, with Tully Marshall, Edwin Stevens, Sidney Ainsworth, Hector V. Sarno, Gertrude Claire, Tina Marshall and others.

THE information was given out this week that Nazimova and her leading man and husband, Charles Bryant, have entered the photoplay writing field, for they have rewritten and amplified the Maude Fulton play "The Brat," making it more acceptable for the screen. June Mathias wrote the continuity. Supporting Nazimova and Mr. Bryant in this play, being directed by Herbert Blache, are Amy Veness, Darrell Foss and Henry Kolker.

RALPH ROBINSON, who has been in Los Angeles for the past eighteen months serving as publicity man during the entire period with Metro, has resigned, and is leaving for the east on March 10, where he will continue in this work.

JOHN LYNCH has supplied the story at present known as "A Man's Wife" for the coming Dorothy Dalton Ince picture. Production work on this was started under the direction of Joseph de Grasse, new Ince director, this week. Miss Dalton takes the role of a nurse who proves an annoying prude to her wealthy relations. She marries a temporarily blind man, and the restoration of his sight is brought about in a new way and brings about a dramatic cricis with a happy conclusion.

Short News of San Diego

"MICKEY," featuring Mabel Normand, proved such a good drawing card that Manager Jones of the Superba booked the picture for a second full week's run. The singing of "Mickey" by a local vocalist as an entr'acte added to the pleasure of the Superba patrons.

KATHLEEN CLIFFORD, former Balboa film star, and "Smiling Billy" Mason, late with the Christie, Essanay and Universal pictures, have been playing a three days' engagement at the Isis theatre with Lloyd's vaudeville company while temporarily absent from the film stage.

THE Broadway theatre, which has been running a newspaper coupon campaign with great success during January and February, by which each subscriber to the Evening Sun secured a 30-cent seat upon the presentation of a monthly receipt, will continue the plan during March, according to announcement made by Manager "Jimmy" Black. Over 10,000 people took advantage of the offer during the first two months of the year. Mitchell Lewis in "The Code of the Yukon" closed the February attractions, followed by Constance Talmadge in "Who Cares."

THE Virginia Brissac Company, which includes Beatrice Joy, formerly with the World, Paramount and U. S. Film companies, has just completed the great record of playing a straight year in stock at the Strand theatre.

In Portland Film Circles

T. G. BLIGH, the Salem, Ore., exhibition magnate, has won a supreme court decision against the Oregon Theatre Company, headed by George B. Guthrie, involving the sale of the Bligh theatre, at Albany, to Guthrie's enterprise. The sale for $5,000, was made more than two years ago, but a controversy over the equipment involved resulted in the stoppage of payments, with a $3,500 balance due. The case eventually went to the Supreme Court, where Mr. Bligh received a favorable verdict last week.

INCIDENTALLY, Mr. Bligh, who owns the Bligh and Liberty theatres in Salem, reports that business recently has been the best in the history of the Oregon capital.

G. A. METZGER, Western manager for Universal, is back in Portland after a trip to Denver, and is planning to go to San Francisco, which is to be his headquarters hereafter.

JENSEN and Von Herberg have secured "Heart of Humanity," and will show it for two weeks at the Columbia theatre.

EMIL ROGASSNER, formerly of Philadelphia, is now a salesman with Universal, and will have the Williamette Valley territory in Oregon.

W. H. DURHAM, of Camas, Wash., was a recent visitor on Portland's filmrow.

R. C. McINTYRE, Famous Players-Lasky auditor, has been in Portland for several weeks. The office was again visited last week by J. W. Allen, special representative, and Herman Wobber, Western chief, who are preparing their offices to handle a greater volume of business.

CHAPLIN PICTURES are being worked overtime in Portland these days. One week recently, four downtown houses had Chaplin two-reelers.

VALENTINE HUBER, violinist and former musical director with "Hearts of the World," has been playing in Mischa Guterson's orchestra at the Peoples theatre.

GUTERSON, famous Russian orchestra leader, aspires to enter the exhibition field, so they say, and is investigating propositions in several Pacific Coast cities.

CHARLES FELDMAN, First National sales representative, has been in Portland for several days, while Manager Copeland, of American, was a recent visitor.

Heard in Los Angeles Town

VITAGRAPH'S recent big release, "The Lion and The Mouse," has been booked by Manager W. H. Hepburn for one or more weeks, showing at the Victory theatre on Broadway, Los Angeles, beginning the week of March 9.. Manager Edward Holland expects this film will run several weeks at this theatre.

E. H. EMMICK, general manager of the Peerless Film Exchange at San Francisco, paid the Los Angeles branch of this company a visit the week of March 8. Mr. Emmick reported the purchase of fifty-six Sennett single reel re-issues, made by the W. H. Producing Company, which are now being booked in both San Francisco and Los Angeles territories. The Peerless Exchanges, both in San Francisco and Los Angeles, specialize on comedy subjects, and in addition to handling the Christie Comedies for the past eighteen months or more, have purchased more than one hundred subjects from the W. H. Production Company, all of these have played in every town in the territory.

WILLIAM DUNCAN, the Vitagraph serial director and actor, is co-operating with the theatre men in connection with the first showing of episode for "The Man of Might." This serial is being shown at Pantages theatre, Los Angeles, where it opened on February 24, and Mr. Duncan made a personal appearance there and a short talk on experiences he had in the making of the first episode. Mr. Duncan plans on going to San Diego, where he will be present on the evening of March 8, when the Savoy theatre will show the first episode of this serial.

JEROME SMITH is the booker at the All Star Feature Exchange.

W. H. CREE, who prior to entering the Navy was Pacific Coast and Intermountain States special representative for the General Film Company, is now serving the Universal Film Exchange as salesman in the Southern California territory, and will devote a greater portion of his time to the Universal New Star Series.

THE BURBANK THEATRE, which has been dark since the "flu." epidemic, close-down, has been re-opened and will show five acts of vaudeville and pictures. Wm. Elmer, the actor, is manager of production, and C. E. Hopkins is treasurer of the theatre, while Irene Franklin is music director. Contract has been made for the Fox Excell Pictures, and the admission price has been fixed at 10 and 15 cents.

SANTA BARBARA is to have a new theatre shortly to be built by E. A. Johnson on a site 65 x 175, at the corner of Cannon and Peidio street. Mr. Johnson spent a portion of the past week in Los Angeles making arrangements for equipment and other features pertaining to the house. Among the orders that he placed is one for a Fotoplayer. The instrument is to be installed by July 3. It is estimated the new house will have a seating capacity of 1,000, thus being the largest motion picture theatre in Santa Barbara. This city has a population of about fifteen thousand, and there are now four motion picture theatres there besides the one which caters to traveling shows, and big film attractions.

THE M. & R. Feature Film Exchange branch in Los Angeles, this week showed the Gail Kane and Stewart Holmes production, "When Men Betray," at the Symphony theatre, this booking having been made for several weeks. Manager Howard Stubbins, of the Exchange, is authority for the statement that this picture will go into practically every city in the Southern California and Arizona territories. The M. & R. Exchange has recently added a number of additional attractions which are now being booked in the Southern California territory. The list includes the Al Jennings production, "The Lady of the Dugout," which has played to good business in both Los Angeles and San Diego. Another is "Mother, I Need You," which was made by the Corona Cinema Company, in Los Angeles. A third new attraction for this exchange is "Super Strategy," produced by the Mena Film Company, which is now at work on another, titled "Restitution."

"THE MIDNIGHT PATROL," the Thomas H. Ince picture, played to enormous crowds at the Alhambra theatre during the week of February 17, according to announcement by B. E. Loper, Select branch manager.

"THE BETTER 'OLE," a screen adaptation of the cartoons by Bruce Bairnsfather and Arthur Elliot, was given a preview to a number of exhibitors in Los Angeles, this week, by Manager T. E. Hancock of the World Film exchange.

R. E. HICKS, proprietor of the Cabrillo theatre at San Diego, was a recent visitor to Los Angeles.

News of the Week in San Francisco

BUSINESS in the San Francisco motion picture houses is showing a healthy increase, which is gratifying to the exchange managers as well as the theatrical directors, after the losses incident to the epidemic conditions of last fall and early winter. All the houses are doing a good business and the exchanges are putting on more people to handle their business.

DURING the last week the Universal Film Exchange, Inc., took on two new people as road men. E. T. Wakefield, who was with the George Kleine System at Los Angeles for two years, and was previously associated with the Pathe in the same city, will cover some of the interior points to the south, and Harry Patrick Kennedy will cover parts of the Sacramento valley territory. Mr. Kennedy was for many years an actor, interpreting comedy parts on the legitimate stage, and later was with the Selig Polyscope Co. in Chicago, where he was successful as a screen actor.

MURRY HAWKINS, formerly with Select Pictures at Denver, has become associated with the Film Clearing House of this city. At one time he was with the Universal at Phoenix.

D. J. CHATKIN, manager of the local Film Clearing House, says that he expects that Lieutenant Bert Hall, formerly of the Lafayette Escadrille, will fly from Denver in the near future and bring to this city "Romance of the Air." While the picture is being shown in this city, Hall will appear in person at the theatre.

"WANTED FOR MURDER," which the San Francisco Film Exchange has been advertising extensively, has been booked for a run in the T & D theatre, Oakland.

N. L. WATTON, of the Colonial theatre in Stockton, was in San Francisco this week. He has recently obtained the services of Alfred Anderson, who has been connected with the Jensen-Von Herberg people of Portland, Seattle and Butte. Mr. Anderson will attend to publicity for the enterprising Stockton manager. He was on the job last week, and Watton says he pulled some sensational advertising stunts in the campaign for the "Cannibals of the South Seas," which resulted in the house having a record-breaking week. The Cannibals, however, hardly need sensational advertising, for, according to W. A. Crane, local manager of the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation, the picture is making a hit wherever shown. The demand is so great for it among the theatre managers that it booked solid in this territory up to May 22.

J. W. DI STRASIO of the Liberty theatre, Sacramento, one of the live wires of that town, was in San Francisco this week, visiting all the larger exchanges.

MIKE ROSENBERG, president of the De Luxe Film Corporation, was in San Francisco this week for a conference with Sol Lesser of the All Star. While not directly associated in business with Mr. Lesser, both managers handle the same pictures and frequently confer with each other regarding future purchases.

F. E. SAMUELS, special representative of the General, was in San Francisco for a short time this week on his way from Seattle to Los Angeles. While in the latter place he expects to secure a number of films for distribution through the General.

"BILL" ALEXANDER, western representative of the United, was another film magnate who spent a short time in San Francisco while en route to Los Angeles from Seattle.

IT was announced that the Lee children, popularly known as the "Fox Kiddies," would come up from Los Angeles for a personal appearance at the Rialto during the run of the latest Fox release, "Smiles," beginning March 9.

THE M & R Exchange announces that it has just secured the rights of a big $140,000 production, whose name they are not at liberty to state at present. The picture will be released in April, and according to the management it will prove a sensation.

"MOTHER, I NEED YOU," featuring Enid Markey, has been booked by the M & R for the first week of April at the Strand theatre in this city.

LEONARD FISHER, a new man in the game, has bought the Elite theatre, at Sacramento street and Presidio avenue, from James B. Lunna, and will change its name to the Rex. He is making improvements in the house, including the installation of a new fotoplayer of style No. 20.

NEWTON LEVI, district manager of the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation, is visiting Los Angeles, and expects to leave in a short time for Denver, where he will probably remain for a couple of weeks.

J. L. BROWN of the Orpheum theatre, Eureka, Cal., was a visitor to the exchanges this week. He reports that business in Eureka is better than it was all last year.

PLANS have been perfected for very extensive improvements and additions to be made to the Verdi theatre on Broadway. L. C. Johnson, manager of the theatre, has arranged that work be started in a few days, and a total of $25,000 will be expended in making the theatre up-to-date in every respect.

THE New Hippodrome theatre, costing $200,000, which has been in course of construction at San Jose for some time, was opened to the public on March 2. The theatre seats 2,000 people, and will be operated by Ackerman & Harris as one of the links of the Hippodrome circuit. It is said the company intends to build new theatres in Oakland, Los Angeles, Salt Lake City and Denver.

MACK SENNETT and some of the famous Mack Sennett bathing girls appeared in person at the Tivoli in connection with "Yankee Doodle in Berlin." It is said to be the first time the girls have appeared in person outside of Los Angeles. Bothwell Browne, who also appears in the picture, "Yankee Doodle in Berlin," was also here and staged a dance in which he had the support of the Sennett girls.

DURING a recent visit to Los Angeles, E. M. Asher, manager of the Tivoli theatre, made arrangements with the Turner & Dahnken stars to visit the Tivoli theatre in connection with the presentation of pictures in which they appear in leading roles. These stars include Anita Stewart, Mary Pickford, Charles Ray, Norma Talmadge, Jack Pickford, D. W. Griffith and others.

MARTIN KURTZIG, assistant manager of the Strand theatre, has been selected by the United States Government to take complete charge of the theatres maintained at the camps in the Western Division, and has left to assume his duties as director of sixteen theatres that hav been established for use of the soldiers. The selection of Kurtzig is recognition of long experience in the motion picture business, he having been picked from a large field of applicants. He is one of the pioneers in the motion picture business and was the first to establish a "movie" house in San Francisco.

M. EPPSTEIN, formerly with the Universal Film Corporation, has severed his connection with that company to become affiliated with the Consolidated Film Company.

"THE HEARTS OF THE WORLD" has been booked for a two weeks' run at the Strand, beginning March 9, at advanced prices. The picture had a record run for time in this city at the Alcazar theatre last year.

IT is reported that the Alhambra theatre has been doing a phenomenal business since it added tabloid musical comedy to its pictures.

C. J. LUNTZ, formerly manager for the Sherry Service in this city, has accepted a road position with the World Film Corporation.

THE Empress theatre, at 28th and Church streets, is now under the management of A. Bache.

R. W. HAWKINS has reopened the Cory theatre in the North Beach district. The theatre has been closed for about six months.

THE Bell theatre at Livermore is under new management, E. A. Maaske having taken over the control of the house.

With Los Angeles Theatres and Exchanges

B. C. STEELE will resume his work as manager of the Symphony theatre shortly. Mr. Steele went east just before the holidays and has been at Cleveland closing up his business there so that he could return to Los Angeles and make this his permanent home.

THE first showing of Prizma Natural Color Pictures released by World Film Corporation will be made the week of March 9, at the Kinema Theatre, when the Hawaiian volcano picture, titled "Kilauea," will be a part of the program, the feature of which will be "Mickey." Los Angeles Manager T. E. Hancock has given a number of private showings of the Prizma picture, and expects the booking will prove greater than any other short subject in the Southern California territory.

A LOVE feast is booked shortly for World Film Exchange employes, when H. S. Merritt returns from Arizona. This event will be staged by Manager T. E. Hancock, who is more than enthusiastic for the very successful sales tour of Mr. Merritt.

A NUMBER of important changes have been made at the Vitagraph Exchange by Manager Hepburn, which will greatly aid in the transaction of business there. Particular attention has been given to the location of the cashier's desk, which will now confront all patrons upon their entrance. A sign placed on another desk brings out the fact that Robert Amador has been promoted to the position of City sales manager.

JACK ROOT, owner and manager of the Strand theatre at Pasadena, is anxiously awaiting the arrival of his check from the government for services as athletic instructor at the balloon school at Arcadia. Root was former lightweight champion, and when the balloon school was opened he became the instructor there. He enlisted as a dollar-a-year man, and claims the government is debtor to him to the amount of thirty-four cents. He plans to have the check framed as soon as it arrives.

BECAUSE of the two-week run of the Clara Kimball Young Select Picture, "Cheating Cheaters," at Tally's theatre, Los Angeles, Manager B. E. Loper, of the Select Los Angeles Exchange, is of the opinion that Miss Young will again become one of the most popular screen stars in the Southern Califor-

F. A. SAMUELS, who succeeded Walter Rand as special representative of the General Film Company for Seattle, Portland, San Francisco and Los Angeles exchanges, has arrived in Los Angeles and will make his headquarters here. He announces the appointment of W. E. Matthews, former salesman of the General at San Francisco, as manager of that branch, to succeed M. J. Cohn, who resigned to accept a position with the Sol Lesser All Star Features Distributors Exchange at San Francisco.

THE Hodkinson Productions handled through the Pathe Exchange in Los Angeles, are to be represented by E. H. Silcocks, who for two years was manager of the George Kleine Exchange in Los Angeles. This arrangement was completed during the past week, and Mr. Silcocks took up his new work on March 3. W. E. Edmunds, representative of Hodkinson Productions at San Francisco, spent several days here with Mr. Silcocks in connection with this exchange. G. R. Surrwell was the former Hodkinson representative in Los Angeles.

CALMY BROTHERS' Movie Emporium on South Olive street, Los Angeles, this week closed negotiations with W. F. Libman for the Southern California and Arizona territory for the sale of Stanley Frame Company products. Plans of the lobbies of several Los Angeles theatres have already been submitted to the Stanley Company at New York for blueprints of lobby display frames, and it is expected that this company's product will shortly be installed in several of the leading theatres in Los Angeles.

A NEW firm on Los Angeles Film Row is System Slide Service, conducted by E. H. Barringer, at 752 South Olive street.

¶ The West Coast Edition of Motion Picture News costs us a lot of money. It costs just as much as would a separate publication published locally in Los Angeles or San Francisco. But it's worth it to us—Because it enables us to say that NO OTHER FILM PUBLICATION covers the West Coast as thoroughly, and with such intimate news and gossip as does Motion Picture News.

¶ We have often thought though—What a wonderful West Coast Edition we could get out, how much more money we could spend, how much more Service we could give—If every theatre manager in the West Coast territory sat down one night and wrote a twenty word note to his exchanges and the New York offices telling what the West Coast Edition meant to him because of its crisp, human, local items. Has it ever occurred to you? Why we could break speed limits in Service!

¶ Will you do it? Will you let us know about it? And then watch our smoke!

Simplex IMPROVED SPEED CONTROL WITH FLAT BELT PULLEYS

"Responds to the Touch Like a Thoroughbred"

INSTANTLY converts the hand driven projector into a smooth running, always-under-control motor driven machine responding to every touch through the ever-within-reach controlling handle.

A turn of the "throw-out" disk instantly changes the machine into either hand or motor driven at the will of the user without throwing off the belt.

Principle requires only 8% of motive power to operate, leaving 92% available power for driving machine. A turn of the controller handle produces—without jar or grind —40 to 120 revolutions per minute.

With the new 9/16" wide FLAT BELT running on the correspondingly wide pulleys an increase of bearing surface of 600% over the old round belt surface is gained, resulting in Added Gripping Space—More Power—Reducing Slippage—Increasing Efficiency.

Long-taper-sewn seam in flat belt eliminates clatter of metal coupling, and belt breakage.

NOTICE TO USERS OF PRESENT SIMPLEX SPEED CONTROLS

Your present speed control can be converted into the above pictured type by the outlay of $9.60 for four new pulleys and flat belt, which may be obtained through any Simplex Distributor.

ENID BENNETT

She Loathed Her Life!

SHE loathed the froth, the coarseness, the cheap glitter of the cabarets. Yet she was a child of the bright lights—a dancer in a Broadway "palace of jazz."

There came a chance to escape, and she took it. But the man she married was a coward and a brute, and he left her in a burning desert of the West.

This is only the beginning of "Partners Three," the stirring Thomas H. Ince production that presents Enid Bennett in another fine, big, appealing role.

See it through to the end—the beginning of a new life that she loved.

Remember "The Biggest Show on Earth," "When Do We Eat?" Remember all her other ones? Yes, and you'll remember "Partners Three."

It's the story of a dancer who loathed the life of the cabarets, and longed for love and peace. And she won what she sought—in the vast, silent places of the West.

The supporting cast is as good as the story. Casson Ferguson, John P. Lockney, Robert McKim, Lydia Yeamans Titus—you know and admire them all. "Partners Three" is a going concern. It will go big for you.

D. W. Griffith's Vital Story of Today

He told us the tale of the heroes of France's trenches as it was never told before.

Now his genius turns to the story of the heroines of the trenches that extend from New York to San Francisco—the endless trenches lined with women's souls.

It's not the story of the soldier who marches down the avenue.

It is the big drama of the girl who stands on the curb, waiting—scanning eagerly the faces of the marching men, searching for the face, the face of the man who must hear what happened while he was away; who must hear of her battles, and judge.

Griffith can make millions think. He can make millions smile. He does both in this wonderful picture.

Gentlemen:-

We opened up Sunday, March 2nd, with "Stolen Orders" at the Mall and Alhambra theaters and broke all records for all time.

We turned away thousands of people who were unable to get in. This is particularly remarkable in view of the fact that our past records have been made on features of not to exceed four and one-half reels in length, whereas this picture is seven and one-half reels.

Since Sunday we have been doing phenomenal business and expect the picture to hold up during the entire week.

Respectfully yours,

Here Is A Message For 1,000 Small Exhibitors

Goldwyn wishes to get on its books within two weeks one thousand small town, rural, close-to-the-soil theatres under contract to play The Ford Educational Weekly.

We told you last week of our 4,000 accounts reaching the largest cities and every size and grade of city and town down to little villages in remote sections.

FORD EDUCATIONAL WEEKLY

is edited and prepared to entertain and instruct. It succeeds in both aims; otherwise Henry Ford would not maintain and constantly improve it.

We never wish to get a top-heavy circulation on this fine attraction. It is a very large part of Henry Ford's idealistic purpose that The Ford Educational Weekly shall always be at the command of the small towns and cities.

The Ford Educational Weekly is virtually the only screen attraction that puts big city customer and small town customer on the same basis. We have the prints immediately available to give prompt service to 1,000 new small town contracts if they are signed and sent in promptly.

Unsurpassed for his convincing portrayals of big manly characters of the Great Outdoors.

That which constitutes a big picture is not always to be summarised in a few words. In The Man In The Open a number of things go to make it big; one is the character that the star portrays, another is the remarkable "story" interest and the skillful manner in which the high lights of the plot have been handled and another is the wonderful scenic and photographic effects provided. It is big from every angle

SPECIALS?

When a motion picture can be sold state rights in the United States, it MUST be SPECIAL. It must have EXTRA APPEAL. For the state rights market can only absorb the unusual in films. When a motion picture is big enough to "go state rights" in America, it is big enough for any theatre program anywhere unless its theme makes it unsuitable. The theme of Ivan Abramson's Graphic feature makes them 100% suitable abroad! Graphic's reputation as a "special" is built on the fact that she didn't acquire it with ONE PICTURE. All of her releases to date—three—have been strong enough to "go state rights." Not one, mind you—THREE. And it is these that Inter-Ocean now offers, for the first time, to foreign buyers.

"WHEN MEN BETRAY"—Featuring Gail Kane, with an all star cast, including Robert Elliot, Stuart Holmes, Jack McLean, Sally Crute, Reed Hamilton, Dora Mills Adams, Gertrude Braun, Tallulah Bankhead, Hazel Washburn and Juliet Moore.

"ASHES OF LOVE"—Featuring James K. Hackett, Effie Shannon, Mabel Julienne Scott and an all-star cast, including Paula Shay, Ruby de Remer, Dora Mills Adams, Hugh Thompson, William Davidson, William Bechtel and Thea Talbot.

"THE ECHO OF YOUTH"—Featuring Charles Richman, Leah Baird, Pearl Shepard, supported by Marie Shotwell, Jack McLean, Peggy Shanor and William Bechtel.

GOODS

Filmdom's Most Sensational Feature!

Now Offered To State Rights Buyers

In response to the insistent demand of Exhibitors and State Rights buyers for the phenomenal success—"Damaged Goods"—we have decided to offer this tremendous box-office attraction to State Rights buyers. Not a print of it has been shown in the United States for months past—all prints were withdrawn some time ago. Consequently exhibitors are clamoring to show it. Now is the psychological moment for big returns on this sensational feature. We guarantee exclusive territory in the United States and Canada.

Phone, Wire or Write for Territory!

This is undoubtedly the greatest money-maker ever offered to State Rights buyers. There is no gamble on what "Damaged Goods" will do. It is a demonstrated fact that it is without a rival as a box office attraction. Exhibitors know it gets the money—higher admission prices and long runs. The mere announcement that you own the rights for your territory should flood your office with bookings.

WHEN the story, by Richard Washburn Child, appeared in the Saturday Evening Post it was so absorbing, so fascinating and so plotful that it made a big dent in the public imagination.

When it was done into a motion picture it turned out even better and more diverting and it becomes a fine addition to the Metro All Star Series Productions. Harry L. Franklin directed it from A. C. Kenyon's scenario and the star is at his best.

PATHÉ REVIEW

"The Pathé Review is the best thing of its kind I have ever had the pleasure of looking at. The coloring is wonderfully done, the retarded motion part of it is instructive, entertaining and comic at the same time. I believe the Review will be accepted by the exhibitors and patrons as something they have been looking for for a long time—something different."

An Announcement

THE W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, in establishing a long prepared-for policy of handling above-average pictures only, announces the selection of the Augustus Thomas–Harry Raver Artco Productions, known as the Four Star pictures, directed by GEORGE IRVING and featuring LEAH BAIRD, to inaugurate its new line of product.

In the first of these pictures, a splendid screen production of Mr. Thomas' famous play, "As a Man Thinks," Mr. Hodkinson is offering the exhibitors of the country a production of the highest type. The succeeding pictures of this series will likewise be of exceptional quality.

The announcement of our second big line of product, to be made next week, will demonstrate with redoublea force the type of pictures the W.W. Hodkinson Corporation will from now on handle to the exclusion of all else.

Peter Milne in Motion Picture News

To book "A Midnight Romance" is to book a romantic shower bath. Its spray is warm and very light. There are none of those invigorating "needles" in it, which is a roundabout way of saying that as far as action and suspense go the picture is more or less inadequate. People who peruse with delight the moonlit passages of the novel of the day will, no doubt, revel in the romance of Marie and Roger, but even such fans will look for something more substantial than that provided in "A Midnight Romance."

As directed by Lois Weber, the picture shows a number of lavish settings, but the story offered her scant opportunity to inject those little touches and original twists for which she has gained name and fame. Miss Stewart is a delight to look upon as always, but "A Midnight Romance" is overstocked with closeups of her, and a pretty face can't make up for action shortcomings.

The story tells of Marie, a strange girl, who is given employment as maid at a seaside hotel. While partaking of a midnight swim in a one-piece bathing suit she meets Roger Sloan, millionaire. After a few delicious minutes she retreats, and remains as maid again for nearly three reels it seems. Miss Stewart's expression in this portion of the picture is just "mooning."

Jack Holt gives a likable characterization of the man, while Juanita Hansen and Montague Dumont perform well.

Wid Gunning in Wid's Daily

Oh, boy! It isn't wild meller and no one is murdered or thrown off a cliff, but unless my audience sense has gone all wrong, they're sure going to like this one.

It's got oodles of romance in which the beautiful shero in distress looks soulfully at hero, and there is a team of crooks who are tough, but they're humanly tough, not "mellerdramatically" tough. The story is not heavy, and after a while you see where it's going, but by heck, it holds you.

And oh, how good lady Lois Weber has dressed it up with attractive, interesting frills! There is some of the prettiest moonlight on the surf you ever saw, lots of it at first, and you know how your gang loves pretty water stuff.

And then, whisper, Anita runs around on the beach in a one-piece Annette Kellermann; eh what, not just one flash, but through a whole sequence, and that's how she's dressed when she meets hero the first time out there all alone on the beach. No, it's not exactly naughty; it's just nice.

The last half of the action is taken in the big Hotel Alexandria in Los Angeles, with splendid effect. Film folk can even see the billion-dollar rug where recent big deals were pulled. Hero eventually finds his dream girl is a chambermaid, and then, bingo, he learns that she is a princess, and when he gets shy because of her title, she invites him to a clutch and it's over.

The audience is advised at just the right time that Anita is a princess, and the suspense balance is very nicely maintained.

Of course, the story is slender, but it has some good twists, and the truly human treatment and distinctive atmosphere lift it very high. A bad director could have made an awful mess of this. Miss Weber has made it excellent entertainment.

Unless I don't know anything about the public, your fans are going to "just love" Miss Stewart in this, and they'll think Jack Holt is a regular hero, all right, all right. The entire cast was very well chosen, and all played without a false move.

The Results of the First Showings are as Follows:

At the Garden Theatre, Paterson, N. J., "A Midnight Romance" played to 762 more paid admissions than "Virtuous Wives" the first day and equaled its week's record

At the Madison Theatre, Detroit, "A Midnight Romance" went over as big as "Virtuous Wives"

SAMUEL L. ROTHAPFEL

SIX ROTHAPFEL PROGRAMMES
NOW IN PREPARATION

NEW YORK TIMES EDITORIAL

JANUARY 12th, 1919

Samuel L. Rothapfel's resignation as Managing Director of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres came as a surprise.....Of course Mr. Rothapfel is not the only artistic exhibitor in the world but he has certainly been a pioneer in placing exhibition on a higher and ever higher plane. New York has him, more than any other man, to thank for the presentation of motion pictures in a way attractive to persons of taste and intelligence.

Mr. Rothapfel is creative. He not only selects the best photoplays available, and the most important topical and educational films, but instead of just Showing what pictures he has, he builds programs out of his material, each of which is as harmonious a whole as he can make it. He was one of the first, if not the first, to realize the power of music and setting to enrich a motion picture entertainment, and employing his own unusual abilities, and those of the most talented artists he could engage, he has made his programs richly effective. And in building them he has not been a slave to the idea that a photoplay must always be the cornerstone. He has had a venturesome initiative to build his programs around any film that seemed to him to represent a distinctive accomplishment of the motion picture camera.

The announcement of Mr. Rothapfel's departure from the Rivoli and Rialto theatres caused a keen sense of regret until —and here is the important encouraging fact that came with second thought—it was realized first that Mr. Rothapfel had established his theatres so firmly that they could go on without him, and second that he would enter some new field of motion pictures where he would probably be able to release energy and ability that cannot find expression in the management of theatres. This means that the public will gain by his change of work. It will still have the results of Mr. Rothapfel's work in a new field.

¶ "Educational" releases have made a new meaning for the word "educational" on moving picture screens.

They have demonstrated that single-reel subjects can be made "feature" attractions, and that the exhibitor has as great, if not a better, opportunity to make a favorable impression in the choice of his single-reel productions than he has in the multiple-reel "feature" pictures.

A short subject of real merit can lift a program. It can carry the burden of an evening's entertainment, and many "Educational" releases have dominated the programs of which they were a part.

Every attraction that bears the "Educational" trade-mark has behind it the guarantee of the only large producing organization specializing in single-reel subjects.

ESSANAY-CHAPLIN REVIVAL IS SWEEPING THE COUNTRY

THE WORLD: MONDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 1919.

CHAPLIN FILM PLAYS REVIVED AT RIALTO

"A Night at the Show" Taxes Capacity of Theatre—New Bill at Rivoli.

The management of the Rialto Theatre yesterday began the revival of a series of film comedies made by Charlie Chaplin several years ago and considered not only the most popular of his films but the most typical of Chaplin's skill in comedy and pantomime. That it is a popular move was shown by the crowds who stood and waited outside the theatre. Almost any time during the afternoon and evening there was a line in front of the Rialto.

"A Night at the Show" was the Chaplin film, and the spectators seemed to enjoy it as much as when it was first produced. The rest of the programme

Go After the Votes

A LETTER from Frank Keenan appears in this issue in which Mr. Keenan calls for a non-partisan political organization of the picture art-industry to fight those who are fighting the motion pictures——

And to fight them with their own weapons.

Their weapons—are votes.

We are just waking up to this fact—a huge one, because their votes are many.

"We" means not merely we of the film industry, but broadly, we who are citizens of a country founded upon the principles of freedom.

These principles of freedom are freedom of expression, of religious worship, of education, recreation and home life—our freedom in these and in all respects being satisfactorily governed by Federal and State laws and their enforcement by the police.

* * * * *

They Have the Votes

A SELF-ADMITTED minority, plainly bigoted, inconsiderate of all interests save their own, resorting freely to downright falsehood, malicious in attack to the degree of hoodlumism, proposes through the legislatures to overturn the traditional freedom of the country and substitute their own methods of regulation.

They propose to regulate the screen, in the States and through the Federal Government.

And they have the power to do it.

It isn't the power of right; it is the power of votes.

Just votes—nothing more.

They are practical gentlemen—these gentlemen—many of them—of the cloth.

They have been organizing. They started before the war; but their organization undoubtedly has greatly flourished during the war when the minds of the majority were more occupied with the saving of country and its future.

They have collected votes in the States of the Union till, we are informed, they have a bag-full to turn loose upon Washington, to support their Federal measures, of more than four million ballots.

This is the big stick they wield: VOTES.

It has been, and is being wielded in many state legislatures.

It is wielded insistently and constantly; and its pressure, naturally, is great—particularly, because there has been little or no pressure from any other direction.

* * * * *

Reformers to Practical Politicians

TO be frank—and this is meant to be a very frank editorial—the organized reform element has said to the legislator: "We've got the votes in your district. Here's the number. Vote with us, or we'll down you next election."

And many a legislator, many a one, has in consequence voted against his own better conscience and intelligence.

That's the situation.

Mr. Keenan suggests an organization of the industry, of all its members, so as to put votes against votes.

We have, we believe, a better—at least a more immediate plan.

It is the one we have recently been calling for.

The screen is the powerful agent.

The owner of the screen means a few votes—his own and his employees; the screen talks to many voters day in and out.

Let it talk. Let us talk to the majority. Tell them what the organized minority is doing to them—to their recreation, their liberty. Command them to speak out and let their demands, the clear truth of the situation be made known to their legislative representatives. And if need be let the owners of the screen talk directly to their legislative representatives—in no uncertain language.

* * * * *

An Unbeatable Power

HERE, if the screens act together, is the power to awake the majority and make their voice heard against the strident yells of the minority. Here, and here alone, is the power that can down the organized votes of the organized minority.

All the whole situation needs is simply the clear light of truth. Against the vote intimidation of the minority we want the voice of the majority heard, the overwhelming majority of the citizens of this free country; and the screen, the organized screen, can make the voice of the people resound in legislative halls away above the jeers and hisses of the intemperate reformers.

And now—how may we have an organized screen?

Simply through exhibitor organization—state organization.

We are not appealing for the maintenance of present and past national organizations. We had best, for the present, forget them; they will come in good time. We had best forget their platforms, too, and past history.

There's a single reason now for organization, an immediate reason, big enough to lay aside all others.

It is simply—the life of the screen, the continuation in business of every exhibitor in this country.

The States must organize. There's where the immediate trouble threatens.

Editorially Speaking:

A Model to Follow

WE suggest the organization plan so successfully instituted by the New York State League, namely, of organization by Assembly and State districts. This directly meets the political power brought into being by the reformers.

We have appealed for exhibitor organization many times before. But we are appealing now on totally new grounds because we are dealing with a totally new situation.

It is right at our doors—the picture theatre doors. It aims to close these doors—Sundays, anyway, and thereafter, permanently, no doubt, through the Federal Censorship of motion pictures. It is backed by a well-organized, ever active organization, dealing in practical politics and wielding four million votes.

There isn't an industrial problem facing the producers and distributors so big and imminent as this.

We mean just this.

Without calling the roster of names we submit just as definitely to every producer and distributor this question: Is anything, any individual plan or project more important to you than the Sunday closing of theatres, plus the regulation of your business through State and Federal laws, plus the imposition of taxes so heavy as to make your business impossible?

And to those prominent exhibitors, who have held aloof from their state organization we ask: Do you want your theatre closed on Sundays, regulated on week days by fanatics and taxed to death by politicians?

If not then it's up to each one of you to help make an immediate, compact, comprehensive organization of exhibitors.

Thumbnails on the New Tax

LETTERS received from exhibitors would indicate that there is still considerable confusion over the terms of the new tax law and the date on which it supersedes the revenue act now in effect.

For that reason we are placing the salient points of the new legislation in brief form here.

First of all, the new act takes effect on April 1, 1919, and managers must begin collecting the new tax on admissions that day.

Secondly, there is no exemption in the new law for five cent theatres.

Thirdly, the amount of the tax is " one cent for each ten cents or fraction thereof of the amount paid for admission to any place . . . to be paid by the person paying for such admission."

Fourthly, the above tax must be paid by all persons admitted free except " bona fide employees, municipal officers on official business, persons in the military or naval forces of the United States when in uniform, and children under twelve years of age." Such persons are exempted from the tax only when admitted free. The amount of the tax paid on free admissions must be calculated on the basis of the admission charged others for similiar accommodations.

Fifthly, " The price (exclusive of the tax to be paid by the person paying for admission) at which the admission ticket or card is sold shall be conspicuously and indelibly printed, stamped or written on the face or back thereof," . . . . " Whoever sells an admission ticket in which the . . . . price is not so printed, stamped, or written, or at a price in excess of the price so printed, stamped or written thereon, is guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $100."

Sixthly, all manufacturers or exchanges must pay each month a tax of five per cent on the rental earnings of each film in their possession. This will probably be charged to the exhibitors on each rental.

For your convenience: The admission tax is covered in Title VIII of the revenue act, Section 800. The rental tax is covered in Title IX, Section 906.

Your bank will undoubtedly be pleased to secure for you a printed copy of the revenue act.

Let's Go!

AN organization not designed to elect officers, indulge in personal politics, hold oratorical meetings, conduct balls, banquets and expositions—let's forget the past—but——

—An organization devoting its whole energy to the one serious and practical problem now overshadowing the life and liberty of the screen; an organization able to make every screen in every State talk straight out to the people and the politicians, exposing the rotten methods of fanatical reform, carrying the issue of personal liberty straight to the public and exhorting the public to rise in their might and demand that their legislative representatives regard the rights of the majority and of decency and justice.

The time to act is now——

—Because the opposition is already in the saddle and riding hard——

—Because, otherwise, the whole industry will have little left to look back upon except the usual regret of having acted too late.

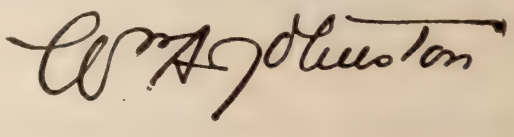
Just in Passing

THE very artistic advertisement of Paramount and Artcraft pictures—the illustration is by Pogony—in this week's issue of the Saturday Evening Post is not only a piece of advertising worthy in itself of unusual commendation but more importantly still it is due the thanks of the entire industry.

Its vivid suggestion of picture ideals and values will elevate the picture in the public eye, an accomplishment of much import to the industry at all times but particularly now when the professional reformer has leapt away over the bounds of truth and decency in his efforts to defame the picture's character and effect.

* * * * *



The Church and the Screen

AT one of the recent censorship hearings in Chicago a university professor submitted facts to the effect that in the development of the child today the home comes first, the school second, and motion pictures third. The church stands fourth.

Here then we have the simple, prima facie reason for the church's frantic opposition to the picture.

The church wants that third place. In the past the church struggled just as hard, just as unfairly for the second place and even the first.

And there are now as formerly just two main incentives for mastery. These are power and the collection plate.

Dealing in Personalities

"Kicking Up the Dust in Filmland"

WE don't know just what Bill Sherrill has up his sleeve, but we are printing his picture here just so that you can keep your eye on him.

Since Bill showed that there was still a state rights market with "Once to Every Man" he has been breaking into the news with regularity each week.

There were the Texas Guinan two-reelers, a new big special feature, and this week we read that Bill will offer the Mack Swain comedies.

And with it comes the discovery that there is now a Frohman Amusement Corporation of California.

Bill is surely kicking up the dust.

And, believe us, there are a lot of boys around Times Square who wish him all the luck in the world—and then some. Go to it, Bill.

Comes a letter to W. A. J.:

"I believe in giving credit where credit is due, and I congratulate the MOTION PICTURE NEWS for the tip they sent out on March 15 announcing my luncheon with Mr. Bennett. The luncheon with Mr. Bennett had nothing to do with the International-Famous Players- Lasky combination, but I was afraid you might announce the luncheon which took place a few weeks before with Mr. Zukor, so after your kindness in tipping off my secret I cut the story loose.—C. F. ZITTEL."

Which settles all and leaves room for just one hint:

Watch for the tons upon tons of publicity that "ZIT" splashes about the time that the first COSMOPOLITAN production is ready.

That's considerable news story comes from Arizona this week, telling of the passage of a law requiring all film companies to place bonds with the State for the amount of advance deposits made by exhibitors. Not so important, perhaps, if we just consider Arizona. But what if a few exhibitors in each State set out to do the same thing? Good night—Maria! Looks as though Arizona will get a solid place on the film map. The story is on page 1941.

From that news-hound Carl Jessen comes the information that INCE will send DOROTHY DALTON and a company East soon to stage three productions.

Also the word that Metro has engaged CHARLES SWICKARD to direct.

And Goldwyn has engaged the well known playwright THOMAS BUCHANAN. Looks like a ten strike.

News from the Coast this week also chronicled the death of two players. CONSTANCE CRAWLEY, well known Shakespearian actress, who has also been seen in pictures and written photoplays, passed away March 16. HARRY LYONS, screen name NOLAN, and a brother of EDDIE LYONS, died Wednesday.

William A. Johnston was a visitor to Washington this week. While there he thought he would call and see Harry Crandall and Tom Moore. He called—but Crandall was in New York and Moore was swinging a golf club at Pinehurst. W. A. J. came back with fulsome praise for the new Moore theatre and Crandall's Metropolitan. Also for "The Turn of the Road," which he saw at Moore's house.

Looks as though the BRENTWOOD FILM CORPORATION hit the bell with the first shot in "The Turn in the Road."

And speaking of good motion pictures, we are ready to slip you the tip on the THOMAS INCE production "SAHARA," starring LOUISE GLAUM. Hear that it will have a different title when released.

The noise of hustling activity comes from the ROTHAPFEL studios. We learn that SAMUEL L. has picturized "The Elegie" by Masseunet, with a musical accompaniment that is a paraphrase of "The Elegie."

OTTO HENRY HARRAS, advertising manager of Variety for eight years, leaves on March 28 to become associated with another New York publication—name as yet shrouded in mystery.

Harry Maze Jenks, of Harma Photoplays, London, has arrived in town and is stopping at the Astor. Mr. Jenks brings with him a number of negatives and is ready to talk business with those who mean business. Not the least important of his subjects is a film produced in connection with the coming Mayflower Centenary, fostered by the Duke of Connaught, and in which President Wilson and Lloyd George have evinced an interest.

Don't call on Mr. Jenks expecting to find him "ve-ry Hinglish." He was born in Brooklyn and married a daughter of fair Virginia.

Considerable activity around the ABRAMS-SCHULBERG offices these days. Conferences, conferences, and more conferences. Big announcements soon.

HARRY RAPF is at Lakewood recovering from his recent attack of pneumonia.

One of the most important news events of the week is the resignation of Frank Tichenor from General Film. Only those who know the weight of the task appreciate the wonders that "Tich" has performed for G. F. We once called him "the miracle man"—and it still goes. We are here to place a tip now that "Tich" will bear watching in the next few months.

BILL RUDOLPH was the proudest man in seven states on Monday. Strolled about the Astor introducing his son, just returned with the 27th Division.

What with a hero son returning and the sensational success of "THE UNPARDONABLE SIN"—Bill certainly has reason to be happy.

FRED BEECROFT'S son, Harold, was in the same outfit with Rudolph, Junior.

What with a hero son returning and the sensational advertising records of MOTION PICTURE NEWS—Fred certainly has reason to be happy.

We met CAPTAIN WILLIAM HARRIGAN, of the 77th Division, last week and agree with EDDIE MACMANUS that the son of Ned Harrigan, of Harrigan and Hart, should make a great picture bet when his lecture engagements are concluded.

The Captain is an actor; he is there with personality and looks. And success is in the blood.

"He Is To Return in August"

TIM COOP, of Progress Films, Manchester, England, sailed for home on Wednesday.

Leaving behind him quite a number of film men who will tell you that Tim is a "regular fellow."

And taking with him a budget of information that may have considerable bearing on future plans of some of the British producers in this market.

Tim talked little and listened a lot. But the views he did express convinced Yours Truly that a real film man is a real film man whether he is doing business in New York or Liverpool.

So we'll be more than glad to say "Welcome" to Tim Coop when he returns for another visit in August.

Keenan Writes on Organization

FRANK KEENAN, acknowledged one of the broadest minded and active individuals in the motion picture industry, has written "Motion Picture News" regarding an editorial published in a recent issue. The letter, which follows, should prove of interest to every man, woman and child in any way connected with or interested in the motion picture business.

Read it, and then think it over:

Dear Mr. Johnston:

The leading editorial, "Organize from the Bottom Up," in Motion Picture News for March 8, is a stirring battle cry. It interests me, and, doubtless, interests many of your readers.

As suggested in your article, there is but one way to break the enemies of free government—the intelligent use of the ballot.

May I say that within the last year I personally brought to the attention of several of the most prominent manufacturers and producers the idea of a strong non-partisan political organization.

Here, briefly, is what I suggested:

Let us start in Los Angeles, the acknowledged film capital of the world, an organization with reliable men as sponsors, to cope with adverse legislation and the many needless restrictions that are forced upon this industry from time to time by so-called regulators.

The men and women directly connected or identified with photoplay making, I pointed out, hold the balance in a political way and with their cooperation in the right kind of an organization we could place ourselves in position to fight inimical legislation and hold our own.

Whether the men to whom I brought this matter really grasped the idea I am not in position to say. At any rate, nothing came of it.

It is my humble opinion that manufacturers and producers themselves are largely responsible for existing chaotic conditions. I am not trying to fix the blame on any particular individual or on a group of persons; but it is a matter of fact that narrowness and petty jealousies, coupled with an insatiable hunger for self-exploitation on the part of some supposedly high in the art industry, are blameable for the present unpreparedness on the West Coast.

I believe that if the men approached had given their cooperation and assistance in the matter of creating an organization at the time the idea was first broached, the fighting strength of motion picture interests today would be the dominating political factor on this coast. However, it is not yet too late to interest men and women of broad and fine vision in this important work.

My suggestion now as then is to register every man and woman of voting age, who is in any way connected with the motion picture industry, and, through those in position of authority, pledge them to assist in carrying a campaign direct to the people.

In this way, with the cooperation of manufacturers, producers, distributors and exhibitors, we could conduct an effective educational campaign by presenting propaganda on the screen, arousing the people to vote for themselves and for the protection of their entertainment, and thus defeat those who are doing the utmost to fasten their narrow, bigoted and autocratic Puritanical ideas on a free people.

The situation in Southern California today is this:

The self-styled regulators, legislators and others unfriendly to the photoplay business and the interests of the theatre-going public are thoroughly organized politically; on the other hand, those who have invested millions of dollars in plants and equipments and who provide remunerative employment for many thousands and the means of wholesome entertainment for the millions are not organized in a political way.

In the past the laws governing the motion picture industry have been made by the minority. Isn't it high time, Mr. Johnston, for the majority to arise and direct their representatives in the halls of legislation, as well as those who aspire to public office, to do what they desire and require of their servants.

Efficient organization politically and an effective educational campaign mean victory, not alone on the West Coast, but all over liberty-loving America.

Yours respectfully,
(Signed) FRANK KEENAN.

Fox Sends Two Men to Mexico

E. J. Neubeler and T. Colon to Open Offices in Mexico City for Distribution of Fox Productions —Other Offices

FOLLOWING closely the departure of William Fox, Winfield R. Sheehan and Abraham Carlos for Europe, where they will estabilsh producing centers and enlarge the Fox production system, the Fox Film Corporation this week gave another indication of the growth of that organization when it announced that William Fox had sent E. J. Neubeler and T. Colon to Mexico City for the purpose of extending the Fox distributing organization throughout Mexico. The mission of Messrs. Neubeler and Colon, it is understood, followed the receipt of information that conditions in the republic to the south had become more settled and that the people were demanding more high-grade motion pictures.

Messrs. Neubeler and Colon will make their headquarters in Mexico City. There they will open a Fox branch office and then will make a tour of the principal cities, setting up other branch offices or providing for agencies for the distribution of Fox films.

For the last few years the unsettled state of Mexico affairs has been a serious obstacle to the shipping of American films to that country. This difficulty was vastly increased when the United States entered the war and placed the exportation of films to Mexico under the stricted supervision. In fact, no American film entered Mexico—that is, through legal channels.

Last summer, however, under the direction of the division of films of the Committee on Public Information, a number of American pictures were taken into Mexico by Abraham Carlos, general representative of the Fox Film Corporation. A large proportion of the consignment were Fox Film; and so great was the enthuiasm shown by the Mexicans over these pictures that it was apparent the time had arrived for big development of Mexico as a field for American motion pictures.

The proposed establishment of branch offices in Mexico adds one more to the list of Latin-American lands in which Fox pictures are being shown with great success. It was recently announced that the foreign department of the Fox Film Corporation had completed negotiations for the establishment of an agency in Venezuela, thus giving the Fox organization representation in every country in South America. The Fox Film Corporation, it is stated, is the only American film company with an agency in Venezuela.

Swift Denials of Nebraska Censorship Charge

Adolph Zukor and W. D. McGuire were quick to meet the charge recently made by the Nebraska Women's Club in the Omaha World-Herald that the National Board of Review was under the control of the producers of motion pictures.

Mr. Zukor wired a vigorous denial to the World-Herald with the request that it be given equal prominence with the original false statement, while the executive secretary of the National Board telegraphed the following statement:

March 13, 1919.

World-Herald,
Omaha- Neb.

Am advised that Nebraska Federated Women's Club charges that National Board of Review does not constitute legalized censorship and is controlled by moving picture producers themselves. National Board opposed to legalized censorship because Constitution of United States guarantees right of free speech and free press. America is fundamentally opposed to autocrat bureaucratic censorship idea. National Board is a co-operative organization working with municipal authorities. Producers voluntarily submit films to Board recognizing that sound business policy dictates necessity of securing public approval and establishing public confidence in their business. No attempt has ever been made to dictate to or control the Board. No one connected with National Board is in any way connected with motion picture industry financially or otherwise. Board could no more be controlled than could Nebraska Federated Clubs, as majority of members of Review Committee are clubwomen residing in vicinity of New York. National Board challenges anyone to prove that any picture passed by it and submitted to the wholesome-minded American public would be voted objectionable. Board recognizes that it cannot meet the varied views of everyone. Disagreements with its judgments are inevitable, but the constant improvement in the character of motion pictures during the past ten years constitutes incontrovertible evidence of the sincerity of the National Board and the attendance at motion picture theatres testifies to the wholesome character of entertainment offered. The issue is clearly defined. Are the people of Nebraska capable of safeguarding the moral character of the entertainments offered by declining to patronize an unwholesome entertainment or do they need a Board of Censorship to pass upon the moral, educational and propaganda character of the pictures they shall be permitted to witness. Would not any exhibitor in Nebraska who attempted to show an immoral picture be driven out of business through lack of public support, the people themselves refusing to tolerate the exhibition of an immoral picture.

National Board of Review,
W. D. McGuire,
Executive Secretary.

Winnipeg House Tries New Policy

The Strand Theatre, Winnipeg, Man., adopted a new policy starting Monday, March 17. The change included an arrangement for the splitting of the week with two entirely different shows, new bills being presented on Mondays and Thursdays. In the past the Strand has been presenting most of its attractions all week, changing some of the pictures on a programme twice during the week. Under the new plan, the whole bill will be changed on Thursdays.

Did He Care?

It was announced from Cleveland this week that James Surrell, manager of the Orpheum theatre, Cleveland was arrested last week, for blocking traffic on East Ninth street. The blocking was caused by the crowds which gathered in front of the theatre waiting to see "The Heart of Humanity."

Censors Bring Down Exhibitor Wrath

Censorship in All Shapes and Forms Popping Up in All States of Union—Nebraska Is Lone State to Get Censor Measure Killed

NEARLY every State in the Union is facing a censorship bugaboo of some sort, according to advices received from various sections. The censors have apparently thought up many new wrinkles never before attempted, which the exhibitors declare would be discriminatory if put into effect. The wrath of the exhibitors is growing apace with the results of new censorship schemes.

From Milwaukee it is reported that a proposed censorship would let charitable, religious, fraternal organizations or public schools exhibit film that has not been censored, but that the theatres should be dictated to in the matter of pictures shown to the public. This bill also provides that the posters, slides, lobby display and photographs be censored.

Nebraska Scores Victory

A wire to MOTION PICTURE NEWS announces: "The Nebraska bill which proposed censorship of pictures has been indefinitely postponed, which means the killing of the measure."

That films exhibited by charitable, religious and fraternal organizations, or public schools, libraries and similar institutions do not need to be censored but that every means should be taken to dictate to theaters showing photoplays is the gist of one of the most drastic censorship bills yet proposed, which was introduced in the Wisconsin state assembly by Assemblyman George Oakes, of St. Croix, Wis.

The bill provides that every slide, film, poster, photograph or lobby display must be passed upon by a board of three censors in the state capital at Madison, Wis. Any of the above mentioned organizations or institutions may exhibit identical films without any application of the law, according to one of its sections.

The Oakes bill, which is said to be fostered by several Milwaukee women's organizations of the "meddling" type, gives the governor of Wisconsin the power to select a board of three.

A meeting of Wisconsin exhibitors and those interested in the film business was called by the Milwaukee Theater Managers' Association in the Maryland Hotel, Milwaukee, March 13. About 60 persons, many of them from towns other than Milwaukee, were present.

Attorney Gustave Gehrz, prominent in film litigation, attended and analyzed the proposed bill.

George Fischer, manager of the Alhambra theater and secretary of the Theatre Managers' Association, read the bill to the meeting and stated that it would mean the Wisconsin theaters would have to close.

Madison Plans Campaign

Every manager in Madison, Wis., is outraged with the new censorship bill before the legislature. Exhibitors through the state are planning a state-wide campaign to fight it. A meeting was held in Milwaukee Thursday with representatives from the Exhibitors' Association, Theater Men's Association, and from the film exchanges. The object of this meeting was to appoint a committee and a definite plan of campaign.

The managers feel that the bill is vicious and should it be put into immediate effect it would close every theater in the state for an indefinite period of time.

The bill provides for the appointment of a committee for censoring all pictures and for the building of a projection room in the capitol. The bill reads that "if passed it shall go into immediate effect"—which would mean the closing of every theater until the committee could review the pictures.

On the method proposed it would take two machines working 10 hours each day to review enough pictures for the city of Madison and another correspondingly large city. Other states, as Pennsylvania and Illinois, have passed censorship bills, but none as drastic as this.

In short, the bill tends to create a committee composed of three residents and citizens of Wisconsin "well qualified by education and experience to act as censors under this act."

Another bill is before the legislature giving the board of health the authority to close the theaters and churches in case of an epidemic, but there is no restraint on stores, dance halls, etc. At the present time the theaters are allowed to fill their houses to only one-half capacity to prevent the spread of influenza, which has broken out anew.

FOR CHILDREN

Quebec Will Label Film Suitable for Children

THE labelling of all motion pictures which are considered particularly suitable for children will be the duty of the Quebec Board of Censors as a result of a measure fathered by Hon. Walter Mitchell, Provincial Secretary of the Province.

Another clause of the new law raises the age limit for children attending motion picture theatres unattended from fifteen to sixteen years when pictures other than those for children are on the bill.

Considerable leeway is promised in the selection of subjects for the children.

Secretary Mitchell explained that it was recognized that there was much of an educational nature for children at the motion picture theatres.

Mattack Defies Censors

The interference of a local board of censors means nothing in the life of W. A. Mattack, manager of the Princess theater of Ames, Ia. Mr. Mattack things his judgment concerning the moral danger that lies in a picture is just as good as that of any collection of censors. Moreover, he has the courage of his convictions—as he has just proved by showing the Theda Bara super-production "Salome" to crowded houses.

Last summer the Mayor and Council of Ames appointed a board of censors. The board included Mayor Graves, Mrs. A. B. Maxwell, Mrs. George Hultz, George Judisch and Seaman Knapp, declared to be representative citizens of the town. This board has supervision of all films shown.

When Manager Mattack booked "Salome" recently he immediately began to advertise the fact. Several well-meaning residents of Ames, knowing Salome only by the reputation she had made as the heroine of an opera and a stage play, at once sprang to arms and petitioned the board of censors to forbid the film in Ames.

Saw Picture Personally

But when Mattack booked the picture he did so only after having seen it himself; so he knew there was absolutely nothing objectionable in the picture and that the people who were protesting against "Salome" did not know what they were talking about. The board of censors, however, hearkening to the protests of the timid citizens, adopted a resolution recommending that the Mayor and Council forbid showing the film.

The resolution precipitated intense public discussion. This became so heated that some of Mr. Mattack's friends urged him to submit to the board and cancel his engagement. Mr. Mattack, however, knowing there was nothing wrong with the picture and that he was justified in going ahead, simply went ahead. Every day for five days before the showing he carried a two-column advertisement announcing that "Salome" was to be shown at the Princess.

Besides this, he notified the Mayor that "Salome" was to be shown, and defied him to stop it. Then he invited the censor board to look at the picture. This the board did. The result was just what Mattack had expected—complete vindication of "Salome."

Passed by Ohio Board

"Satan on Earth," Gaumont picture, has been passed by the Ohio Censor Board. The picture is being relesaed in the State by J. Stearn, 321 Sloan building, Cleveland.

New Censorship Bill Hits Ohio

Exchanges May Get to Pay Fifty Cents Each for Slides Censored —Posters Would Also Come in for the Once-Over

CLEVELAND exchange managers were called to a hurry-up meeting of the Board of Motion Picture Exchange Managers of the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce recently to take action against a bill recently introduced into the state legislature by Senator Beebe of the seventeenth and eighteenth districts, calling for a new censorship bill for the motion picture industry.

The bill, as introduced, calls for a new censorship board in addition to the one now in force for the purpose of censoring slides and lithographs. For this special service, motion picture exchanges are to have the privilege of paying 50c. for each slide censored, and 25c apiece for the posters.

Exchange managers in the city went up in the air when the contents of this bill became known, and they are going to take definite and immediate action to stop its passage, if possible. Although the tax was primarily directed against the producer, it will hit the exhibitor hardest, because according to the laws of economics, all taxes are passed on to the consumer. Of course, the ultimate result of the adoption of such a measure will mean increased admission prices to the movies. This, the Cleveland exhibitors have fought strenuously against in the case of other taxes. And now, when wages are falling, and situations are not as plentiful as they were, it would be suicidal to their business to boost prices, no matter how good the reason for doing so may be.

Vice-Chairman E. J. Smith, manager of the Cleveland Universal Exchange, proposed that a member of the Board of Exchange managers be selected to go to Columbus, and lobby against the bill. This matter was discussed but will not be definitely settled, until further discussion has taken place at another meeting to be held this week.

The proposed censorship is considered about the most unjust of the long series of taxations to which the motion picture industry, in its various branches, has been subjected. Not only unfair, but it is a potent cog in the progress of the industry, and will work injury to everyone connected with it, is the assertion. Besides which, it is considered unnecessary, and it is thought that a clear statement of the facts of the case, if presented to every legislator by letter or wire, will bring them over to the side of the motion picture industry, and against the clearly unfair and biased bill.

There seems to be a veritable epidemic of censorship bills. In Cleveland, the City Council is trying to pass a local censorship bill. The idea is not to substitute local censorship for state censorship, but to re-censor the films that the state censors have passed upon.

Twenty-eight Cleveland exchange were represented at the meeting of exchange managers held last Saturday. They are all taking an active part in the campaign, and expect to have a program for procedure mapped out by the end of the week.

Montreal Operators Form Union

Charter Opened and Eighty-four Members Added to List—E. Andrews Appointed Business Agent—Other Officers Elected

IT was announced from Toronto this week that motion picture projection machine operators of Montreal have become active along organized labor lines during the past few weeks. A charter for a Montreal local has been opened and eighty-four members have been added to the list of membership. Mr. E. Andrews, formerly president of the Ottawa local, has been appointed permanent business agent and he is already busily engaged in filling available positions with union men, it has been announced. Offices have been opened in the Orpheum Theatre Building.

The new local sent a representative down to Quebec City, the Capital of the Province, to protest against the consideration of a proposed measure which would have had the effect of prohibiting the admission of any children to moving picture theatres in the Province. The local pointed out that many of the smaller theatres depended largely upon the patronage of children for subsistence and if children were kept out of the shows, many theatres would close and a considerable number of labor men would be thrown out of employment. The bill was killed.

The officers of the Montreal Local have been elected as follows:—

President—C. J. Davidson, Princess Theatre.

Vice President—W. Gregory, His Majesty's Theatre.

Recording Secretary—Blake Hayes, Holman Theatre.

Financial Secretary — A. Delauriers, Strand.

Treasurer—J. Fassio, Rex Theatre.

Business Agent—E. A. Andrews, Orpheum Theatre.

Guardian—George Barry, Regent.

Executive—A. J. Reddy, Allen Theatre; W. Hodges, Imperial Theatre; P. Saucier, Royal Alexandria.

Examining Board—A. J. Reddy, L. E. Mathieu, Canadian Theatre; Romeo Vandette, Imperial Theatre.

Amend Manitoba Bill

The Manitoba Legislature, at its session on March 11, received a bill to amend the Amusements Taxation Act which has for its purposes the abolition of the theatre seat tax, thereby depriving the Province of from $12,000 to $15,000 annually. The bill was given its second reading.

Star Is Injured While Filming Serial

When some exterior scenes were being filmed in Chattanooga, Tenn., last week for "The Great Gamble," a forthcoming release on the Pathe schedule, Charles Hutchison, starring with Anne Luther in this Western Photoplay production, was badly injured.

In the course of the serial each of the fifteen episodes calls for a smashing climax.

Mr. Hutchison was galloping down a steep cliff when the accident occurred. The horse upon which he was riding lost his footing. Unable to get control of the animal, Hutchison was dashed headlong against a rock and was knocked unconscious. A physician announced slight internal injuries which a few days' complete rest would see well on the road to recovery.

As Hutchison appeared in all the remaining scenes, Director Joseph A. Golden was obliged to shut up shop entirely for the rest of the week and the remainder of the players were given a holiday.

Mr. Golden has wired A. Alperstein of the home office that the enforced delay means a slight change in their schedule. According to present plans, the company goes to Miami this week, where they will remain for ten days before proceeding northward.

Friedman of Minneapolis Gets Garson Feature

"The Unpardonable Sin" has been sold for Iowa, Wisconsin, Minnesota, South Dakota and North Dakota to Friedman Film Corporation of Minneapolis, it was announced this week.

Harry Garson reports that Benjamin Friedman journeyed all the way to Detroit to look at the Blanche Sweet production and immediately secured it at what is declared to be the biggest price ever paid for a big film production in that territory.

Pictures on Sunday Enlist Many Backers

Buffalo Newspaper Says Opposition to Sunday Pictures Should Be Buried as Anachronistic Bigotry—American Recreation League Makes Its Stand Alone

THE movement for motion picture shows on Sunday is gaining momentum with each day, according to the reports received from various sections of the country, and if measures are put through to block them it appears as though the framers of these bills will have to put up a stiff fight.

In New York State, especially, the fight for Sunday performances has reached a seething point. The newspapers have taken up the cudgel in behalf of Sabbath shows, and are devoting vital editorials to the subject.

The Chamber of Commerce of Buffalo has gone on record for local option on the question, and the American Recreation League, with headquarters in Washington, has entered the battle alone.

Exhibitors on the Job

The fight for Sunday picture shows in New York state took on an added interest in Albany this week when the American Recreation League, with headquarters in Washington, entered actively in the battle. This organization which has been making a nation wide fight for Sunday movies, but only as an incident in a comprehensive campaign for clean and wholesome amusements and recreations, is not working with or for either the producers or exhibitors, but is making the fight alone.

R. K. Fuller, who was formerly legislative correspondent of the New York Herald, and who has a wide acquaintance throughout the state, is in charge of the work for the League.

Two Sunday opening bills have been introduced through the efforts of New York exhibitors, and both recognize the principle of home rule for localities. Either bill will prevent the continuous appeal to the courts, and will make legal without any question of doubt, the opening of the theatres in the cities of the state which now have Sunday movies. With one Appellate Division deciding that Sunday movies are legal, and another one that they are illegal, no one could predict what the Court of Appeals would do. An adverse decision would close every moving picture theatre now open Sundays, but either bill before the Legislature would take the matter from the courts.

Big Numbers Aid

Buffalo wants motion picture shows on the Sabbath and wants them badly. Two hundred and fifty thousand persons and over have to date told Buffalo representatives in Albany that Sunday movies must be legalized. That number of petitions are in the hands of the Buffalo Exhibitors' association and are now being divided up into districts so that each assemblyman may know just what he is up against when he votes in the negative on the question.

Every exhibitor in town is working hard to work up public sentiment in favor of the Sunday films. Harold B. Franklin, who is vice-chairman of the state publicity committee, J. H. Michael of the Academy and Regent, Earl L. Crabb of the Strand, Ira M. Mosher of the Palace, Joseph Schuchert of various theatrical enterprises and others are among the leaders in the work here. Through the efforts of these men, every newspaper in Buffalo has been lined up behind the cause and every paper now has voiced editorial sentiments in favor of Sunday movies.

Perhaps one of the best editorials is that which the Buffalo COURIER, with a circulation close to 100,000, published Sunday, March 16. The COURIER is owned by William J. Conners and is one of the most influential in the state. The COURIER says that "Opposition to Sunday Movies should be buried as anachronistic bigotry," and goes on to say:

"Any poll, taken on any street car, in any department store or on any busy street corner would show that three-fourths of the people questioned would approve of Sunday moving picture shows.

"Practically all the people, the every day, decent people of the community are for them. No form of quiet, reputable Sunday amusement, adaptable to the needs and means of all classes, exists today.

"Compared to the silent, decorous audience at a Sunday moving picture entertainment, the Sunday picnics in the parks, the crowds on the excursion steamers and at the beaches are boisterous and noisy.

"It is just that the movies share in the old puritanical prejudice that linked 'the saloon, the theatre, cards, dice and dancing' as the 'chosen instruments of the devil' that they are being opposed now.

"Because a lot of accepted Sunday amusements of today were unknown in Puritan times they have escaped anathema. Because the theatre of Shakespeare's day was patronized by gallants of the times the Puritans tabooed it.

"OBJECTIONS TO SUNDAY MOVIES IS AN INHERITANCE OF AN OLD PREJUDICE. AS A MATTER OF FACT THEY ARE ONE OF THE QUIETEST AND BEST SUNDAY AMUSEMENTS THAT MODERN INVENTION AND MODERN ART HAVE MADE POSSIBLE. OPPOSITION TO THEM SHOULD BE BURIED AS ANACHRONISTIC BIGOTRY."

This is the sentiment of all the Buffalo papers.

Representing the Buffalo exhibitors in their fight for Sunday shows is Roscoe R. Mitchell, an ardent Red Cross worker, who has done his bit in France and who told the legislators in Albany recently, that it was the movies that helped win the war and that when the boys come home they will demand their movies on the seventh day of the week the same as they will on the other six.

Many Trailers Used

Every theatre in Buffalo is throwing trailers on the screen boosting the Sunday movement and booths in the lobbies contain the petitions that are signed by patrons.

One thing is certain, no city in the state is a more ardent supporter of Sunday motion pictures than Buffalo. One of the best proofs of this is the capacity and overflow audiences that every Sabbath attend almost all the downtown and neighborhood houses. Without the films Sunday there would be an aching void that would indeed be hard to fill, in spite of what the so-called reformers say. One thing Buffalo is thankful for and that is that there are few "reformers" here.

The Chamber of Commerce of Buffalo has gone on record for local option on Sunday motion pictures. The board of directors in their monthly report has approved the passage of the bill allowing communities to decide whether they want "movies" on the Sabbath or not.

The application of the Buffalo Film Exchange managers' association for affiliation with the chamber has also been granted. The managers have organized to protect their interests and co-operate on rules for the distribution of films in this territory.

Harold B. Franklin, Joseph Schuchert, and J. H. Michael attended the hearing on the Sunday film bill in Albany as the delegation from Buffalo.

HAVE YOU?

Don't Forget to Make Your Reservation

THE April meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, to be held in Philadelphia, is approaching.

In fact, it is nearly here. The dates are April 14, 15 and 16.

The headquarters of the Society during the meeting, which is expected to be largely attended, will be at the Hotel Adelphia, Chestnut and Thirteenth Street.

It was requested this week that all those who wish to attend the convention make their reservations at the Adelphia, for, as the headquarters of the Society, the management will be in a position to extend courtesies to the members which will not be able to be had elsewhere. It will also give the members an opportunity of getting together and discussing the various questions which come up between the formal meetings of the Society.

Don't forget!

Wilbur Heads Manitoba Association

A. M. Wilbur, manager of the Vitagraph exchange at Winnipeg, was elected president of the Manitoba Association of Film Exchange Managers at the annual meeting of the association on Monday, March 10. J. A. Wilson, manager of the local Universal office, was selected for the office of vice-president, and W. S. Jones, representing the First National Exhibitors' Circuit at Winnipeg, was re-elected to the post of secretary-treasurer.

Calls Attention to Film Shipping Rules

Assistant Chief Inspector Topping, of the Bureau of Explosives, has filed a complaint with the Transportation Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry to the effect that it is the practice of exhibitors to forward film packages with the same label as applied by the exchange where the shipment originated. This is a distinct violation of the rules and as such should be corrected at once.

In a circular letter issued last July dealing with this subject the Bureau of Explosives said:

"Reports from the inspectors of the bureau show violations of the regulations on the part of the customers of distributing companies in making return shipment or reshipment of moving picture films.

"The packages go to the customers from the distributing companies generally with the proper label bearing the shipper's certificate and the written, printed or stamped name of the distributing company.

"When these packages are returned or shipped to some other point it constitutes a new shipment and paragraphs 60 and 62 of the regulations provide that a proper label bearing the shipper's name underneath the certificate shall be used.

"It has been the practice of many customers to offer these shipments without providing new labels and a suggestion has been received that if the distributing companies would furnish their customers with labels with the space for the shipper's name left blank these blank labels could be used by the customer in making his shipments.

"All that it would be necessary for him to do would be to stamp or write his name in the space provided and affix the label to the outside package. All old labels including all old addresses should be removed before new labels and new addresses are affixed."

Exhibitors of Buffalo Get Music Jolt

Buffalo, N. Y. (Special to Motion Picture News)—Local exhibitors got a jolt this week when Henry Price, local chairman of the Four Minute Men and representative in Western New York for the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, notified them that unless they immediately paid the tax due the society, they would be prosecuted in Federal court. Under a recent decision of the U. S. Supreme Court, the society is given the power to impose a tax upon all amusement enterprises in which copyrighted music is played for the entertainment of audience. The tax is assessed in proportion to the seating capacity of the theatre. For a house with 300 seats or less, there is an annual tax of $30, and this levy increases to $160 a year for theatres seating 2,100 or more. Mr. Price said that of the almost 100 motion picture houses in the city, very few have paid the tax. A rush to settle up immediately set in.

Lavoie in Montreal as House Manager

Manager Lavoie, the manager of the Theatre National, Ottawa, Ontario, left for Montreal on March 14, where he is to become the manager of a large moving picture house, it is intimated. Lavoie applied a number of practical ideas in his management of the National and brought the business up at a high rate of speed. He placed his principal reliance upon attractive advertising, good orchestral music and the selection of good pictures.

Pathe Home Office Remembers Brunet

Practically the entire home office force of Pathe Exchange, Inc., descended upon their Vice-President and General Manager, Paul Brunet, March 7, and before Mr. Brunet could find breath to ask if there was a general strike on, they had placed on his desk a handsome Tiffany silver cigar and cigaret humidor, and Louis Landry, assistant general manager, in a few words expressed for the office force their appreciation of the year of splendid leadership which Mr. Brunet has given them.

The occasion was Mr. Brunet's first anniversary as the directing genius of Pathe Exchange, Inc., and every one of those present wanted the Man who sits in the Big Office to know how he felt about the success which has attended Pathe under his direction.

Mr. Brunet responded cordially thanking the men and expressing to them his appreciation of their loyal co-operation. which, he said, had been largely instrumental in bringing about the tremendously successful year which Pathe has enjoyed.

No Film Carried in Passenger Coaches

Complaints have been received by the Transportation Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry from several of the railroads, that messengers in the employ of exhibitors, have been making a practice of carrying motion picture film into the coaches of passenger trains.

This is in direct opposition to the rules of the railroad companies and the Interstate Commerce Commission which state that film must be checked in the baggage car.

Review Board Chooses Martin as Head

Everett Dean Martin, director of the Cooper Union forums, conducted under the auspices of the People's Institute of New York, has been elected chairman of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures.

In an announcement sent out by the Board of Review, Mr. Martin was quoted as saying that no one should undertake to dictate to people what kind of pictures they should see unless the person doing the dictating has genuine appreciation of art values and a sense of the possibilities of the motion picture as a form of popular art.

Advertisers Dine Guenther and Members

Lambert Guenther, poster artist, and Capt. Towle, of Canada, were guests of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., at their weekly luncheon last week in New York. Nearly forty members were present. Mr. Guenther spoke on the poster art as applied to the advertising of motion pictures, giving many suggestions as to color and treatment of subjects.

Northern California Theatre Owners Organize

San Francisco, Cal. (Special to Motion Picture News).—Four of the best known motion picture theatre managers of Northern California have formed an association which they have named the United Theatre Owners of Northern California, and opened offices at 109 Golden Gate avenue, which is being equipped with suitable furniture for the transaction of business, and in connection will be a projecting room where the theatremen may view new productions with the view of booking.

The four organizers are Managers Midgely, American theatre, Oakland; Battey, Liberty, San Jose; Greenfield, Fillmore and Mission, San Francisco; and Goddard, of the Goddard theatre, Sacramento. All theatre owners of Northern California will be invited to become members of this organization, the purpose of which is for better co-operation between the exhibitors in the matter of booking and advertising pictures.

The theatremen do not plan that the association shall in any way effect rental prices, but it is very probable that ultimately the officers selected for the association will serve as booking agents for all theatres whose owners are members.

Fairbanks Completes Propaganda Film

Douglas Fairbanks has completed his propaganda film, "Knocking Knockers," specially produced at the request of Secretary Tumulty and Frank R. Wilson, director of Publicity, Treasury Department, to be used in the advance campaign for the Fifth Victory Loan.

The Fairbanks Victory Loan film is now enroute to the Treasury Department, National Capital, where it will be shown to Secretary of the Treasury Glass and members of his department in charge of exploitation work, connected with the next Government Bond Drive. A schedule of distribution is now being perfected by Director of Publicity Frank R. Wilson.

The various parts in this allegorical picture are played by Frank Campeau, Sara Mason, Charles Stevens, Spike Robinson, Bull Montana and W. A. Wellman, the American ace, under the stage direction of Ted Reed.

Tichenor Out of General

Announcement was made last week by Frank A. Tichenor that he had resigned from the post of president and general manager of the General Film Company, pioneer distributor of films. Mr. Tichenor had the executive offices in the organization for seventeen months and the results he has achieved have been highly praised.

The official statement says: "Mr. Tichenor was elected by the directors to manage this pioneer distributing company, and continued to do so, he states, long after his own business affairs suffered from his lack of time to give them. Mr. Tichenor, from now on, will devote himself entirely to the business which he conducted before going with General Film Company."

Mr. Tichenor's offices are now in the Commercial Trust Company.

Arizona May Become Filmless Desert

Legislation Passed and Fathered by Three Western Exhibitors Promises to Have Far Reaching Effect—Governor May Veto Measure

SOMETHING has been started by three exhibitors out in Arizona that may re-act as a boomerang and leave every exhibitor in that State with an empty theatre because of a dearth of motion picture films, according to reports.

No oasis has been provided for the amusement hungry public, and the measure just adopted by the Legislators of Arizona contains such drastic measures directed at producers and distributors that most of them propose to keep their films out of the State entirely.

It is stated that three Arizona exhibitors who had grievances against some of the distributing companies catering to that territory, determined to cause them a little trouble and show the producers "Who's Who" in Arizona.

And a bill has been passed, which the Governor may or may not veto, which makes it practically impossible for any distributing concern to distribute film in that State.

What Bill Demands

A few of the many handicaps that a daring distributor would have to face in order to save the exhibitors of Arizona, have been cited.

The bill provides that all film companies doing business in that state must register with the Corporation Commissioner at the Companies' expense.

An annual financial statement must be made to the Commissioner and each company must also stand the additional expense of maintaining a resident representative registered in Arizona, paying a fifty dollar annual tax.

Any company distributing in that state, and registered as provided by the new law, may be sued in any court in Arizona.

These are all considered merely little anti-climaxes that may create only a temporary ripple. The worst is yet to come according to some of the latter clauses in the bill adopted.

Each company distributing film in the state must deposit with the State Treasurer of Arizona an amount equivalent to the total of advance deposits made by exhibitors of that state.

Minimum $5,000

The minimum amount that each distributing company must have on deposit with the State Treasurer for being permitted to cater to the exhibitors of Arizona, is Five Thousand Dollars.

And here is another provision that is inserted and which distributors say will absolutely wipe Arizona off the film map: Each distributor must file with the Secretary of State within five days from date, a copy of every rental contract made in Arizona.

The maximum fine specified for failure in observance is set at five thousand dollars with an additional penalty of rescinding license for one year if a judgment of any court is not paid within ninety days.

Twenty-three sections are contained in the bill in its entirety and every section is said to provide so many requirements for film companies to observe that the distributors mainly consider the situation laughable if it did not put the exhibitors of Arizona in such a pitiful predictiment.

Exchanges Make Stand

When it was learned in Los Angeles that the bill had passed the Arizona legislature the film men stood aghast.

The exchanges immediately mailed letters to every exhibitor in Arizona advising them of the impossibility of serving the 108 theatres of that state if the bill passed by the legislature was signed by the Governor.

Every Los Angeles exchange manager was said to be present at the meeting of the Film Board of Trade when the letter to the exhibitors was drafted. They voted unanimously to discontinue service in Arizona entirely if the Governor signed the bill.

The following committee was selected to confer with Governor Campbell at Phoenix: Dave Bershon of Universal, Charles Marley of Triangle, and A. P. Michael.

Governor May Veto

The bill prohibits any film company from operating in Arizona in the production of film as well as the distribution unless all the many drastic requirements are observed.

When the exchange men's committee from Los Angeles called on Governor Campbell the members were received very favorably but the Governor will not give a decision as to whether he would veto the bill or not.

Saturday, March 22, is the last day the Governor can act in either signing or vetoeing the bill.

The action of the three dissatisfied exhibitors threatens to stop amusement entirely in the State of Arizona unless the Governor vetoes the bill, and exchange men maintain that they have not only jeopardized the interests of the other 105 exhibitors in that state but have also impaired the value of their own individual theatre investments.

STILL BUILDING

New Theatres Continue to Fight Pessimism

ANY pessimism that may have been, or may be, caused by the Sunday closing movements, and the censorship bagaboos, stands a fair chance of being dissipated by the continuous stream of reports of new theatres now under construction or being planned.

That the exhibitors of the country have unusual faith in the motion picture and its possibilities as entertainment for the masses is intimated in these reports.

Among the building reports two new theatres for the Cleveland territory are listed. One is for Cleveland, to be erected at 8312 Quincy avenue, by the Quincy Theatre Company. It will have 260 seats and will be conducted under the management of James Benis. It is to be a one-story structure, 50 ft. x 76 ft., with brick walls, and complete fireproof equipment.

Lorain, Ohio, is to have a new $60,000 motion picture house at the intersection of Broadway and 7th street. Carl Lertzman and Wesley Grills, real estate dealers, are putting up the building, which will be of two stories, 76 ft. by 200 ft.

Bach Resigns from Hodkinson Corporation

W. A. Bach, sales manager for the W. W. Hodkinson Corpoartion, has resigned, the resignation to take effect on March 21, it has been announced.

Mr. Bach, who originally entered the film business some three years ago with the Universal Company in Canada, was promoted to the sales managership of the Hodkinson Company upon the resignation of C. E. Shurtleff.

Beyond the statement that he contemplated a trip to Canada, Mr. Bach would make no statement at this time, saying that there was nothing to say of any interest, but that later an announcement would be forthcoming.

Rumor couples the name of Bach with the new corporation under the control of Mr. Shurtleff for the production of the Jack London stories and the works of other big authors.

Sergeant Simone Returns from France

After spending more than fifteen months in France, fighting in nearly every sector of the Western front, Sergeant Peter C. E. Simone has just returned aboard the hospital ship "Comfort," and is temporarily located at Debarkation Hospital No. 5, Grand Central Palace, New York City.

Sergeant Simone was put out of action in the Chateau-Thierry battle when within fifty feet of the "White House," a machine gun nest that was playing havoc with the Sammies. Charging gun nests was Simone's specialty, although he had acquired quite a reputation as a leader of patrol raids. Though seriously injured, Sergeant Simone expects to be well again in a few months.

Prior to his joining the army young Simone was an expert laboratory man. He is a son of Charles Simone, Albany branch manager for the General Film Company.

Schumann Cites Delivery Cure

Looks Like Solution of Problem That Has Confronted Cleveland Exhibitors—How Exchange Man Exhibited Picture

A SOLUTION to one of the most aggravating problems of the motion picture exhibitor was suggested last week at a meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Ohio by David L. Schumann, manager of the Dennison Square theatre, Cleveland. Schumann suggested, and the suggestion was well received, that the exhibitors of the city form a delivery company, bonded and responsible, guaranteeing the safe delivery of films from the exchanges to the theatres and return.

There is constant confusion between exhibitors, exchanges and deliveries at the present time, because no one is directly responsible for the film. Several specific cases have been brought to the attention of the League, cases where the exhibitor failed to get his film, where the exchange sent it out on time, and where the delivery boy claimed that he had delivered it. However, there was no evidence that the film had been delivered. Whether the films never did reach their destination, whether they were lost through carelessness or deliberately stolen, is not known, and is beside the point. The point is that this happens every day, and there is no way of making the deliveries responsible for failure to deliver the films.

Mr. Schumann's plan is to form a bonded company which will be responsible, and which will pay for any films that are lost in local transit.

Exhibitors present at the meeting were interested in the proposition, and have taken under consideration putting it into effect.

William Shapiro, manager of the Cleveland Fox exchange, put one over recently when he went into the exhibiting end of the business and came out right side up and smiling, according to reports from Cleveland.

Mr. Shapiro was meeting with difficulty in getting from a first run exhibitor what he thought he ought to get on "Why I Would Not Marry." So, instead of taking what was offered to him he leased a theatre, ran the picture himself and made more than he would have had he gotten his original price. This is how he did it. He took over the Gaiety theatre, East Ninth Street near Euclid Avenue, on a percentage basis from the manager of the house. He spent a lot of money advertising the picture, both in the newspapers and by posters advantageously placed throughout the city. Then he charged straight 25c. admission, exclusive of the war tax, and sat back watching the people crowd in.

So in the future the failure of an exhibitor to come across will have no terrors for Mr. Shapiro.

Shapiro is not an exchange manager by profession. He belongs on the efficiency staff of the Fox corporation. He came to Cleveland several months ago, just between managers, as it were. M. E. Maxwell had resigned, and Maxwell was to fill in until Maxwell's successor was appointed. But Shapiro did the job so well that he has not been relieved, and it looks as if he had come to stay.

New Richmond House Opens

RICHMOND, VA. (Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS).—Saturday, March 15, saw the opening of Richmond's newest photoplay theatre, the Broadway. "Virtuous Wives" was the attraction, and despite rainy weather the new $60,000 playhouse had a brilliant debut.

Interests new to Richmond theatricals are connected with the Broadway organization, though the men are all known in Southern motion picture activities. R. D. Craver and Frank Ferrandini, First National franchise holders, are prominent in the organization, which also includes John and George Pryor, W. W. Williamson, O. L. Roach and A. C. Conway.

Ken. E. Finlay is the manager in executive charge of the house.

Hammel of General Heads F.I.L.M. Club

John H. Hammel, of the General Film Company, has been elected president of the New York F. I. L. M. Club for the balance of the current year, following the resignation of I. Chadwick.

Mr. Hammel is one of the original members of the F. I. L. M. Club and has in turn filled each office up to that of president.

Joe Klein, of Metro, has been elected First Vice-President; George Schaefer, of the World, Second Vice-President; T. J. Conners, of Metro, Sergeant-at-Arms; and Sam Eckman, of Goldwyn, remains as Treasurer.

Leon D. Netter Returns to Cleveland

Leon D. Netter, associate of Sol. L. Lesser in the Masterpiece Film Attractions of Cleveland, Ohio, has received an honorable discharge from the Aviation Corps, and is now enroute for his Cleveland office, from the Aviation Station at South San Antonio, Texas.

Mr. Netter's many friends feel that a year's training in the flying corps has put him in better trim than ever for an occasional "film flyer."

Campaign Suggested

It was announced from Los Angeles this week that Los Angeles theatre owners are considering a plan of organizing three-minute men among professional folk to appear at the theatres and speak on legislative measures injurious to the film industry. This, it is said, was on the suggestion of Larry Semon, who advised that such a plan is now being used in the East.

Buffalo Film Men Again to the Fore

An evening newspaper of Buffalo, N. Y., started last week a fund to take some wounded discharged soldiers from Buffalo to New York to see the big parade on March 25. Six thousand dollars were needed, and among the early contributors were the local exhibitors and exchange men. Sheas' Hippodrome started the ball rolling with $50, then came the Strand and Victoria with $25, and the Palace with $10. Manager Charles A. Taylor, of the Pathe Exchange, sent in his check for $10, as did other film branch officials. It is noted that whenever there is anything being done to make the hearts of Buffalo's fighting men feel glad that local motion picture men feel glad that local motion picture men are the first to open their purse strings. There are about 125 boys of the above outfit who have been invalided home and, of course, they wanted to see their buddies in the big show. The News helped them.

Griffith Favors Bill Against Plagiarism

D. W. Griffith, the motion picture producer, through Representative Julius Cahn of California, will petition Congress to pass a law making it a criminal offense to plagiarise a motion picture or the name of a motion picture producer. According to Mr. Griffith, his name as well as the names of other authors and producers, has been falsely used in connection with certain motion pictures whose sponsors attribute their productions to men who have had nothing to do with the making of the pictures and who are in no way concerned in their exhibition.

From Pictures to Magazine Staff

A. Blaikie Dick, treasurer of McClure Productions, Inc., since its organization, has been made secretary of McClure Publications, Inc., publishers of McClure's Magazine. Mr. Dick will continue his connection with the McClure motion picture interests as in the past.

Russell Holman, formerly with The Wall Street Journal, and recently released from active service in the Navy, has been added to the McClure publicity staff as assistant to Daniel Henderson, the publicity director.

Many Inquiries

The Entente Film Corp., Inc., who recently opened offices in Philadelphia, state that they are receiving many inquiries from States Right buyers who are interested in their first release, "Colonel Bridau." The picture has a star cast. The photography is said to be excellent and many scenes of beauty are incorporated in the story. When the picture is shown, a new method of tinting, which is a novelty will be disclosed.

The picture is a screen adaption from Balzac's famous novel. It is interesting to note that Otis Skinner's latest success, "The Honor of the Family," which is now playing at one of the leading Broadway theatres in New York, the Globe Theatre, is also an adaption of this Balzac novel.

Exhibitor Service Bureau

Getting the Benefit of Insurance

DOES the matter that is contained in these pages week after week mean anything in the way of insurance of your business? There is not an issue that passes that this department does not contain something of value to every exhibitor.

And we do not claim that we are originating these ideas. We have merely instituted here a clearing house for leading exhibitors, men who are willing to give their successful policies to the rest of the exhibiting world and for the benefit of the industry as a whole.

We know that a great share of the exhibitors are reading these articles. We also know that there are some that are passing them up and at the same time ignoring the very things they really want to know. That this is true in some cases is proven by the fact that the Exhibitors' Service Bureau has received in the past week four inquiries which had been most fully answered in these pages within the month, and from the experience of showmen who had put the ideas into practise.

FOR instance there appears in this issue an account of some of the things that newspapers in various sections are doing to give greater cooperation to the local motion picture houses. From the observations of this department there appears to be no doubt that there is a decided tendency on the part of the daily press as a whole to print more motion picture matter, to develop their photoplay departments—if the exhibitors of each locality will evidence their interest and cooperate through advertising.

Any one who has followed these pages for the two years past knows what a wonderful improvement there has been in exhibitor advertisement, and it has grown not only in quality but in quantity. The advertising departments of the newspapers have not been slow to see this. And the editorial departments are more and more being converted to the idea that there is real reader interest in this matter. And further than this the circulation departments of the papers are finding that photoplay matter is one of the best possible circulation holders.

For more than a year we have been carrying here studies of the cooperation between press and motion picture managers in the leading cities of the country. This has been done for your benefit. Have you taken advantage of it? Have you taken these articles to your newspaper and asked for their cooperation—first doing your share?

It is a policy of insurance for your theatre.

IN this issue there is an article by Forest C. Templin on the way to get the money out of the program feature that you expect on the "Special." The secret of this is the study of each picture and doing the most with it.

When the exhibitor is sold strong on what is called a big feature he is impressed with the need for doing his utmost to put it over. He goes to far more trouble than he does with the program offering. His advertising is bigger, he possibly provides settings, he puts his brains to work on how he can get over the greatest appeal.

Mr. Templin believes in doing that with every picture. He believes that far more can be gotten from every offering if the exhibitor will do his real utmost. And he is right in believing that most of them do not do that. In the past it has been largely the lack of inspiration that caused this attitude. This should certainly be removed in the case of earnest readers of these pages.

Story after story about the manner in which various pictures of all sorts have been exploited by various managers. You may be certain that these managers would not be telling about these things unless they were SUCCESSFUL. If you follow these articles and study the scores of pictures that are appearing here you are going to get a mighty good grasp on the picture field in general and even if there does not appear matter about a particular picture, there will be suggestions from others that will aid in your exploitation.

Another insurance policy.

BUT the insurance that we are trying to give you is not the sort that yields a return only after you have passed away. There is sickness insurance at the same time.

And that sickness insurance applies to any sort of SERVICE that you may desire—rendered free and without the slightest obligation to you. We are glad to tell you anything that we can about pictures, give you any information, any criticism of your work and any constructive ideas that you may be seeking.

Our service has ranged all the way from selecting a name for a theatre in a Missouri village to planning whole presentations for a Chicago theatre. That is covering some wide field.

There has been assembled on this staff the best men available, but no claim is made that these "experts" are better qualified than the successful exhibitor to present these ideas to you. In the first place we have surrounded ourselves with an Advisory Board composed of exhibitors whom you all know. They are the real censors of this department.

Let us serve you.

YOUR POLICY CALLS FOR THE FULL BENEFIT OF EVERYTHING WE CAN OFFER.

THERE is only one compensation that we want from you—not for ourselves but for the benefit of other policy holders in this mutual, cooperative insurance society—and that is for you to tell your ideas here that others may profit by them.

Grosset and Dunlap, publishers of "The Master Mystery," are cooperating with the producers in arranging a lobby display on this book and others written by Arthur B. Reeve. With each shipment of books that go out there is a suggestion for a window display and for cooperation with the theatre showing the picture. The scene pictures are obtained by the book dealer from the theatre, and thus the cooperation is complete

California Theatre Has Time Table So None Will Be Disappointed Over Picture

EUGENE H. ROTH, managing director of the California theatre, San Francisco, believes that when he sells a ticket at the door of his theatre he promises the purchaser something and that something includes a seat. Therefore, the box office does not sell you a seat unless there is one.

It is not a case of the fire laws, or anything of the sort. Mr. Roth simply does not believe that you enter the house to stand around and wait for your chances. If you are notified when you are on the outside you have your choice of waiting until you have the opportunity of buying a ticket—and getting a seat—or going somewhere else.

To this he had added a convenience. In the outer lobby there is a "time table" of each performance. It tells the time at which each unit is started. If the patron who is especially anxious to see the feature comes to the theatre and finds a line in front he need not wait around and then go into the house to find that the feature is just at the end and to have to wait through the rest of the performance to see what he paid his money to see. He knows just the time and he can gauge himself accordingly. Just above the time table there is a flood light which makes the lettering stand out.

It just so happens that outside the California there is a huge street clock that no one can miss, and therefore the people have the right time in their minds when they come to the time list. However, for theatres that haven't this chance convenience, we would suggest the addition of a small clock in the frame just above the program.

Patrons appreciate service like this. It robs the theatre of any impression that you are simply trying to get the money of your patrons. As a matter of fact, we do not believe that one person out of ten walks away from the California even though they see that the feature has already been started. But the chief point is that they feel that the theatre has been frank with them and that if they want to walk in on the middle of a picture there is no complaint to be made. There's a whole lot in getting your people into the right mental state before they enter your house.

DURING LENT

If Business Is Slack It Is Time to Think More

A LEADING exhibitor was in our office the other day and the conversation turned to business. He replied that he was in a very strong religious community and that there always was a falling off during the Lenten season. And then he amazed us with the statement:

"But do you know that it is the best season of the year for me? I call it my thinking season. Some years ago I used to simply say that business was rotten and that it was no use of trying to do anything more during Lent and let it go at that. But I made up my mind that this was the time to give my business all the more attention and to see what more I can do in the way of increasing patronage. There hasn't been a Lent since that hasn't added ten per cent in prosperity to my house."

And isn't that the truth? Dozens of exhibitors have written us that the "Flu" shutdown really helped them because it gave them time to think and to remedy the faults of their theatres and managements.

Anything that really makes us THINK and plan for BETTER THINGS is really a blessing in disguise.

Ask Patrons to Say Where They Want to See Serial

Arrow Photoplays Co., Denver, which owns the rights for the Rocky Mountain states for the Houdini serial, "The Man of Mystery," has adopted a novel plan of working up the interest of the exhibitors and at the same time getting a demand from the fans.

A number of advertisements were inserted in the Denver papers. These ads, after extolling the merits of the serial, requested the fans to answer the following questions:

"Where do you believe the serial will be shown first?"

"Where would you prefer to have it shown?"

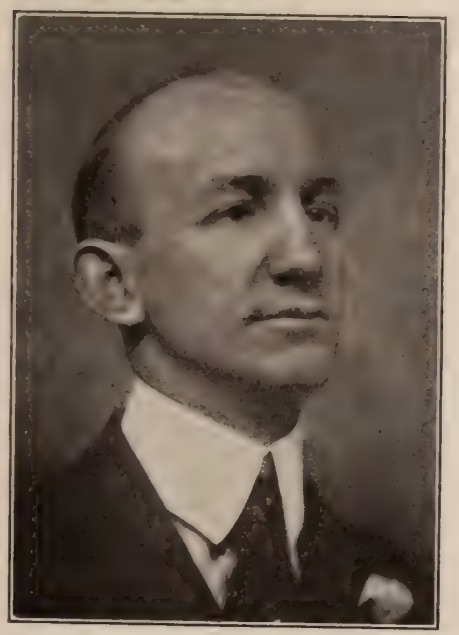
"Which is your favorite picture house?"

To the writer of the best letter of all received, Mr. Goodstein promises to send six tickets or orders therefor, good at the correspondent's favorite theatre showing the serial.

To the writers of the first thousand answers Mr. Goodstein is sending free tickets to houses playing Houdini.

Templin Urges Making of Own "Supers"

If you don't know about Forest C. Templin, manager for the Frank Rembusch enterprises, who is located down in Shelbyville, Ind., you have missed one of the men in the motion picture business who is always doing things. Mr. Templin believes in putting just as much effort behind the regular program picture as he would give a special. We have asked him to give his ideas, and here they are:



THERE are no secrets, no charms, no combination code that opens the gate to success for any exhibitor who will put into motion the God-given talents with which he has been endowed.

Of course I am an optimist—all-wool and a yard wide, and for that reason I cannot help but think that every other person in the world should feel the same way about it. I try to reflect a spirit of sunshine both in the printed word of the theatre and in my organization. Cheerfulness is contagious, you know. I believe in receiving my patrons in a happy manner, that they may at once be placed at ease and in a receptive mood to receive their entertainment. Certainly this is easy! A smile at the ticket office surely can create no offense to the worst grouch that ever lived. Perhaps it's the first one he has received in many moons—and will come back for more. A pleasant greeting at the door, if nothing more than a beaming countenance, adds to the personality of your house and pays dividends beyond calculation.

How many exhibitors have visited among your brothers and given their house service the acid test? How often have you laid your money down at the ticket office and received a small piece of pasteboard in return without even having been able to see under the broad brim of the cashier's new millinery creation? Her eyes might have cast a spell over you—her smiling countenance impressed you—a beaming look of good nature might have foretold that she was on the reception committee and that you were WELCOME.

And then you wearily wend your way on the inside.

Cold walls of brick and steel and mortar.

Forest C. Templin, manager for Frank Rembusch theatres

If the latch-string is out—prove it at the main entrance. Even the worst of us like a little bit of that which is conducive to a bountiful clover crop. Not necessarily rude familiarity but frank friendship which may be read from the eye.

I have a creed which accompanies the rules and regulations for employees which reads as follows:

I believe, as a theatre, there is no rule like the Golden Rule.

That I live in Deeds—not years.

I believe that to make more friends, I must be even a better friend myself.

That I am not so much a theatre as I am an institution of Cheerfulness.

I believe with the greatest philosophers, in the greatest happiness with the greatest numbers.

That should be my end and aim.

I believe that success is in exact ratio to the good I do.

That to do good is the highest good.

That success is its own reward.

I believe that aggressiveness is the father of Progress.

That to rest is to rust.

That work and win is in all of us.

That I must be a beacon and not a taper.

After getting this glad-hand service to your patrons in motion the next thing comes exploitation. "Putting them over" as we usually say. And right here let me remark, you don't have to have a superfeature with eight reels of celluloid in order to get timber enough on which to build. Every average program picture of today possesses enough material if dissected and presented in a palatable manner, to fill your theatre every night.

How to do this is simple. If you were to go to a clothing store to purchase a new suit of clothes, what would be the things that would induce you to make the purchase? Perhaps, first of all in this instance, style; becomingness; all-wool quality; tailoring; workmanship; service. These things the salesman would tell you about in a pleasing manner that would create a desire to possess.

Then why is it not logical to present pictures in the same manner? Impress them with the theme, star, story; for these are but the finishing touches to the tailoring that has been recorded on celluloid just the same as if they were offered over the counter.

Pick the GOOD POINTS, enlarge upon them; choose an angle that you can adapt locally if possible. Drive it home. Get under their hide and far and beyond the beaten path. Use a novel method whether it takes a monkey wrench and a kitchen chair to drive the impression home, or a bower of roses and a Japanese garden setting to arrest their attention. Get it!

Old ideas in new dress are often successful. For instance: this week I played "The Midnight Stage" to turn-away business, in the face of the keenest kind of opposition. I knew I had to do something. And this is the plan I decided upon: In the center of the lobby I placed a bulletin board on a brass easel. On this board was a painted one-sheet headed "WARNING! Be on the Lookout." Beneath this was pasted three telegrams supposed to have been received by the local authorities. They told of the Midnight

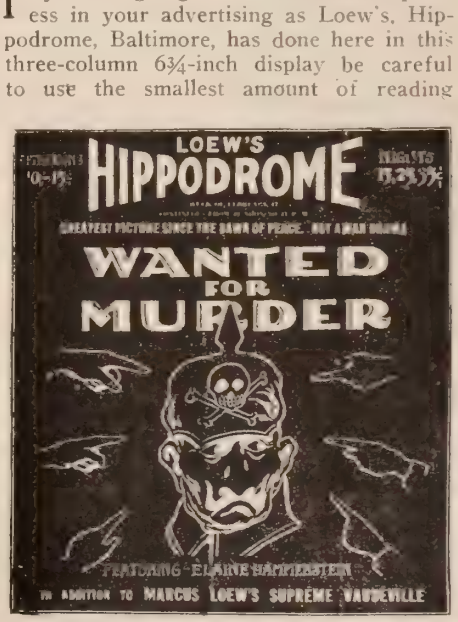
HUB THEATRE, Casper, Wyo., followed to the letter the advice that we gave in the Special Service Section on "The Heart of Humanity," which was printed in the January 11 issue, and as the result got some mighty good advertising and packed the theatre for three days, a mighty unusual thing for a city with a census population of less than 5,000.

In advance of the opening there were used half and quarter pages which were largely devoted to quoting the statements made by New York papers. We are rereproducing one of the quarter-pages here because its size permits a better showing in our space. Then after that the Hub came along with quotations from local people about the picture. That is the most intimate sort of advertising you can get, and is bound to be most convincing. It is something that should not be done often, and only when you have a production that is really out of the ordinary.



There is just one little suggestion that we would make. We would have omitted the "Denver" in large type, and then the rest of the sentence "turned people away during a storm who wanted to see, etc., or at least have put this at the bottom as an incidental statement. We would have brought out then in stronger type, "Casper People Say." Also the display would have been improved by setting the opinions of the local people in different type from the general selling argument. This was done in the displays giving the New York newspaper opinions.

But all in all the plan went over well, and we will guarantee that this use, first of the indorsement of the New York press, and then the close home appeal of the opinion of local people brought more patrons into the box-office than all the adjectives in the world would have attracted. The reason is very simple: Unless you have been mighty lucky in getting the absolute faith of your people, they are not going to pay much attention to what you yourself say about a picture. They are impressed with the opinions of great newspapers, but still you have to remember that New York is a long way off, and when they get the opinions of their own people they are pretty apt to be thoroughly convinced.

You needn't worry about the shifting sands of time" if your sand is mixed with the concrete of enterprise.

IF you are going to use the reverse process in your advertising as Loew's, Hippodrome, Baltimore, has done here in this three-column 6¾-inch display be careful to use the smallest amount of reading matter, and be sure that what is there is sufficiently large. Here is a case where there is some lettering under the name of the theatre that in its original form it cannot be made out without a reading glass. Our idea of the purposes of the white on black advertising is to make it stand out as the most striking thing on the page. This was accomplished to a considerable extent here, but it could have been much better done by bringing the head of the letter out more strongly, and then increasing the contrast of the pointing hands.

This is a picture that has a lot of the sensational appeal, and curiosity arousing advertising is proper here, but we also believe that this is a case for the use of additional space to make it as striking as possible.

RIVOLI THEATRE, Denver, has accomplished in this ten-inch triple-column display on Fannie Ward in "Common Clay," a highly praiseworthy thing—it has put the punch over, and has at the same time maintained the dignity. Although we know that such an orchestra is new to Denver, and that this is one of the big selling arguments of the theatre, this portion of the display should have been carried at the bottom because it robs the effect of artistic effect.

There is a compelling cut of Miss Ward used, and this gets immediate attention, and then the eye is next directed to the name of the star and the title of the picture, properly played strong. Almost immediately one is led into the selling arguments on the picture. For a change we like the method of repeating the name of the story, because it has the cumulative effect of convincing that the story itself is a great one. Then follow in smaller types something about the character of the picture, its success on the stage, etc. We repeat, it is a mighty good idea of putting over the punch with dignity. Use of a name plate and the separation of the orchestra matter from the remainder would have improved things.

Brains came before money was ever created; think it over.

READERS of this department are familiar with our opposition to advertising the bill for the first half of the week and the last half equally, although it is somewhat more excusable where the theatre is not allowed to open on Sundays and still has to do its biggest exploitation on that day.

But here is a case where it has been mighty well done by the Strand theatre, Birmingham, Ala., because the whole effect of this, through coupling the "screen's handsomest man and most beautiful woman" has resulted in an appeal to see both pictures. There is a certain psychological effect that it gets over, and it is also likely to cause a lot of argument among the adherents of this and that star.

We regret that the half-tones did not print any better than they did here, because the photograph appeal is the main one, and where newspapers do not give good printing much of this is lost. The advertisement could have been slightly improved by adding a couple of inches to the depth, and then leaving more room between the name of the theatre and the following matter and then indenting the latter to give more white space at the sides. It would have stood out much stronger.

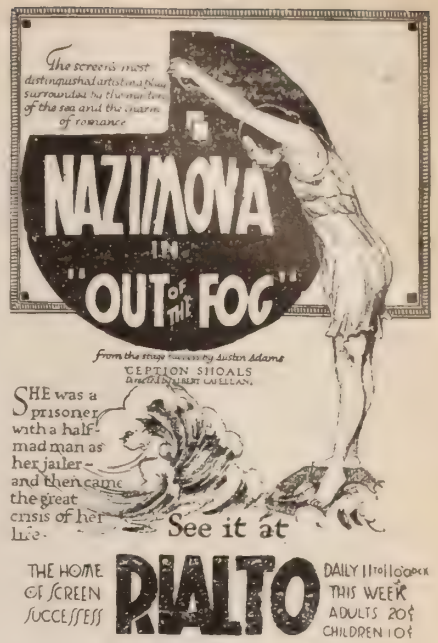
Wish may be father to the thought, but enterprise is the mother of success.

FURTHER along we go with the study of motion picture advertising—and it is a real study for all of us—the more convinced we are that each picture must be sold regardless of the popularity of the star. We believe that these selling talks are becoming more vital each day, because the public is getting more and more to the point where it has to be convinced that the picture itself is one that they want to see.

In answer to one criticism of that sort an advertiser replied that he believed he had put the selling argument over the more strongly by merely using a cut that had the essence of the action of the picture in it. But the question you want to ask yourself is whether the meaning of this cut is absolutely clear to every reader. If it is not, and there are mighty few cases where they are, you ought to tell the public what it means—not by diagram methods, but through a suggestive sentence.

Now, this seven-inch triple-column display of the Alhambra, Indianapolis, is a mighty good one from an artistic point of view. The Oriental design is splendidly carried out, the name of the star and the title well played and the cut attractive. But still it seems to us that there is something lacking—that a whole lot of people are going to say, "I wonder what it's all about."

Don't let them ever associate your house with "Auld Lang Syne."



HERE is a splendid example of how to and how NOT to advertise a picture. We have taken two of the Nazimova productions as an example. The larger of the displays, that of the Rialto theatre, Atlanta, Ga., is twelve inches across four columns and that of the Amuse, Cheyenne, Wyo., is the same width and 7½ inches deep.

Let us say in the first place that it is not often that we commend here the ready-made advertising of distributors but we have taken occasion to say before and we repeat now that there has been no more striking advertising than that prepared by Metro on Nazimova productions. Now the Tudor theatre has used one of these. It has the attractive figure of Nazimova, an actress who has the art of revealing her body without making any of the baser appeal and then there is the selling argument of the picture in the smaller type. All the theatre has to do in this case was to drop in the matter at the bottom and the Rialto has had this drawn in to agree with this style of the other matter.

In the first place the Amuse should have secured one of the similar displays that was available on "Eye for Eye." Because of the character of the production they were even more striking than those on "Out of the Fog." If the exhibitor could not get them from his exchange he should speedily find out the reason why and not be caught again on the next Nazimova offering.

There is only one word that characterizes this display of the Amuse and that word is "messy." Not even the name of the star stands out. There is a series of box effects on either side of the cut that is distinctly repellant. How much better it would have been, even using the same cut, to have placed a name plate of the theatre at the bottom, the cut in the upper left hand corner, to have omitted "Engagement Extraordinary" and then to have used alongside the cut in type that stood out the two sentences: "Daring in Its Intensity. Boundless in Its Beauty," and then to have played below this, in smaller type the selling line just above the cut. One would have resulted in an advertisement. As it stands it is not.

THE UMBRELLAS?

SUNDAY when the director of this bureau visited the leading New York theatres it was raining—an all day sort of a rain. Standing in front of two of the houses the writer heard the same complaint from two different groups of people, to this effect:

"I do not like to go into a theatre when it is raining. I hate to have a drippy umbrella around, either mine or that of someone else. A wet umbrella is the worst deterrent in the world to the enjoyment of a picture."

And the speakers were, in our opinion, right. Now who can solve the problem of what to do with umbrellas. Of course most of the bigger theatres have free checking rooms, but there are a lot of people who don't want to go to that trouble. And the jokes about the popular sport of swiping umbrellas is only too true.

What exhibitor has solved the problem?

How New York Stages the Show

THERE is plenty of comedy on the Broadway bills again this week. The managing directors of the big houses realize that now the war strain is over the people want to laugh a lot and so the habit is getting to be to sprinkle in plenty of laughs when the feature is a dramatic one.

At the Strand the feature itself is almost a straight farce, Fred Stone in "Johnny Get Your Gun," but there is more comedy with the latest of the James Montgomery Flagg creations. The program is notable for the variety of matter that it contains.

Rivoli presents a serious feature with Elsie Ferguson in "The Marriage Price," although there is nothing of the comedy about it. Breaking into the pictorial is a Happy Hooligan, and then one of the Sunshine comedies, "Money Talks" closes the bill.

At the Rialto there is a tense drama with the Rex Beach story, "The Brand." There was much interest created in New York in this picture, because it introduced to motion pictures a new figure, Kay Laurel, one of the beauties of the stage. There is another of the Chaplin revivals, "The Bank" on the bill. A Mutt and Jeff is included in the Rialto Magazine, which is so arranged to give a laugh with a news picture.

Overtures at both Rialto and Rivoli pay a tribute to St. Patrick.

The same bill is held over at the Broadway from last week, Mrs. Charles Chaplin (Mildred Harris) in "When a Girl Loves," and Charles in "A Dog's Life."

Rivoli Theatre

ST. PATRICK'S memory is well taken care of this week at the Rivoli, and the audience shows its appreciation of the overture and the Irish vocal number in a manner that leaves no doubt as to its enjoyment.

In these accounts we have called attention to the fact that it pays to mark special occasions with your programs. In the first place it is the best evidence to the people as a whole that you are up to the times and there is always a certain element that you can make friends of your theatre forever. All of this should be done in good taste and it will become tiresome or offensive to no one.

Selections from Victor Herbert's "Eileen," originally called "Hearts of Erin," is the overture. The number is full of the real Irish lilt, suggestive of many of the favorites of the Ould Sod, and it is the sort of selection that immediately puts the audience in the best sort of a humor. It is played with the center dome in red and the inner curtains all in green, with the musicians bathed in the same color.

"Memory Lane" is the beautiful Van Scoy scenic that follows. It is titled with "original verse," but the author appears to have had trouble at times in getting the rhyme and at the same time some real meaning. These pictures represent scenes in October and there are various shots of water scenes, woodlands and cloud effects. There is a particularly fine shot near the end with a moving cloud in the foreground and the others in the background stationary. There is another fine one with the old bells ringing out at the close of the day, the chime effect on the organ adding realism. "Beethoven Symphony" is played with this.

All of the lights are in green for the rendition of "Macushla," by James Harrod. There is an artistic setting for this by John Wenger, with a large tree in the center of the stage, a dead one toward the right and in the distance a castle. In all our experience we have never known a musical number to get such a reception at a New York motion picture theatre as did this one. It is very rare indeed that there is ever an encore permitted at the Rialto or Rivoli, but the audience seemed to think that it could get one this time. Enro Rapee, who was directing the orchestra when we saw the performance, was waving away his baton and the orchestra playing the music for the introduction to the Rivoli Pictorial, but the audience drowned it out and persisted in the applause until it found that there was no use and then settled down to enjoy the news films.

In this connection we were amused to note that on Monday a New York morning paper said: "Mr. Harrod has a singularly fine tenor voice. He is the sort of an artist that one expects to find in the concert hall and not in the motion picture theatre." Evidently the person who wrote those lines must for the moment have been forgetful of the position that the big theatres of New York and some of the other cities have reached—where they can offer artists merely for the incidental numbers that the legitimate house would boast about. But it is an unconscious tribute to the position that the motion picture theatre has attained.

Rivoli Pictorial opens with Pathe pictures of snow plows at work at Hyay, Wash., removing the great fall of snow. There are some mighty interesting shots here, and the effects on the drums and from behind the scenes add much to the realism. "Norwegian Dance" is the music. From the same source come pictures of tubercular children going "Back to Nature" at Perrysburg, N. Y. Here we have the little ones playing in the snow practically as they came into the world, shown to the tune of "Gypsy Rondo." There follow Kinogram pictures showing the piers at Ridondo Beach, Cal., destroyed by the great waves. Here the orchestra remains tacit and we have effects on the organ with the roar of the sea and the waves beating on the rocks and sand.

There comes a relief here from straight news pictures with one of the always funny Happy Hooligan animated cartoons released by Educational Films. This is "A Smashup in China." It opens with fifes and then "Dance Chanois," with "Step Lively," "China Dreams" and "Dance of the Chinese Dolls" following through. This third selection is played until Happy hands the emperor the package, and then we have the explosion effects until he lies apparently dead, and then comes "Chin, Chin, Chinaman" until the kids hand Happy another decoration. There are all sorts of laughs as Happy makes a flying machine of himself to go to the rescue of the mandarin. There are more laughs brought out with the whistle effects as Happy shakes hands with the emperor and again as the emperor wiggles his foot after he finds himself cured of the gout. We have the cuckoo clock effect at the end as the kids give Happy a punch in the eye. In fact, the Rivoli orchestra has a mighty good time with the effects all the way through the comic.

Then we go back to the news events with Kinogram views of scenes in the trolley strike in Jersey, and these are received in silence by the audience. An agitato is used here. The final punch comes in the Pictorial, with Pathe views of the battleships at target practise at Guantanamo. We see first the small guns firing, then the larger ones and finally the battery of fourteen inchers going off. "To Victory" is the music here, with the booming of the cannon reproduced.

With the lights all red and a fanciful stage effect we then have Katherine de Gallanta doing a Spanish dance. The young woman carries this out with great realism, while the orchestra imitations of castanets and the accompanying music makes it all the more enjoyable.

Then comes the feature, Elsie Ferguson in "The Marriage Price." "Chanson Joyeuse" is played at the screening, and then with the introduction of Van Orden as the married flirt we have "Thoughts," this fading out as Lawton knocks over the glass of wine. Then with the appearance of the two dancers the music shifts to "Horse Trots," with "Whispering Hearts" coming in with the title "After the dinner." With the title "Dawn and a message," "Merchant of Venice No. 1" is played, changing into "In the Silence of the Night" as Helen reads the telegram saying that her father is dead. A couple of numbered selections follow, and then with the title "Just met Van Orden" we have "Dialogue," and then with "So Lawton received a call" we get "Twilight." With the title "Driven to sacrifice her pride" there is "In Holland," played burlesque, and "Le Roman" when she decided to try for a place in motion pictures. When she is seen making the test "Valse D'Azur" is played, and then the organ takes up the music until the title "Her growing belief," when the musicians come back with "Symphonette." Then when Gordon is seen we have "Midsummer's Nights Serenade." Then as the husband is seen entering the room the orchestra is tacit for a moment and then plays "In Saint Malo" until Helen explains to her husband, and here we have "I Love You Truly," a selection especially fitting to such a situation.

The second orchestral number is Lehar's "The Count of Luxembourg," and then we have a screamingly funny Sunshine comedy, "Monday Talks," largely filled with chase stuff and trick photography. The music for this in order is: "Sensation," "That Moaning Trombone," "Nights of Gladness," "Big White Top," "Everybody Crazy About the Doggone Blues," "Frout Frou," "The Trombone Man," a dramatic tension, "Matrimonial Fox Trot," "Who's Who," "Hop Along" and "The Plunger." It gets a succession of laughs.

Auguste Dupont's "Convent Bells" is the organ solo.

Strand Theatre

THERE is a very varied bill at the Strand this week, ranging all the way from grand opera to a picture based on the latest national topic—Prohibition Comedy, however, stands out strong since there is so much of it in the feature, Fred Stone in "Johnny Get Your Gun." Two exceptional fine solo numbers add "class" and real enjoyment to the program.

"I Pagliacci" is the overture, this being played with the stage lights in red, coming up to gold at the very end. The Joan of Arc setting is used here with the figures of the French soldiers standing out in blue and the panels at either side in the same color. During this selection the brasses are kept down and the music carried on the strings and reeds, one of the airs on the first violins, until near the end when the brasses come in for the crashing effect.

"Ballyhooing In The Anarika" is the clever Outing-Chester scenic this week and the humorous titles add much to the enjoyment of the unusual pictures. These take us through a portion of British Guiana and we are shown the forests from which come the iron wood, the timber from which is so heavy that it will not float, but has to be chained to the sides of ballyhoos, a sort of raft in order to get them down the river. Deither's "Barcarole" furnishes mighty appropriate music for this one.

Strand Topical opens with the same Pathe snow plow pictures as at the Rivoli, and here we have realistic effects with

Arthur G. Stolte, manager of the Strand theatre, Omaha, achieved a clever effect for the presentation of "Kilauea," one of the Prizma Color pictures, although the photograph does not bring out the light effects. With all the lights out the stage curtains parted, revealing a smoking volcano. The light from it becomes stronger, finally breaking into flames, with reflection on the water below. This was achieved through transparent effects

"Suits d'Amour" as the main selection. Then comes the pictures of the feelt at target practise, and after this Universal Current Events introduces pictures of the portable airship hangar invented by a Frenchman. This is really a bag which becomes rigid when inflated and can shelter an aeroplane. With both of these numbers we have "National Army March" used. Then from the Pathe Review we get some most interesting pictures showing how the Japanese use cormorants in catching fish. There are all sorts of little cries from members of the audience during this. "Chinese Serenade" is played here. Pathe, under the heading "In the Limelight," then shows us pictures of Sir Horace Plunkett, the Irish leader, and then of Lieut.-Col. Roosevelt, both of which get a big hand while "Aces High" is played.

Topics of the Day then gets the usual number of laughs with such observations as: "A call for American dentists has arisen in Europe. We may soon get the cost of the war back." Favorable reference to the League of Nations gets a big hand. "The Navy Will Bring Them Back" is the music during these.

Pathe then gives us some pictures of a try out of one of the big Handley-Page machines at Ellington Field, Texas; and we have some fine shots taken from the airship as it flies over Galveston. Linked up with this is a Pathe picture showing Secretary Daniels at Washington talking over a wireless phone to an aviator flying over Hampton Roads, 150 miles away. For both of these pictures "Phaeton" is the accompaniment. From Pathe, also, comes interesting pictures of American and Canadian troops at Archangel, Russia, showing the way that they are adapting themselves to conditions in the far north. There is a laugh with the title "Where Santa Claus gets his reindeer," and we see soldiers driving them about. Sleighbell effects are used right there with "When the Boys Come Marching Home" as the main selection. The final punch is put in the Topical with Universal Current Events pictures of the artillery of the Twenty-seventh division coming home. It appeared to us that these were the most crowded decks of any of the returning soldier pictures and they call forth great enthusiasm from the audience. "U. S. Field Artillery" march is the music.

With the lights in red and a spot on the singer we then have a double selection with Joseph Martel, baritone, rendering "Malgre Moi" and "My Buddy." The latter gets an especially big hand.

"Suite Americana" is used at the screening of the feature continuing to the title, "But that particular evening" when we have "Sparklets," and then after the title "Bury Me Not" we get "Western Allegro." At the scene where the tenderfoot knocks the trader down there is a hurry turning to "Why," with the title "So Bill Burnham." Then we are taken from the West to the Burnham home, and here the music changes to "Petite Scherzo" and then to "Fleurette," with the aunt. Where Wiggins begins to make love to the maid we have "Vivienne" used, and then as he leaves her the organ takes up the music for fifteen minutes.

It comes back with the title "The night of the Burnham Ball," and then we have "Kentucky Dream" played until the dancers pause and then "I'm Glad I Made

Music Hints For Entire Programs

Two of Harold B. Franklin's reproduction of famous paintings at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo. At left, Thaulow's "November Day in Normandy," with the effect of moving water obtained by use of a fan, and at right Baelestriere's "Moonlight Sonata," which was accompanied by a violin, the "Adagio" from Beethoven's master work

You Cry." With the announcement that Wiggins will dance we have the orchestra tacit for a moment and then it plays "Ma Poulette," then turning into "Chicken Reel" as Wiggins does the dance. Then when Wiggins is seen climbing the balcony to lasso the count we have "Alphonse and Estrella" until the title "After a night's rest," when we have "Spring Morning" with "In the Tavern" following through Then when the broker calls all the men servants to his defense we get "Ruy Blas" with "Carnaval" following through. The final selection comes when Wiggins opens the supposed revolver and shows that it contains only cigarettes and then we have "Jack O'Lantern" to the end.

As a matter of fact this picture is a burlesque on some motion picture heroes and the music that is used through the picture enters fully into the spirit of it. Inasmuch as there is only a very slender thread of a love story, except the situations between Wiggins and the maid, no theme should be used with this one, but the music should be largely played to action as is being done at the Strand.

Miss Ann Rutledge, soprano, then offers one of the most pleasing vocal numbers that we have heard in weeks with "Kiss Me Again," from "Mlle. Modiste." She wears a rather short dress here, giving a girlish effect and the selection is rendered with the stage lights in blue and a spot on the singer.

Then comes another one of the Pathe Analysis of Motion Pictures, this one showing diving. For the first time young women are introduced as a novelty. There is a particularly clever effect at the end when the reverse of the diving is shown with the girls coming out of the water and back to their position on the float. "Land of the Sky Blue Water" is the music.

James Montgomery Flagg's comedy, "The Last Bottle," then keeps them roaring. The time of the action is 1923 when there is only one bottle of champagne left in the world; her uncle is about to make his niece a wedding present of it. But her husband who had been divorced because he was a wine merchant and now out of a job complicates things considerably. There are a lot of clever titles here, including one where the ex-wife observes: "If Van had only chosen some permanent occupation—like a tax collector." "Sometime" is used at the screening until the appearance of the girl and then we have "Serenade" until the title "Oh, Uncle," when it becomes "Up in Mabel's Room," played once through, the organ taking up the music until the scene where Van pulls up the ladder and here the orchestra comes back with "Sarah, Come Over Here." Then as Van runs out of the house there is "Boy Scouts Galop," and as he holds up the crowd, "No one But You," to the end.

Rialto Theatre

DR. RIESENFELD is presenting another one of the Charlie Chaplin-Essanay reissues at the Rialto theatre this week and from the number of laughs that it gets no one would ever suspect that anyone in the audience had ever seen it before. Much pains have been spent on the musical arrangement of the comedy, and this certainly helps a lot to put it over.

Rialto also pays its tribute to the Seventeenth of Ireland this week with Victor Herbert's "Irish Rhapsody." This is played with all of the lights in green and the orchestra bathed in the same colors. The harp and the French horns carry considerable of the music, and at times the harp and 'cello carry airs. Many of the best known of the old Irish tunes, including "Garry Owen," "Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms," "The Harp That Once Through Tara's Halls," and "St. Patrick's Day" are included. Near the end the orchestra goes into the minors for the pathetique and then as the lights come up at the end with full orchestral effect and the booming organ and crash of symbals for the finale.

Rialto Magazine follows, opening with a couple of scenes that carry the Irish spirit through. First we have Pathe pictures of the visit of Sir Horace Plunkett and then Gaumont supplies some pictures of scenes in the recent demonstration in Glasgow. "Emerald Isle" is used for the introduction and for the pictures of Plunkett, and then an agitato for the strike scenes with the orchestra dimming down for the mob scene. Kinograms then take us to Pittsburgh and shows us how the invention of war gas has helped the glass industry, and here we have an exposition of making plate glass. "Shadowland" is the music. Then Gaumont comes along with Paris enjoying the first snow of the winter, with "Passepied" used.

There is a comedy relief here with Mutt and Jeff in "In Again, Out Again." It is a succession of laughs and the music followed through is "Go Git 'Em," "No Conversation," and "The Zoo Steps," with horn effects for the water overflow and as they go into the cell.

Kinograms then supplies some interesting pictures of the battleship Nebraska bringing soldiers into Boston harbor, including heroes of Chateau Thierry. There are imitations of the welcoming harbor whistles and then the imitation of the escaping steam after the ship reaches the pier. Joseph La Rose, the production manager of the two houses, has about reached the limit of realism here. "Bannerweihe" is the music for this. Then we have a reverse climax here that leaves everyone laughing with Kinogram pictures of "Tin Lizzies on the War Path." They have a lot of trouble to the "Invincible Eagle March," which is dimmed down when one of the baby tanks falls into the dugout. It is a most unusual ending and a pleasing one for a change.

With all of the house lights in red, Edouardo Albano sings the "Toreador" song from "Carmen," and then we have the feature, "The Brand." This is a drama of Alaska with a lot of tenseness and it calls for the more dramatic music which Dr. Riesenfeld has splendidly arranged. The numbered selections are used liberally, one of them being employed at the screening. Then with the title "Early in November" we get "One Pleasing Hour," and then when the girl is seen there is a little pause and a numbered selection taken in. With the title "After Barclay Had Gone" come in the theme "Perfect Melody," and with "The First Marriage," "Good Night" followed by "Suite Poctique" as McGill takes the girl to his home. Then with the midwinter title there is another numbered one with "Norwegian Suite" being used at the title "To make matters worse," and the "Elegie" as the girl tells the villain that she is unhappy.

There is another numbered piece as the two are discovered together, and "Saeterjouts" as McGill says that he is old, but had hoped to make her love him. As things go from bad to worse Beethoven's "Thunderstorm" is played to action, then another numbered one and an organ solo following. The orchestra comes back in after the title "The flower of innocence," when the theme is played once through as a violin solo and then on the organ until the cabaret scene where we have "I Never Knew." At the scene where the villain calls his wife, "Stargazer" is played with Grieg's "Elegie" as McGill recognizes the girl. Then follows another numbered piece with the theme coming back when McGill sees the sleeping child. From then to near the end where McGill picks up the child there are numbered pieces with the theme coming back at the very end.

With the lights all in red, except the musicians bathed in gold, we then have the orchestra brilliantly rendering "Maytime," and this is followed by Charlie Chaplin in "The Bank." Applause greets the title of the picture and then the audience starts laughing. There is a lot of knockabout stuff in this one, and there the orchestra gets a chance to introduce the effects that accentuate the humor.

At the Rialto and Rivoli there is as much attention given the comedies as goes to the feature. As a matter of fact, at times you may find the organ carrying the greater portion of the feature, but during the de luxe performances all of the comedy music, unless there is some special organ effect desired, is carried by the full orchestra. Popular selections are generally used, and one of the biggest successes that these two theatres have scored is in sending the people away from the theatre laughing. And Sunday, when we saw the presentation, they were chuckling half a block down the street after they had left the theatre though there was a cold rain falling that was enough to check the levity of anyone.

Musical selection for the comedy in the order they were used are: "I Ain't Got Away Yet," "Izme," "Tremulo Trot," a whistle effect, "Harrison Fisher," "On the Level," "Kisses," "Medusas," an agitato "Hurry," then the chorus from "Kisses," and "Mam's Blues" for the finale.

Rudolphe Berger's "Amouresque" is the organ solo.

This striking display of the Strand theatre, Ottawa, was obtained by using real trees and then imitation effects, and attracted lots of attention

A LITTLE CARE

Protect the Matter That You Send In to Us

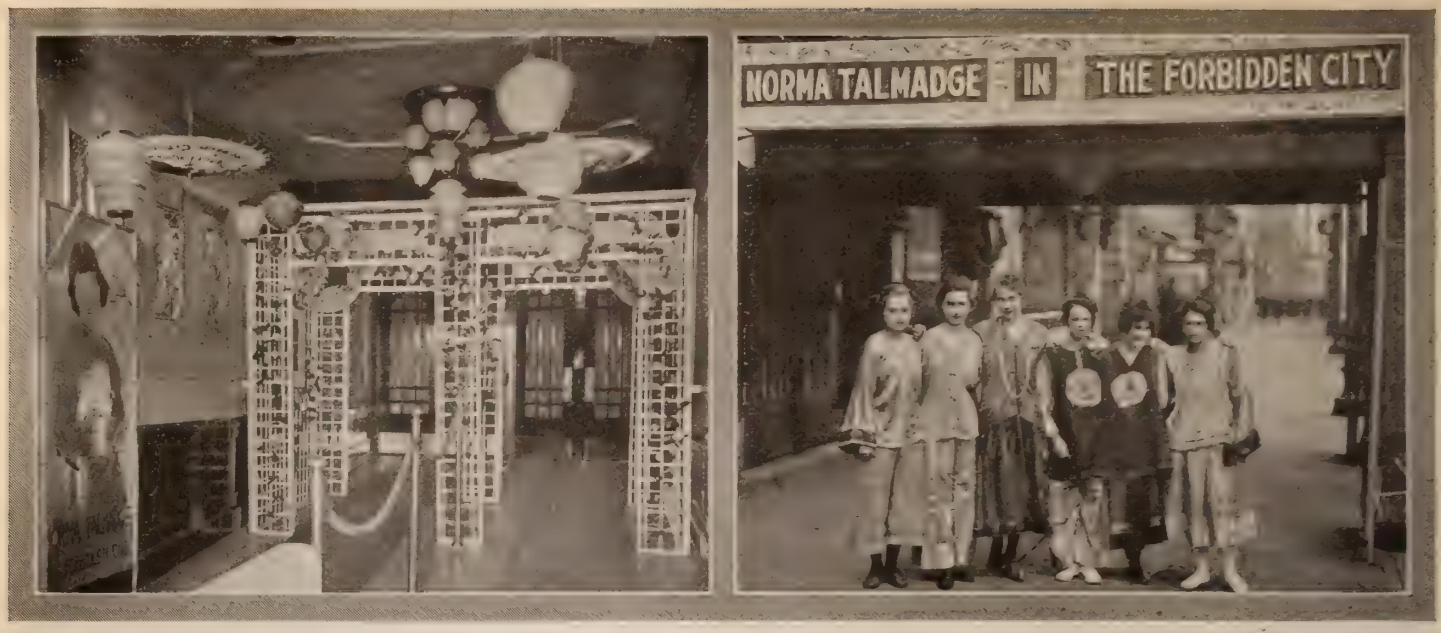
WE appreciate the volume of matter that exhibitors are sending in to us and we are using it promptly and to the best possible advantage. But there is a lot of it wasted simply because the man with whom it originates does not take the necessary care.

For instance in the past week we have received four sets of photographs which were simply rolled up in a piece of paper. The result was that they were absolutely crushed in the mails and it is impossible to reproduce them. In many cases these are the only pictures that the exhibitor has so that the loss is double.

Photographs should be sent flat, between two pieces of cardboard and then the whole package tied firmly.

Another case is that of newspaper advertising clippings. In many cases the user of the scissors is careless and clips off portions of the border. If these were reproduced the pages would look like crazy quilts. In other cases they insist on writing the name of the theatre into the display or making heavy blue and black marks around them. These marks reproduce and spoil the whole effect. Send the full page and if there is more than one theatre advertisement on it, enclose a sheet of your letter paper and there will be no misunderstanding.

North Woods Effects Mirrored in Toronto Display on "Nine-Tenths of Law"



A. J. LAURIE, whose activities in advertising and lobby displays in Canada have been recorded many times in these pages, has just been made manager of the Strand theatre, Ottawa, and he has already started stirring the city up with his exploitation.

Recently he played "Nine-Tenths of the Law" and he decided that this should be given the atmosphere of the northwest So he carried out the idea of the woods not only in the lobby, but throughout the theatre. Real trees were used outside the theatre and the house was decorated wtih fir branches, not only creating an effect pleasing to look upon, but imparting the aroma of the wilds. Around the screen there were banked fir trees and branches, while a soft green light played upon them.

However, it was in the lobby that the main effect was brought out. Along the sidewalk there was heavy cardboard used with trees painted on them and real branches at the top. Sixteen cedar trees and two pines were used in the interior of the lobby while the floor was strewn with bark to carry out the effect. At the left of the lobby there was a large cut-out of Mitchell Lewis and around this were backed other fir branches, while the ticket booth itself was converted into a log cabin, one of the posters being employed to show the kidnapper with the child.

Another touch was added with the employment of a couple of tripods and kettles such as are used by campers in the north. Electric fires burned under these and then to make sure that there was not a jarring thing about the whole display the doorman was garbed as a trapper.

Mighty easy to change the direction if you get started wrong—but at least START.

Lobby decoration and costumed ushers at Schade theatre for "Forbidden City"

Schade Keeps Original in His Exploitation, And Finds Word of Mouth Advertising the Best

GEORGE J. SCHADE, owner of Schade's theatre, Sandusky, O., is one of the greatest believers in the country in using the front of his theatre for exploitation of his pictures and to try any outdoor plans that are feasible. In fact Mr. Schade depends upon this to a greater extent than he does his newspaper advertising, though in the press he buys the space that he needs and does not depend upon reading notices to get the business.

Mr. Schade has a marquee over his theatre that enables him to get unusual displays on various productions. He generally uses large cut-outs of some striking figure on the 24 sheets and if these are not available in that form he has designs perpared by an artist. In the last week's issue of the NEWS we illustrated the way that he did this with "Virtuous Wives." These displays extend entirely over the sidewalk and no one passing down the main street can miss them.

In connection with this picture Mr. Schade also had an aged man garbed in an old linen duster and walking with a huge walking stick cut from a tree and bearing a lighted lantern. On the back of the coat was a poster reading "Looking for Virtuous Wives." This figure covered the whole town. Mr. Schade revels in such stunts as this, but he attributes his success with them to the fact that he never uses one of these unless there is some real point to be made.

By the last census Sandusky had a population of 20,167, so it is considerably removed from the large city class. It is for that reason that Mr. Schade figures that he can create more word of mouth advertising by doing something original than in any other way. But he is careful not to tire the people with one of these after the other, but sets about to vary his appeal by using different methods the next week.

For instance when he played Norma Talmadge in "The Forbidden City" he gave the Chinese atmosphere to the whole theatre. The lobby, which is not a large one, was decorated in Chinese lanterns and parasols, and then he had a double arbor effect with trellisses of flowers. At either side of the lobby were cut-outs and designs showing the star as the little Chinese girl. There were also Chinese paintings hung on the walls.

For this occasion the half-dozen girl ushers were garbed in Chinese costume, making a most attractive appearance. While he seldom relies on this usher part of the exploitation he works around to this once in a while—when he believes the time is ripe that he can make some costume that he puts on the girls create word of mouth advertising.

In addition all of the advertising signs on the front of the house were carried out in Chinese style, though of course the main wording was in English.

In brief the theory under which Mr. Schade works is this: He believes in getting the word of mouth advertising because he has found that it is the best sort of advertising in Sandusky. But in order to do that he realizes that he cannot repeat the same or similar stunts on pictures week after week. One of his first rules is not to do anything unless he has a real idea, and then he proceeds to carry it through under full steam.

At one time he may resort to trick displays on the sidewalk in front of his theatre, at another time depend entirely on the use of cut-outs and designs on the marquee, at another he will put out some float or some other stunt to go through the streets.

But summed up in one thing his secret is this: He studied his pictures carefully, weighs well their possibilities and then puts his whole effort into the plan that he had adopted. That's the reason why the people of Sandusky are always watching to see "what Schade is doing this week."

Templin Urges Exhibitors to Make Own "Supers"

Stage hold-up—of the escape of the bandits—that they were headed toward Shelbyville, and offering a reward for their arrest dead or alive. The last read, "Any information should be at once telephoned to this theatre. Phone 711."

It was not long before the telephone bell began to ring. People called in just for a "kid." The news spread of what they were doing, and whether the friends of the Alhambra expected to wear us out or not I do not care. The telegrams had accomplished their purpose. The whole town was talking. We answered them good naturedly and as a result a result a generous increase in the box office receipts.

Coupled to this two policemen were stood alongside the box office "looking for the desperado" and incidentally helping to keep the people in line who were clamoring for admittance.

"Can it be done?"

Of course it can on any consistent program.

Make your own super-features instead of letting the other fellow coin them for you.

It's cheaper and heaps more of satisfaction.

Advertising Campaign Launched on Drew Comedies

V. B. K. Film Corporation which is producing the comedies in which Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew have returned to the screen report that unusual interest in short subjects has been aroused by these pictures and that the company had therefore established a special service department to aid showmen in getting publicity for these pictures.

Special autographed photographs of the two stars have been given to first and second run houses for display in their houses and a newspaper campaign is scheduled.

These three pages from the Dallas Times-Herald, showing the great improvement there within a few weeks

Newspaper Tide Turns Toward Pictures

AS this article is written the "incoming mail" basket on the writer's desk is filled with copies of newspapers coming from publishers and exhibitors, accompanied by letters showing the cooperation that dailies from coast to coast are doing. It is one of the amazing signs of the progress of the industry and we only regret that space limitations and our realization that the reader will not go through many pages about the same thing, to show the whole lot together here

More than a year ago we started a series of articles about the cooperation of newspapers and exhibitors. Very frankly we told you that this was being done in your behalf, that we were trying to get more from the newspapers for you, but at the same time we urged that you do your full part and that you call the attention of the officials of the papers to the fact that you were doing it. We were not able to cover the entire field, but we did examine what the principal cities were doing and show you the concrete evidence.

Three weeks ago we printed an account of the wonderful change that had come over the Kansas City Star, one of the most conservative papers of the country and a daily which not only never gave a reading notice to the local houses, but made the strictest sort of rules on the character of advertising that could appear, ruling out halftones and any but the lightest display type. We are still getting letters congratulating us on the effect of our article there. The same thing happened in Denver and we have showed you that the Post, the leading paper of that city, is now devoting a four-page section to amusements, largely motion pictures, where formerly the matter was scattered all over the paper.

In our opinion there is not the slightest doubt that there is new interest on the part of newspapers in motion pictures and that in nine cases out of ten if the exhibitors generally will do their part they have such an opportunity as was never theirs before to get the sort of cooperation that brings more money into the box office today and works for greater interest in the motion picture in days to come. If you are not taking advantage of the general trend of the times you are going to lose out. Don't let the fact that cooperation will help your competitor, as well as yourself, keep you from making the strike now, for everything that you do for the increased interest in the photoplay as a whole is bound to bring its share of the business to your house.

Toronto Daily News now has fifty-eight theatres in its calendar. It fills one page and runs over to a second

One of the last articles which we printed in the survey of the newspaper situation dealt with Dallas, Texas. The result has been a decided improvement in the showing that is made by the Times-Herald, and to show this we are printing at the top of this page three of the four pages from the issue of Sunday, March 9. The fourth page is devoted to news matter about motion pictures and to cuts on attractions at the local houses.

But the thing that is most significant is that the same mail brings us letters from the advertising manager of the Old Mill and Queen theatres and from the advertising staff of the Times-Herald calling attention to the change that has been worked and giving the credit for this to the criticisms that appeared in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS. These people are big and broad enough to know that these articles have been written to improve the relations between theatre and newspaper and to do good for both.

If you will reach up on the shelf and get your issue of the NEWS for February 1 you can readily compare the change that has taken place. In that original article we told you that the advertising in Dallas was generally good, but that the cooperation on the part of the newspapers was mighty poor. Now the advertising is even better, and there is more of it, while the Times-Herald is showing a real desire to do things. In the first place the motion picture is given a position ahead of the legitimate and there is care used in the make-up of the paper. We regret that the paper is still compelled to use cuts furnished by the producers, and we suggest that an improvement still further could be made by chopping off the underlines and running the names of the players or descriptive matter in the newspaper's regular type.

How the leading theatres of Dallas have come to know the full value of advertising is best shown by the use of the four full columns by the Hippodrome, one of the Hulsey theatres, announcing the coming of "The Heart of Humanity" a week hence. Hipp. Queen, Old Mill and the Washington are the leaders in space among the photoplay houses. All of these houses very properly keep the names of the theatres dominant and they generally use cuts that they get from the exchanges to illustrate these. There is just enough of the selling talk to get the interest of the fans.

Here is what a paper in a small city, Pittsfield, Mass., has been led to do when the exhibitors asked for cooperation

Now the next thing that the exhibitors of Dallas want to do is to induce the Times-Herald to begin printing some real news of the industry without reference to the individual theatre. There should be a couple of columns of the live, gossipy stuff, and we feel sure that the readers of the newspaper would devour it.

Incidentally, Dallas, the biggest city of Texas, is not the only place in the state where there is increased interest being shown in the photoplay. In the next issue we are going to show you what one of the smaller cities is doing.

Now let's take a jump from the south up into the heart of New England.

Until about four months ago the theatres of Pittsfield, a city with a census population of 36,000, was playing little attention to the photoplay. H. C. Young took charge of the Strand theatre there and immediately cultivated the one newspaper, the Berkshire Eagle, and the aid of this Bureau was enlisted to encourage the paper to give attention to the photoplay. The cooperation on the part of the paper has been a hundred per cent, though it is rather apparent that the publicity men of New York have not noted what this paper is doing and offered their proper share in cooperation. We are sure that they will do so after seeing this account here.

Take a look at the advertising on the pages that we have reproduced and see how well the theatres have done their part. Strand theatre has a display that would do credit to any house in the country, while the Majestic, Spa, Tyler and Union Square all use generous space. We would like for you to look over these two pages and ask yourself where you could have found a year ago a city with a population of 36,000 using such intelligence and such generous space in announcing motion picture entertainment.

And what has been the reader interest in the new motion picture department? The best answer is found in the fact that the reading matter on these two pages is devoted to answering questions of photoplay fans. Certainly these scores of questions indicate that the people of that section are interested in this matter. This caused the general reading notices to be transferred to another page, which is not reproduced here.

Now skipping about the country, let's go to Toronto. Some months ago we called attention to the Photoplay Calendar which was being printed Saturdays in the Daily News. At the time we first reproduced the calendar there was about half a page of it. The next time we called attention to it there was almost a page, and now there is not only a full page every Saturday, but six theatres are carried over to the second page.

In all there are 58 theatres represented in this calendar, which we believe is the record for any city of the size in the country.

This calendar consists of a chart giving the complete bill for each theatre for every day in the week, and we cannot imagine anything that will be more interesting to the readers of the paper.

In addition to this each of these theatres carries about five agate lines in the other week day issues of the paper giving the bill for that day, and alongside of this is carried a column of motion picture news matter, including questions and answers.

In various articles on advertising we have repeatedly called attention to the value of the chart system. In the first place we cannot imagine anything that is of more value to a newspaper. When you stop to consider that probably nine-tenths of the readers of the paper, taking in all the members of the family, are regular motion picture goers, you can appreciate the interest that they are sure to show in a newspaper that gives daily the bill for practically all of the theatres of the city.

The time is rapidly passing, if it is not already gone, when the average patron is willing to walk around to even the nearest theatre to find out what is the bill for that particular night. For that reason we are the strongest believers in even the neighborhood theatres advertising. But they cannot do so unless the newspapers are willing to grant them a rate below the regular amusement charge, for their seating capacities are generally limited and they do not get the advantage of the full circulation all over the city, but get the greatest benefit from their immediate neighborhoods.

The newspaper can well afford to figure the circulation value and the reader interest in granting this rate. We feel mighty sure that the general advertiser would think a great deal more of the newspaper that so interested the whole family that the man who bought it was compelled by the family demand to take it home because he knew that the wife and kids would be after him if he happened to leave it on the street car.

We have made this article somewhat "skippy" with a purpose. We are going to keep on calling your attention to the things that various newspapers are doing—not as a matter of survey, but to show you the increasing interest that the dailies are evidencing in the photoplay theatres.

If you are not doing your part to get the cooperation in your own locality it is the fault of no one but yourself.

We haven't yet heard of a case where the exhibitors, in the spirit of true cooperation, called these articles to the attention of his newspaper that he did not get action.

What are you and your newspaper doing?

There is nothing else that means so much to the prosperity of your house.

A REAL IDEA

It Pays to Get Your Patrons More Interested in the Music

PRACTICALLY every theatre that has tried it finds that the large orchestras are paying propositions, and that is the reason they are so rapidly increasing in numbers. The old idea that you had to have a high brow audience to appreciate good music is rapidly disappearing with the rest of the moldbacks.

But it is equally true that there has to be a certain amount of unconscious education, of stimulant to get the full appreciation of your music. But if you make it a habit of sitting around your theatre and listening to the comment of your patrons you will hear frequent discussions of what is the name of a certain air that is being played with this picture.

California theatre, Los Angeles, has adopted an excellent idea of printing in the program a list of the principal selections that are played during the feature. It would be an even better idea if you printed the cue lines—the title or the description where the selection starts or ends. It would be necessary to give only the main selections, omitting the hurries, agitatoes, etc.

We believe that it will further stimulate the interest in your music and it will certainly cause your patrons to read and preserve your program. It can easily be done by the larger houses.

Lust Arranges Bookings for Christie

Sidney B. Lust, President of Super-Film Attractions of Washington, D. C., has arranged for booking Christie Comedies in a number of the highest class houses in his territory, among them being the Loew's Palace and Loew's Columbia, in Washington, D. C.; the Maryland and Parkway theatres in Baltimore and the Bluebird theatre in Richmond, Va.

In a recent letter to A. E. Christie, Mr. Lust states: "Christie Comedies that are in my territory are meeting with wonderful success. I sincerely trust that you keep up the good work that you have been doing, and when the two-reelers come through I hope that they are equally as good as the single reelers."

Sawyer-Lubin Engage Morgan

Following out a plan for the use of well-known artists in connection with the advertising inserts which have been a feature of the exploitation campaign covering "Virtuous Men," Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin this week announced the acquisition of the services of R. G. Morgan, illustrator. Mr. Morgan has been specially engaged by the organizers of S-L Pictures to create four pages of original drawings, to be used as the dominant theme of the next insert exploiting the E. K. Lincoln star vehicle. Special sittings were made for Mr. Morgan by E. K. Lincoln, Grace Darling, Clara Joel, R. W. Cummings and William B. Mack. The four drawings occupied more than one month of the well-known artist's exclusive time.

Picture Deals with Bolshevism

Select Pictures Announces "Bolshevism on Trial" as Coming Release—Film Now Being Printed—No Date Set

"BOLSHEVISM on Trial" is the title of the new timely special production which Select Pictures Corporation has drawn for itself from the year's big attractions.

The photodrama, as its title implies, deals with the spread of Bolshevism. But the picture is not propaganda, it is drama, but drama every reel of which becomes more convincingly an addition to the discussion pro and con of the Bolshevistic bogey.

The production work on "Bolshevism on Trial" has been entirely completed, and this feature is now in the printing stage. Select is bending every effort to putting prints on the market at once, and Select's exchanges throughout the United States and Canada have been authorized to accept immediate playdates. No release date is being set, as prints will be furnished to the first-run customers as fast as they can be completed, and the custom of first come first served will be observed.

President Lewis J. Selznick and other officials of the Select Corporation are so firmly convinced that in "Bolshevism on Trial" they have one of the biggest special productions of recent years that they have arranged for the most far-reaching campaign of advertising and publicity that has yet been put behind any Select Pictures' offering—thus backing their judgment with a liberal supply of funds from Select's war chest.

A contract has already been signed for a large electric light sign at 46th Street and Broadway and orders given for a thorough billboard campaign which will plaster New York and vicinity with twenty-four sheets.

With so timely a subject as Bolshevism, presented in as well-made a photoplay as "Bolshevism on Trial," Select officials feel that they have a production which should prove a bonanza. Moreover, Select Pictures will be the first in the field with a photodrama dealing with this subject, and it is felt that exhibitors will find that their patrons have an enormous interest in this subject which will reap a golden harvest for the theatres when this picture is shown. Every aid that can be extended to exhibitors, therefore, has been planned, and the Select officials will stand behind each presentation and endeavor to assist the theatre making it to obtain results at the box office commensurate with the importance of the undertaking.

"Bolshevism on Trial" was produced by the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, of which Isaac Wolper is president. Its sole distribution in the United States and Canada lies in the hands of Select Pictures Corporation. Harry Chandlee has received credit for the strong continuity and also for the exceptionally interesting titles which are noticeable throughout the photoplay.

Robert Fraser, Leslie Stowe, Howard Truesdell, Valda Valkyrien and Ethel Wright are prominent members of the cast, which is of general excellence, and which proves itself wholly equal to the calls upon it made by the story.

Based on Stage Play

Marguerite Clark's newest Paramount picture, "Three Men and a Girl," which is released March 16, is based upon Edward Childs Carpenter's play, "The Three Bears," which was produced on the stage of a Broadway theatre in October, 1917.

Notoriety Not Wanted in Films

Says Carl Laemmle of Universal

RECENTLY a young woman in Chicago became suddenly conspicuous. Her father eventually came to trial for the murder of the young woman's middle-aged suitor. The newspapers, naturally, saw in the tragedy the sort of "human-interest" story which newspaper readers like to read, and, naturally also, they made the most of their opportunity.

This was well and good. No one objects—least of all, I am sure, the young woman round whom the sordid details of the tragedy were gathered. A reporter found the "heroine" and interviewed her. She supplied "copy" for a two-column, "illustrated" article. To this end, evidently, she needed no urging. And one of Chicago's leading newspapers published the interview. It gave it first-page position. It "double-leaded" the article. This paper, it happens, is one of the greatest journals in the world.

Again well and good. And again no one objects—certainly not I, for I found myself, willy-nilly, interested in the story. It held my attention.

But I found throughout that article varied and various statements to the effect that this young woman "was going into the movies." Perhaps she is. I am quite positive, however, that she is not "going into the movies," through the medium of the Universal. I am quite positive that she will not "go into the movies," by way of any self-respecting producing company.

Personally I would not insult the intelligence of the millions of spectators who enjoy Universal productions by adding this young woman to the roster of Universal players. Notoriety is no recommendation to either the motion picture actress or the motion picture actor. Had this young woman, at the time of this tragedy, been a motion picture actress, had she, indeed, occupied a stellar position, her value, because of this notoriety, would have decreased, over night, at least fifty per cent. I very much doubt whether she would, as a matter of fact, ever recover her prestige.

It is unfair to the spectators of motion pictures; it is unjust to the producers of motion pictures; it is an insult to the self-respecting actors and actresses engaged in the main of motion pictures; it is, in a word, a reflection upon photoplayer, photoplay producer and photoplay exhibitor, upon the screen, upon the theatres and newspapers to permit this young woman to use their columns for the exploitation of her notoriety and to exploit this notoriety as a possible asset for preferment in the world of the motion picture.

Nothing, in my opinion, is a greater drawback to actor or actress than notoriety. I believe in clean pictures and in nothing but clean pictures. And I believe in making clean pictures with clean people. Notoriety cannot get a hearing in Universal studios.

W. H. Reports Success for Reissues

The two series of twenty-eight each single reel Keystone comedy re-issues, the Keystone Liberty Brand and the Keystone Eagle Brand; and the two series of fifteen each two reel Kay Bee Western dramas, the Kay Bee Union Brand and the Kay Bee Columbia Brand, which are being released through W. H. Productions Company, are reported to be bringing record box office results for the exhibitors throughout the country.

Each subject contains a combination of some of the most famous motion picture stars of today, which include Charles Ray, J. Barney Sherry, Ann Little, Mabel Normand, Sessue Hayakawa, Tsuri Aoki, Mack Swain, Ford Sterling, Sidney Chaplin, Charles Murray, Charles Edwards, Louise Fazenda, Rhea Mitchell, Clara Williams, Louise Glaum, etc.

Dustin Speaks Highly of New Film

On the completion of his second feature for United and after witnessing its screening in Los Angeles, Dustin Farnum ventured the prediction that "A Man In the Open" bade fair to surpass in popularity "The Light of Western Stars" in which he had made his United debut, and which was then already establishing high records for itself throughout the country.

That the star's estimate of the merits of "A Man In the Open" is being more than sustained is claimed by United officials who tender in evidence many expressions from exhibitors laudatory of Dustin Farnum's latest United vehicle, and bearing out also the statement of Robert Brunton of the Brunton studios that "A Man In the Open" ranks high among the most effective productions that have issued from Los Angeles studios.

In a letter to J. A. Berst, Harry M. Crandall, the prominent Washington, D. C., exhibitor, classes together both the Farnum offerings. "I am agreeably surprised at the quality of these pictures," writes Mr. Crandall, "they are by far the best pictures ever made by a new organization and very much better than most pictures that are being made by any producers. These pictures have been a wonderful success from a box-office standpoint and have received many favorable comments from our patrons."

First National Sends Out Denial

The head office of First National Exhibitors' Circuit has issued the following circular from its offices:

"A week ago 'Variety' published a rumor to the effect that the First National Exhibitors' Circuit could not release 'Daddy Longlegs' until six months after her last Artcraft release.

"This is not true. There is nothing in the contract between the Circuit and Miss Pickford to prevent our releasing 'Daddy Longlegs' any time after the negative is received. We will most likely release this production about 3 or 4 weeks after the negative has been delivered to us.

"Checkers" Makes Progress for Wm. Fox

Well-Known Stage Production Transferred to Screen with Thomas J. Carrigan in the Name Part—Unusual Attention Is Given to Detail

THE announcement was made this week from the offices of William Fox that the Fox Film Corporation production of "Checkers," from the well-known stage play, is well under way, and that instead of the "shooting" being confined to a studio, it is taking place "all over the United States."

"More attention is being given to this play," said a Fox official, "than to any picture William Fox ever produced, in the matter of detail." Thomas J. Carrigan has the title-role, and the direction is in the hands of Richard Stanton.

The cast of "Checkers" will be one of its strong points, according to the Fox announcement. Among the players, in addition to Mr. Carrigan, are Jean Acker, Tammany Young, Ellen Cassity, Robert Elliott and others.

Race Track Melodrama

The William Fox announcement said: "'Checkers' is now being filmed all over the United States, by Richard Stanton. It is probably the best known play staged in this country and has achieved a financial success almost unparalleled in the annals of the drama. It was written by Henry Blossom, Jr., who is said to have offered it to many producers before it finally was brought out and who finally sold his rights to it for a comparatively small sum. The principal role was played by Thomas Ross and so thoroughly did his name become associated with the part that for years many persons referred to him as 'Checkers.'

"The filming of the production is well under way and more attention is being given to the details than to any picture William Fox ever has made. It is to be produced and advertised as a big spectacular race track melodrama, and will excel the stage play in that the big punch—the exciting race scene—will be put on to show the progress of the race instead of merely indicating that progress, as was done in the stage version by the shouts of the excited crowd which witnessed the event.

"Thomas J. Carrigan has been cast for the role of Checkers with Jean Acker as 'Pert' Barlow and a large supporting cast including Ellen Cassity, Robert Elliott, Tammany Young and a score of other well known players. All of the characters of the original play, including 'Push' Miller, Arthur Kendall, Judge Martin of Little Rock, 'Uncle Jerry' Halter, Adoniram Barlow, 'Chick' Allen, Tobe, 'Splint' Eagan, Pert Barlow, Sadie Martin, Cynthy, Aunt Deb and Jasper are to be retained in the photographic version.

"It is to be a picture of thoroughbreds with an appropriate setting in the blue grass of Kentucky. The great race track scene, the climax of the production, is to be photographed at Churchill Downs, Kentucky's most romantic and historic race course, on the day of the great Kentucky derby. Director Stanton has played a long-shot in casting 'Remorse' the race-horse hero of the play. He has photographed a horse owned by P. S. P. Randolph, a well-known horse owner, and Mr. Randolph hopes his horse will be the derby winner. Certainly the horse will be in the race.

Much Realism Promised

"A real horse race is not the only realism. Jean Acker, the little Broadway beauty and daredevil of the movies, is offering to bet one year's salary that when the Randolph entry starts in the Kentucky derby she will be in the saddle wearing the Randolph colors. Miss Acker is one of the best women riders in the country and she has engaged a well-known retired jockey to coach her to ride a real race. Miss Acker has already been photographed in many scenes with the Randolph derby entry on the private track of the Randolph Estate at Lakewood, N. J.

"Last week Miss Acker showed her contempt for fear and registered an additional point in support of her demand that she be allowed to ride the Kentucky derby, when she took a ten-foot leap through the air from the roof of the Gould mansion at Lakewood into a tree without regard to the ground, thirty-eight feet below. The fact that she had just been released from a hospital after riding a motorcycle through an open drawbridge seemed to be no check upon Miss Acker's willingness to add new thrills to 'Checkers' by this daring 'leap for life.'"

Gambling Outfit "Shot"

What is declared to be one of the most elaborate and convincing gambling layouts that ever has been utilized in pictures has been photographed for "Checkers." The gambling rooms are to be reproductions of Canfield's place in the 40's, off Fifth avenue, and the paraphernalia is from the Canfield establishment, it having been borrowed by Director Stanton from the warehouse company in New Jersey with which it has been stored. The chips are ivory inlaid and are said to represent a physical value of $1.50 each. The faro table is of mahogany and the roulette table is one of the double affairs on which Canfield expended a small fortune.

The set in which this gambling outfit is used is to be the scene of some of the most dramatic moments of the play—incidents of the action, it is said, that merely were suggested in the stage production. Contrast throughout, according to the Exhibitors Service Bureau of the Fox Film Corporation, will be such as to furnish the public with ample opportunity for comparing stage plays with photoplays from the standpoint of dramatic construction and interest-holding qualities.

Newspapers Comment on "Virtuous Men"

When Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin announced several weeks ago that a mild sensation will be created when the title of the first Ralph Ince Film Attraction was made public, their statement was taken with the usual grain of salt by the industry in general. However, the sponsors for the initial Ralph Ince Film Attraction starring E. K. Lincoln and directed by Ralph Ince have more than made good in their promise. "Virtuous Men," announced as the title for the forthcoming Ralph Ince Film Attraction bearing the S-L trade mark has aroused a veritable storm of comment among exhibitors and public from coast to coast.

An unusual phase in connection with the comment caused by the announcement of the title for the first Ralph Ince Film Attraction has been the interest displayed by leading newspapers of the country. Some have gone so far as to make editorial comment on the title, while the various photoplay and dramatic column writers have remarked the striking qualities of "Virtuous Men" as a film title.

Milliken Likes "Virtuous Men"

Executive of S-L Organization Sees Picture and Considers It Unusual Winner—Praises Cast and Director

FOLLOWING a recent announcement that "Virtuous Men," the first Ralph Ince Film Attraction presenting E. K. Lincoln as star, and sponsored by Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, would be ready for presentation in the next few weeks, Conrad Milliken, an executive of the S-L organization, has seen fit to issue a statement in connection with the production. Mr. Milliken, well-known for his former connection as Vice-President of the Petrova Picture Company, has to his credit several years' experience in judging the merits of feature productions. The S-L executive witnessed a special showing of "Virtuous Men" recently and has enthusiastically endorsed the picture as the best of the few big screen entertainments of the current season:

"After seeing 'Virtuous Men' in completed form recently I feel impelled to go on record by saying I consider it one of the biggest screen entertainments I have ever witnessed. Carefully weighing every requisite necessary to a film production of higher merit, I find the first Ralph Ince Film Attraction falls short in none. It possesses a straight-forward, swift-moving story, melodramatic in the extreme and convincing from start to finish. It has had the advantage of the masterly hand of Ralph Ince, who personally directed every scene. It contains an extraordinary cast in support of E. K. Lincoln, the star, the names of Grace Darling, Clara Joel, Robert W. Cummings, William B. Mack and many others assuring a high quality of acting throughout. Photographically 'Virtuous Men' is superb. It contains innumerable novelties in the matter of camera work, and many scenes of exquisite beauty taken both in and out of doors. It has not one but half a dozen so-called 'big moments' which run from the highly spectacular to the thrillingly dramatic. Among the out-of-the-ordinary features predominating throughout the course of the picture there is a realistic and thrilling forest fire, an exciting riot scene in which 10,000 men actually appear, a society ball which for beauty in the matter of settings and gowns has never been equalled, and what is probably the most terrific and hair-raising fight ever staged for the screen.

"Added to these factors is a perfection of detail rarely attained in big screen productions, a love story finely told and a suspense which grips the spectator at all times.

"In my opinion 'Virtuous Men' possesses all of the elements so often looked for and so seldom found in productions aspiring to the appellation 'special.' I believe this picture will earn for S-L Pictures the gratitude of the great body of exhibitors who constantly cry: 'Give us big and better pictures.'"

"Virtuous Men" is scheduled for a special presentation on Broadway in the near future. Plans are now being made for a distinguished assemblage to witness the premiere of their first Ralph Ince Film Attraction.

Levy Confers with United Officials

Jack Levy, Eastern Divisional Manager for United Picture Theatres, Inc., with supervision of the Philadelphia, Washington, Pittsburgh and Atlanta territories, has been in consultation with United officials in New York and left last week for Detroit, the latest city with United branch office to be included in the territory under Mr. Levy's supervision. Robert Churchill, recently United manager in Detroit, is resigning from that position in order to enter business for himself and Mr. Levy, with the approval of J. A. Berst, president of United, will appoint a successor.

E. W. Hennessey, transferred from the Philadelphia district, and W. Reddick have been appointed to the Detroit territory as salesmen.

Karger Uses Four Projection Rooms

The four projection rooms in the east wing of Metro's new studio administration building in Hollywood are now proving to Maxwell Karger, Director General, their value and the wisdom of planning them when the designs for the new studio were drawn. Now fully equipped and in daily use, they enable Director General Karger and three working directors at the same time to view each day's camera work the day after it has been shot.

A Simplex projecting machine is installed in the largest room. It is here that completed productions are shown when first assembled, to go through the process of cutting, under Karger's personal supervision. There is to be another Simplex alongside the one now in use there, so as to obviate the slight delay occasioned by re-threading the single machine. The three smaller rooms, all the same size, are equipped with Powers machines.

Priscilla Dean

"A SILK-LINED BURGLAR"

Priscilla

TWO remarkable things are connected with Priscilla Dean's sudden flashing into stardom—the quickness with which the public approved her and the unanimity of opinion as to the qualities for which they approve her. Never before have we received such instantaneous response from Press, Exhibitors and General Public as that whole-souled praise which followed the release of "THE WILDCAT OF PARIS" and "THE WICKED DARLING." And the interesting part of it is—they all see exactly the same vivid, flashing, intense, electric personality—the same perfection of screen technique—the same powerful heart-appeal in her uniquely charming person. Here, beyond all doubt, is a magnetic actress—one who alternately persuades and compels your admiration; and you, as a Showman, know what this means in dollars and cents.

Book Priscilla Dean in her newest delightful sensation, "A SILK-LINED BURGLAR." It will be the third of three splendid successes for you as well as for Miss Priscilla Dean.

The pictures you show should be above, all things, living, human dramas. Yet they must not be over-sexed. Who, then, shall judge—Censor, Producer or General Public? The Universal thinks it better business to leave it to the Public.

Because it is the Public who have watched for years the Universal's pictures — have steadily, carefully censored them by going or refusing to go —have put their seal of approval on them by making the Universal the most successful of all picture producing concerns. What better proof of the safety of public censorship could anyone want?

Yet—and make sure you get the point—our Universal Special Attractions have proven to be the most profitable drawing cards that the past nine months have produced.

We think this is pretty good proof of two things—the Public's right to censor pictures—and the Public's whole-hearted approval of the Universal's own censorship. See any one of the Universal Special Attractions listed here and you'll see a perfect example of what the public—your public —want today.

"The Silk-Lined Burglar"

EXHIBITORS who are going to play this picture will of course take advantage of the vogue that Priscilla Dean has won in her last three pictures, "Kiss or Kill," "The Wildcat of Paris" and "The Wicked Darling." Here again she is seen in a crook play, but toward the end we find out that she is not a crook at all, but that she is doing a patriotic service for her country—and her sweetheart.

But the chief male character is one of the cleverest of robbers, none other than Boston Blackie, whose exploits have become famous through the stories written about him by Jack Boyle in The Red Book. In this picture we see Miss Dean first fascinatingly beautiful in an evening gown and then just as fetching in boy's clothes when she goes to do her share in the robbery. It is in the latter costume that we would play her strongest in illustrations, because these will get the most attention.

While we would by no means give the story away in any of the advertising, for the big punch lies in one of the final scenes, we believe it advisable to show that this is not the ordinary sort of a crime story, but a burglary planned by a society girl with a noble purpose in view.

THIS is the gist of it: Boston Blackie is in his aparment early in the year 1916 "boiling soup," as the preparation of nitroglycerine for safecracking is known among crooks, when he comes across an advertisement in the newspaper asking for the services of an experienced safecracker. Blackie's wife, insistent on his reformation, fears that it is a trap, but Blackie recognizes it as the work of a woman, answers and an appointment is made for meeting that evening at a restaurant.

One column cut of star for advertising or stories

Detectives are watching Blackie to link him up with a recent robbery and these incidents add to the thrill. At the restaurant he picks the girl out from the crowd and she tells him that she wants him to take a key, go to a house with her and blow a safe. In answer to his question she admits that she doesn't know what is in the safe, but assures him that "morally she has every right in the world" to its contents. Strangeness of the adventure more than anything else wins Blackie's consent and they agree to meet at midnight.

In the meantime it is revealed to us that Robert Melchoir, a young U. S. Secret Service operator, is detailed to watch the chief of the German spies, but since this country was then neutral he was permitted to use no violence or take any illegal steps. More tenseness is added as we see Melchoir and Chief Delano, of the city detectives, in the same restaurant, Delano recognizing Blackie with the girl, but Melchoir not seeing them.

DORIS has great trouble in leaving her apartment, because of the watchfulness of a new house detective, but she finally escapes by the fire escape into her waiting electric. She meets Blackie and they enter the house and just as the explosion is about to occur they see the German spy entering. The safe is burst open and Doris rushes to get the papers it contains. But Blackie, in hiding with her, notes that it is not to the safe but to a phonograph that the German rushes, smiling to find that nothing there is touched.

Doris corners the German with her revolver while Blackie struggles with one of his companions. By a ruse the spy obtains possession of the weapon and is choking Doris to death when Blackie takes a hand with the revolver over the Hun's head. Ready to flee, Blackie grabs up the bunch of phonograph records and then slips the reproducer into his pocket while the girl gathers up the papers taken from the safe and the two of them escape through a window just as Melchoir and Delano, who have been following the Hun's auto, enter the room.

Personality and Plot Will Both Make Appeals

THERE are two things on which the greatest emphasis should be placed in all of the exploitation of this picture—the personality of the star and the fact that a young society girl turns burglar for a night. You have the elements here that enable you to fascinate your audiences in advance, and if you accomplish that you are pretty sure to get the fullest volume of patronage.

If you have been playing the recent Priscilla Dean pictures you know her particular appeal, but if she is new to your patrons we would place great stress on her individuality. "The amazing actress" is one of the phrases that advertisers have used in referring to her, because those words suggest that her appeal is distinctly different from that of any other star. "Dazzling" is another expression, because she is of the dare-devilish type, but with the real woman under it all.

If you are making the mistake of treating every star the same in your advertising you are missing opportunity. That seems self-evident, yet there are a lot of exhibitors who will be content merely to announce her name and the title and then expect people to come to the theatre any way.

IN the first place you have here a striking title and if this is used prominently together with a striking picture of the star there will be no doubt about getting the attention of the newspaper readers, and there is no excuse for failure to get over your selling arguments. With this in view you should remember that the mystery element—the suspense—is one of the biggest ones here, for the unexpected ending with the arrest of the German spy is likely to send people away from your theatre talking about this picture.

There should be just enough said to whet the curiosity without giving the plot away. In this case the thing to keep hidden is the reason why the society girl hired the burglar and went through with the robbery. You will do well to indicate that there was a good reason, for this takes away the sting of ordinary crime and the average person has a certain amount of admiration for a crook when they know that the end is worthy, no matter how wrong the means.

There will be a temptation to exhibitors to use the advertisement that attracted the attention of Boston Blackie in their own teaser advertisements, but we would advise against doing this unless the connection with the picture is made very clear. It never pays to do anything that causes alarm and the suggestion of a burglar scare is not a pleasant one.

NOW as the basis of your advertising let us take a striking picture of the star. If you are making your own cuts you will find a number among the stills, and we would preferably use one of these that shows her in boy's attire and presumably as a burglar, for this gives the atmosphere. There are striking pictures that show her climbing over the transom, another of her with a pistol pointed at the German and a third of the back of an automobile with the girl and Boston Blackie peering through the glass.

A particularly appealing display may be had by using one of the stills showing Miss Dean and Blackie seated at the table in a restaurant in the upper left hand corner and in the lower right hand the one that shows her coming through the transom. Then after you have played strong the name of Miss Dean and have mentioned her more recent successes and the fact that the picture is made from one of the Red Book stories, use a selling argument like this:

"She was a beautiful young society girl, yet she advertised for a safecracker. And when he met her she could tell him nothing more than that she wanted to get into a certain safe and that 'she had every moral right to what it contained,' though she admitted that she didn't know what was in it. And Boston Blackie, the burglar who had foiled the cleverest of the police, was led to the mystery of it to accompany her. This girl wasn't after money, she wasn't seeking documents to clear her name, she wasn't out for revenge. What could this girl want? That's the reason why Boston Blackie went with her, and you'll have to wait until he finds out before you can know."

HERE are some other selling lines that will fit in with most any of the illustrations suggested or with the ready prepared advertising:

"Gee, she must have been desperate. Here was a society girl in handsomest of evening gowns meeting the cleverest burglar in New York at a restaurant and offering him $500 to accompany her on a safe-cracking expedition. She wouldn't tell him why she wanted to get into it, but his love of adventure was enough to make him consent.

"And at midnight she dressed herself in boy's clothing, stuck a big revolver in her pocket and climbed down the fire escape to meet the crook. They carried through the game and got the 'goods' though they were both recognized as they fled. Then her 'pal' was captured and she, too, faced jail. How they came out of it triumphant and how the great romance is ended is something that is too good for mere printed words—you have to get the thrill of it on the screen."

"Just at midnight she laid aside her jewels and evening gown and donned a boy's suit and went to meet the cleverest crook in all New York. No, she hadn't joined his band, but she had hired and tempted him to accompany her on a safe-cracking job, all of her own. He doesn't know what it is all about, but he trusts the girl, and after you have seen Priscilla Dean in the part you'll agree that you couldn't have resisted her plea.

"They do the job, but they are just a few seconds too late, for though Blackie surrenders himself to save the girl, they are both of them caught—with the goods—and they are facing state's prison until a most amazing thing happens. You'll agree that Doris was a most amazing heroine and Blackie the cleverest and noblest crook you ever saw on the screen. And—yes, there's a touch of romance that makes your satisfaction with the picture complete."

AND these are shorter, with some referring even more directly to Miss Dean:

"Priscilla Dean in boy's clothes and helping to crack a safe. And then fleeing from the police, climbing through an open transom, and finally, with her beautiful hair streaming down her back, in handcuffs. She was a society girl, yet she was a burglar for the night—and a happy bride in the morning."

"There was something in a certain safe on which her happiness depended. Because she has been raised as a society girl she didn't hesitate. but she didn't know how to get in that safe. So she reasoned that the only thing to do was to hire a safecracker and she appealed to the chivalry of the cleverest one in New York. He didn't know her motive, but when she came to him, out of the millions in New York, he took her on trust. She won what she sought, and the clever crook what he had never even dared to hope for."

"It was a case of cracking a safe—or a broken heart, and this rich society girl didn't hesitate. She needed a burglar to complete her romance. There is where the thrill starts and it doesn't end until the most novel climax that you have ever known in a motion picture."

"In evening gown Priscilla Dean is a beauty, but when she dons boy's clothes and become a burglar—even for a night—she is irresistible. She's fascinated you before, but she'll completely win your heart in this one."

SAM D'GRASSE plays Boston Blackie in this picture and he does some mighty good work and we would not fail to mention his name as in the support. Ashton Dearholt, Lillian West, Sam Appel and Fred Kelsey are in the cast.

Nearly all of the scenes are night ones, and most of them interiors, including one scene in a brilliant New York restaurant. There need not be such emphasis placed on this, as it is only incidental, the exploitation resting on the tense interest in the developments of the robbery and its aftermath.

While the story is a tense one there is nothing of the morbid about it; in fact it is a picture that keeps you in a good humor throughout. Therefore you do not need contrast to relieve the feature, but at the same time we would use plenty of comedy and the music of the lighter sort. Except for the scenes in the restaurant where fox trots and one steps may be used the rest of the score calls for action music with agitato and mysterioso effects. There is just one thing that we would caution against and that is a suggestion in the musical score to use a phonograph record where Tosti's "Goodbye" is played on the machine. The reason for this is that you will kill the effect when the record is played over again and it tells the German secrets.

We would much rather play the "Goodbye" with the orchestra and then have the musicians tacit while the spoken record is supposed to be heard. The effect will be much more dramatic.

Lobby display should be largely confined to pictures of Miss Dean, of scene pictures and the name of the picture, but there won't be any harm in this one, if you find stunts profitable in your lobby.

On one side rig up a large burglar's lantern with a large hand holding it as if extending through the wall. On the opposite side have a large picture of Miss Dean with lights behind it, the lights of the lantern and the others being so timed together that the flash of the lantern will come at the same time the picture is lighted.

car—and a picture of this makes a striking advertisement—they see that they are being followed by another car. Blackie forces the girl to leave him and she does so, seeking refuge in Melchoir's apartments by climbing through the transom. But just after she has had time to examine the papers and find there is nothing in them Melchoir, the German and the others enter with Blackie their prisoner.

ARREST of the girl is demanded, too, and things look black for her until Blackie demands to test the phonograph records. One is put on Melchoir's machine and it proves apparently innocent enough for there come forth the strains of Tosti's "Goodbye." Then apparently trapped, Blackie stops the German's smile of triumph by the announcement that a good thief never takes part of the works and draws from his pocket the reproducer he has taken from the German's home.

The effect is electrical. Through grooving the matter in between the lines of the music the German had hidden there all of his secrets—secrets which proved him an enemy to the United States and warranted his arrest by the Secret Service officers. Then follows the confession: Doris and Melchoir are sweethearts, their future bound up in the success of the young American's efforts. But the girl knew that he could not use force to get the papers and so she had determined to do it for him. Hence she had become a silk-lined burglar and had employed Blackie.

And Blackie is not left out of the happy ending, for his work that night brings him a place in the Secret Service.

Comedy Plentiful on the Universal Schedule

THERE is variety a plenty in the comedies to be released by Universal the last week of March and the first week of April. Every phase of cinema comedy from animated cartoons to animal comedies is brought out by the scheduled releases for the two weeks.

On March 31 Lyons and Moran will be featured in "The Wife Breakers," a one-reeler dealing with the difficulties of two married men in bringing about law and order in their respective households, a Nestor entitled "Lizzie's Waterloo," and an L-Ko, "A Skate at Sea." The latter release features Charles Dorety, Eva Novak and Vera Reynolds and has been directed by Vin Moore who took his entire company on a steamship trip from Los Angeles to San Francisco and return in order to obtain some of the scenes.

The week of April 7 will bring out the fourth of Pat Sullivan's one-reel animated cartoons entitled "Charlie Treats 'Em Rough." The Lyons-Moran comedy for this week is titled "State Room Secrets" and the L-Ko, featuring Charlie from the Orient and a number of child actors is entitled "Charlie and the Children."

According to Julius Stern, president of the L-Ko Company, a number of two-reel special animal comedies are being produced for release as Century comedies, through Universal, in the near future. Universal has also announced that William S. Campbell is at work on the second of his series of special animal comedies, given the tentative title "And the Elephant Still Pursued Her." No definite releasing policy for the Campbell comedies has yet been announced by Universal but it is expected that the first of the series will be marketed within a short time.

Universal's several comedy companies have been conducting a vigorous campaign for stories for production and as a result several hundred scripts are now being read by the scenario writers.

Griffith Brings Several New Faces to Screen

"THE Girl Who Stayed at Home," the latest David Griffith production for release under the Artcraft banner, will present three players new to the Griffith forces in prominent roles, though such well known players as Robert Harron, Syn de Conde, and Tully Marshall will also be seen in the production.

S. E. V. Taylor wrote the story for "The Girl Who Stayed at Home," which has been set for release on March 23rd.

Carol Dempster, who portrays one of the leading roles, that of Mlle. Blossom, is new to motion pictures, but not to the fine arts. Under the tutelage of Ruth St. Denis she rose from a first year pupil to the position of solo dancer. Miss Dempster, under the direction of Griffith, has developed a character part that is said to be highly artistic.

Clarine Seymour, who appears in the role of "Cutie Beautiful," a cafe dancer, has been seen in the "minors" for several years at intervals, having begun her picture career in the days of Thanhouser, when she was wearing dresses to her knees. As a comedienne she has been seen on Broadway and in several road productions. As the careless cabaret singer who wants to be good and has a hard time doing it, Miss Seymour gets a good opportunity in the Griffith photoplays.

Richard Barthelmess also makes his first appearance in a Griffith production in one of the two leading male roles, the other being played by Robert Harron.

Johnson Shows Films in Washington

Martin Johnson, explorer and motion picture photographer, was accorded an extraordinary recognition when he was asked to show his pictures, "Cannibals of the South Seas," released through Exhibitors' Mutual, before the National Geographical Society at Washington, D. C. With his wife, Osa Johnson, who shared the adventures and danger of her husband in his South Seas expedition, Johnson appeared twice before the members of the scientific society on March 7 at the New Masonic Hall in the national capital.

Abrams Sells Beban Picture Rapidly

Hiram Abrams is at present adding other laurels to his achievements in the motion picture industry in the record-breaking time in which he is selling the first picture George Beban has ever offered to independent buyers, "Hearts of Men." Coming in the wake of the record he established in selling Mack Sennett's latest feature-comedy, "Yankee Doodle in Berlin," for the entire country within ten days, he is closely approximating this unique achievement in the disposal of his latest picture and the last one with which he will be engaged before assuming the General Managership of the United Artists Distributing Corporation.

Immediately after the first announcement appeared of the availability of "Hearts of Men" for the state right plan, Mr. Abrams closed sales for Illinois and the Pacific Coast States, and already negotiations for every other territory in the country have developed to such a point that it now appears that all the other rights will be disposed of within the next few days.

Verifies Engagement of Schertzinger

Upon the arrival of Samuel Goldwyn at the Culver City studios March 11 the president of the Goldwyn organization verified the engagement of Victor Schertzinger as director and advised he would direct Mabel Normand. It is not definitely determined whether he will continue with this star permanently, but arrangements are now being made for the filming of Miss Normand's next picture.

Mr. Goldwyn has leased an attractive residence in the fashionable Wilsire district of Los Angeles, and expects to reside here the greater part of the year.

A thousand extra people were used last week for the Rex Beach photoplay being directed by Reginald Barker when the Mardi Gras scenes for "The Crimson Gardenia" were filmed in front of one of Los Angeles' most famous Bohemian eating places, Cafe de Paris. This is in the older quarter of Los Angeles, and greatly resembles appearances of New Orleans scenes.

Burke Subject Shown in Los Angeles

The first showing of a five reel subject produced by P. H. Burke under the direction of Robert Thornby, and titled "Are You Legally Married?" was made March 16 at the Rialto theatre, Los Angeles, which has been leased by L. J. Meyberg, who has purchased an interest in the picture and will supervise the sale of the film on the state rights basis. This picture was filmed at the Brunton studios, with a cast composed of Lou Cody, Rosemary Theby and Henry Woodward, from a story by Miles Dobson, continuity of which was written by Henry Warnack. The story is based on a United States Supreme Court decision, and shows that more than 600,000 couples who think they are married, are not legally married. Cardinal Gibbons and other prominent churchmen of other denominations have been shown the subject, and have highly endorsed the picture.

World Changes Title of Picture

World Pictures announce the change of title of "A Scrap of Paper," in which Montagu Love, Carlyle Blackwell, June Elvidge, Evelyn Greeley, Johnny Hines, Jack Drumier, Madge Evans and others of the star contingent, who are regular World headliners, to "Three Green Eyes." This change was made out of deference to the owners of the play of that name. "Three Green Eyes" will be released by the World in April.

Human Nature Wins

Perhaps the two elements that have done most to popularize the famous O. Henry stories are their keen understanding of human nature and their inevitable surprise finishes.

"The Unknown Quantity," in which Vitagraph will star Corinne Griffith, has these two elements to a more marked degree than any of the long list of O. Henry stories that Vitagraph has screened.

"Oh Boy" Finds Way to Screen

Albert Capellani to Film Stage Musical Comedy for Release Through Pathe—Creighton Hale In It

Harold Lloyd and Bebe Daniels Are the Rolin Fun Makers in "A Dutiful Dub," Distributed by Pathe

"Oh, Boy!" the musical comedy, is to be produced as a motion picture by the Albert Capellani Productions, Inc. and released by Pathe. The stage production, which was originally presented by Elliott and Comstock at the Princess Theatre, ran there for nearly a year and then moved to the Casino Theatre, where it continued its successs for another year. So phenomenal was its success that, immediately after its premier, companies were sent touring the country with great success.

It is interesting to note that Creighton Hale, who with June Caprice is to co-star in the motion picture Version, created the principal juvenile role in the stage production. In the original cast Creighton Hale was one of the featured players, while others who aided in making "Oh, Boy!" were Anna Wheaton, Justine Johnston, Hal Forde, Marjorie Roland and later Joseph Stanley, who joined the company in New York.

Adolphe Osso, who negotiated the purchase of the motion picture rights to "Oh, Boy!" stated that the decision on the part of the company to produce that piece was due to the fact that the huge success of the sage production was attributed, not only to the excellent music and staging of the play, but also to what is seldom the case with the musical-comedies—a real uproarously, funny story.

"This important ingredient, coupled to the cumulative value of the enormous advertising both in the big cities and on the road is bound to revert and be of tremendous assistance to the exhibitors in packing them in, when they play the motion picture," said Mr. Osso.

„It is doubtful whether there is a person in this country who has not heard of "Oh, Boy!" and who would not immediately identify it as the greatest comedy success in years. Although it was extensively presented as a stage piece, it is a fact that it always played to capacity business everywhere, and could have played on indefinitely, were the theatres available for much longer runs. Furthermore, "Oh, Boy!" is uniquely and exceptionally suited for screen production and offers even greater opportunities to present the rapid-fire comedy, than did the stage version."

"Diane of the Green Van" Claims Romance

ALL the romance that could be jammed into any adventuresome girl's life, if she started out in a green van with no other purpose than to find adventure, is said to be crowded into the five reels of "Diane of the Green Van," which Alma Rubens has just completed for release through Exhibitors Mutual. Leona Dalrymple, who wrote the story, is a romantic girl herself, and she has virtually lived the life which Miss Rubens portrays in "Diane of the Green Van," which will introduce the young star as the head of her own company, "The Winsome Star's Corporation." Robertson-Cole Company control the world's rights to all Miss Rubens' productions through the Winsome Stars Corporation.

Wallace Worsley directed "Diane of the Green Van," and with the great amount of splendid screen material furnished by the story, and the remarkably well balanced cast he selected to support Miss Rubens, the production will be one of the season's most popular plays, according to officials of Exhibitors Mutual.

Nigel, of the Royal Flying Corps, as leading man for Miss Rubens, is only one of half a dozen supporting players in the cast of "Diane of the Green Van." Wedgewood Nowell. Lemar Johnstone, Harry Van Meter, Josephine Crowell and Ed. Brady are among the other players who have served to make "Diane of the Green Van" a novel and well acted photo drama.

Thomas J. Geraghty made the screen version of the Dalrymple story, which was a $10,000 prize winner in a best seller competition conducted by a Chicago publishing house a couple of years back.

Pathe Promotes Heller in Charlotte

Pathe Exchange, Inc., announces the appointment of E. E. Heller, formerly booker of the Charlotte Exchange to the rank of manager of that office. He entered the employ of Pathe on April 1, 1915, as bookkeeper of the Kansas City Exchange. Later he was appointed booker at Kansas City, and thence transferred to the Charlotte office on March 10, 1917. His appointment as manager is a reward of four years of loyal and efficient service with the house of Pathe, which is in line with its policy to promote from the ranks.

The appointment of George L. Benner, assistant manager of the Cleveland Exchange, is also announced. He entered the employ of Pathe in May, 1918, as cashier.

Goldwyn Re-engages Tom Moore

Star Signs Long Term Contract with Producer and Appears as Mounted Policeman in "One of the Finest"

SAMUEL GOLDWYN, in far-off California, telegraphs his New York organization that he has signed a long term contract with Tom Moore, which assures the continuance of this star in the Goldwyn family for several years to come.

Tom Moore is one of those lucky personalities whose elevation as a star "just happened" as a certain dramatic Topsy of the drama "just growed." For a long time he had been one of the popular leading men of the screen and on occasions had been co-starred, usually in a way that gave his feminine co-star a little the best of it in the announcements, this being due to the prevailing belief of many producers that girls are the only ones to make a star investment in when producing pictures.

As a leading man with Madge Kennedy, Mae Marsh and other of the Goldwyn stars Mr. Moore so rapidly increased his popularity that not more than three productions had been issued when Goldwyn exhibitors in every section of the country began demanding: "Make Tom Moore a star." The result of their insistence was that in its second season Goldwyn made the decision and in "Just for Tonight" Tom Moore went out "on his own" in the screen drama and registered a most thorough success.

It is violating no internal secret to reveal that Goldwyn has never had an exhibitor complaint on a Tom Moore picture and that it has had an overwhelming amount of exhibitor approval. To date the star series Goldwyn productions in which Tom Moore has been starred are "Just for Tonight," by Chas. A. Logue; "Thirty a Week," by Thompson Buchanan; "Go West, Young Man," by Willard Mack; "A Man and His Money," by Frederic S. Isham, produced by arrangement with the Bobbs, Merrill Co. The last three of these productions have been directed by Harry Beaumont. His forthcoming production after "A Man and His Money" is "One of the Finest," by J. Clarkson Miller, in which he is to be seen as a mounted traffic policeman.

Warns Against Use of Griffith Name

Albert L. Grey, general manager of D. W. Griffith's production, "Hearts of the World," this week issued a warning to exhibitors who use the name of D. W. Griffith to advertise pictures which they may have booked. Mr. Grey states that it has been called to his attention in two instances where exhibitors have used Griffith's name in advertising "The Hun Within." Mr. Grey terms this misrepresentation, as the production was not made by Griffith.

Mr. Griffith's name can be used only as producer of the following pictures, according to Mr. Grey: "The Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance," "Hearts of the World," "The Great Love," "The Greatest Thing In Life," "A Romance of Happy Valley," "The Girl Who Stayed at Home," "The Fall of Babylon," and "The Mother and the Law."

Critic Likes Lois Weber Direction

So enthusiastic was Earl Dorsey, dramatic editor of the Washington Herald, over the realism of the "practical" settings in Lois Weber's First National production, "A Midnight Romance," that he wrote the following, entitled "Lois Weber, a Realist."

"It is not to be wonderd that Lois Weber has been termed the 'Belasco of the screen.' She leaves nothing to the imagination in staging a play for registration upon celluloid through the lens of a camera. When she shows a boudoir scene it is not an accumulation of paper mache 'props.' If the scenario calls for a hotel scene, Mrs. Weber-Smalley hires a complete hostelry, if need be, and pictures the place as it actually is, and not as a couple of carpenters and a studio manager with a couple of blank walls and a vacant lot imagine it to be."

"Lion and Mouse" Plays Country-Wide Bookings

The spread of the popularity of Vitagraph's production of the great Charles Klein drama, "The Lion and the Mouse," in which Alice Joyce is featured, is said to now cover the country like a blanket. Big runs on the production have worked from the Atlantic seaboard across the continent to the coast and the week of March 16 sees "The Lion and the Mouse" featured at the Tivoli theatre in San Francisco.

The picture is booked for the Ascher theatres in Chicago and into the Lyceum theatre in Winnipeg, Canada.

Vitagraph's New York branch office reports that every print of "The Lion and the Mouse" is booked solid for the next sixty days, and similar conditions are said to prevail in all the branches where the big first run bookings have been played and where the prints are now working over the territory.

Houdini Takes Well in Foreign Climes

According to Export & Import Film Co., foreign film distributors, Houdini in "The Master Mystery," the super serial produced by B. A. Rolfe for Octagon Films, Inc., is a "knockout" in the foreign market.

"The picture is now being shown in every open country throughout the world and is meeting with phenomenal success," says an official of Export & Import Film Co. and an instance of the acclaim with which the picture has been received is indicated in the following cablegram received from the firm in London which bought the picture for the United Kingdom.

"'Private press view representative leading London papers — Times, Telegraph, Post, News, Mail, Globe, Chronicle, Standard, Tatler, Sketch, Graphic, leading weeklies and Bisley Bennett acclaim Houdini in "The Master Mystery" unparallelled triumph. Predict all records here when released.'"

Oakman Plays Leads for Viola Dana

Wheeler Oakman, considered one of the talented of the younger leading men, is back from France with "The Grizzlies," San Francisco's 144th Artillery regiment. Immediately upon receiving his discharge from Uncle Sam's fighting forces Oakman was selected by Maxwell Karger, Director General of Metro, to play the leading role opposite the vivacious Viola Dana in her new picture, "Madelon of the Red Woods."

Oakman will be remembered, prior to enlisting in the Army, as the able leading man with Edith Storey in the Metro All Star Series productions "Revenge" and "The Claim," and his engagement with Viola Dana marks his re-entry into the silent drama after a year's absence.

Desmond Completes Comedy-Drama Subject

The latest comedy drama completed at the studios of the Jesse D. Hampton Productions features William Desmond in the part of an adventurer in over-alls with the locale in a Central American Republic.

The situations woven by George Elwood Jenks into the story "Whitewashed Walls," written by Ethel and James Dorrance and which Exhibitors Mutual will release, give ample opportunity for the comedy work of the well known young actor.

Bonus Plan Started by Famous Players

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has inaugurated a weekly bonus plan for its sales force in all the branch exchanges, effective March 16.

In his letter to the Branch managers, setting forth the system in detail, Walter E. Greene, Vice-President and Managing Director, Department of Distribution, makes a frank statement of the company's objects and desires.

Pathe Plans Campaign for "Tiger's Trail"

AN unprecedented billboard showing and publicity campaign nation-wide in its scope will exploit "The Tiger's Trail," Pathe's serial of mystery and adventure, starring Ruth Roland and presenting a big cast including George Larkin, Frederick L. Kohler, and others.

The story, dealing with a strange tiger-worshipping cult of Hindus, is the work of Arthur B. Reeve, author of the "Craig Kennedy" stories and several previous Pathe serials, and Charles A. Logue, author of many successful photoplays. It was put in scenario form by Gilsen Willets, the well-known novelist and world traveler, and is being made at the Astra West Coast Studios.

From the poster and publicity viewpoint alone, "The Tiger's Trail" will be one of Pathe's most notable achievements. As has been the case with previous serials, Pathe's plan contemplates a campaign that will bring the production forcibly to the attention of exhibitors and fans alike, and, with this end in view, the masterful 24-sheet will be posted in every city of importance in the United States.

The 24-sheet, considered as a work of art, is striking and attention compelling. It is the work of Dan Smith, famed as a portrayer of animal life and an illustrator of magazine stories and novels.

In addition to the 24-sheet, the advertising matter to be issued on "The Tiger's Trail" includes the following: 1, 3 and 6-sheet posters on each episode; photographic lobby display; a 2-color herald; one-column cut (three styles) of Ruth Roland, one two-cut of Ruth Roland, one half-column cut of Ruth Roland, one-column cut of George Larkin; a two-column scene cut on each of the first three episodes; seven line cuts; black and white photos of Ruth Roland and George Larkin; a 22 x 28 sepia photograph of Ruth Roland; four slides; and a two-color campaign book containing reproductions of the advertising matter, with publicity, covering the entire serial, the cover to be a reproduction of the 24-sheet poster.

In Rothapfel Comedy

Yvonne Sheldon, formerly of the Ziegfeld Follies, has the principal feminine role in the comedy number of Samuel L. Rothapfel's first Rothapfel Unit Program. Miss Sheldon was considered one of the most beautiful girls of the famous Ziegfeld beauty chorus. The comedy is from a script by George V. Hobart, playwright, and was produced under the direction of Wally Van with Mr. Rothapfel supervising.

Third from Kelly

"A House Divided," J. Stuart Blackton's next feature release, is the third consecutive Blackton feature produced from an Anthony Paul Kelly script. The author of "Three Faces East," the current Broadway stage success, adapted "The Common Cause" for Commodore Blackton from the play by J. Hartley Manners and Major Ian Hay Beith. Vitagraph is now distributing this special.

H. Garson Returns to West Coast

Producer of "The Unpardonable Sin," Piloted Detroit Opening—Clara Kimball Young Completes New Picture

AFTER what is declared to be one of the most strenuous weeks in his career,—turning away thousands at his Broadway Strand theatre in Detroit while showing "The Unpardonable Sin," and selling territorial rights said to run up into the hundred thousands—Harry Garson, producer of this Blanche Sweet feature, has returned to Los Angeles.

Mr. Garson returned to the Coast to look after his Clara Kimball Young interests, and to put on "The Unpardonable Sin" in Los Angeles, when it will be given a run at the Majestic Theatre at dollar and a half prices. As soon as this is fairly launched, Garson will return East to follow out his policy of exploiting first runs in the principal cities throughout the country.

In the meantime the picture is reported as playing to capacity at the Adams Theatre in Detroit, where it began its first week's run at this house, and its third week in Detroit.

It is said that offers continue to pour in for State rights but Garson sits tight not being disposed to let very much territory get away from him. H. F. Jans bought New Jersey and will open the picture at Klaw & Erlanger's Broad Street Theatre at Newark next month. Washington, Oregon and Idaho, Michigan and Indiana have been sold, as well as New York state and all foreign rights.

Miss Young has just completed her first picture "The Better Wife" which will be marketed independently, and not through the Select Pictures Corporation as formerly, and is already laying plans for the next picture which will be from a play that is regarded as one of the choice theatrical properties.

This will be given a monster production, it is said, the announcement of which will be made soon.

The big scene in her latest production has finally been taken. When it was originally planned to take this scene Miss Young's car ran into a seventeen year old youth and in spite of the fact that he escaped very luckily from serious injuries she insisted on taking him herself to the hospital.

This necessitated the dismissal of the directors and cast for that day. The accident occurred on Hollywood boulevard while the star was on her way to take part in a thrilling scene in "The Better Wife" and she says that although her chauffeur was only driving fifteen miles an hour the incident furnished a real thrill, although happily it did not turn out a tragedy.

Universal Makes an Explanation

In announcing the screen version of Pierre Louy's "La Femme et le Pantin," recently, the Universal scenario department erred in referring to the novel, a classic of French literature, as a play. This error is regrettable, due to the fact that there exists a play, "Woman and Her Puppet," an early dramatization of the novel, not known in America, but a big success in France, where at present Regina Badet, in the role of the dancer, is making it the talk of the nation. With this play the screen version of Madame Eve has no connection.

The Universal film version, which will star Priscilla Dean, it is expected, will take full advantage of the range of the narrative and unlike the French stage play, the cinema attraction will have an entirely different climax—one said to be more intense and pleasing, inasmuch as being unlike the stage, the screen has no limitations. So new, novel and appealing is the theme provided by Madame Eve, that though the novel has not been translated to date, it has proved so attractive in the American mind that it is rumored an adaptation for the stage as well as the screen may be made in the near future.

It is expected that Universal's adaptation will be produced under the tentative title, "Love's Puppets." Miss Dean will undoubtedly begin work on the story following the completion of a screen vehicle provided by Bayard Veiller.

Holmes Plans Summer Trip Abroad

Burton Holmes, traveller and lecturer and creator of the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travelogues, who is now in Chicago, where he is delivering his series of Travelogue lectures on "The Yanks" at Orchestral Hall, announces that he will go to Europe this coming summer to obtain material for lectures and screen subjects to be used as a sequel to his current series. Consequently, his next season's series will show Europe in the re-making, the pictures and lectures dealing with liberated Belgium and Flanders, the occupied Rhineland, "Italia Redenta" and vanished Russia.

Of interest to the ever-increasing number of exhibitors of the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travelogues is the fact that Mr. Holmes has inaugurated an advertising policy whereby his illustrated lectures are directly tied up with his current screen subjects. As a feature of this campaign there are now being distributed to patrons of the Holmes lectures at Orchestra Hall a complete list of all the motjon picture theatres in Chicago and suburbs where the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travelogues can be seen, with the days of the week on which they are shown. This will be done in all the cities in which Mr. Holmes will lecture during the remainder of the present season.

The subject of the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travelogue release of March 16 is "Gay Paree in War Time," which shows that life in the French capital during the war was not all blood and thunder.

Irene Bordoni in Sawyer-Lubin Film

A special surprise is in store for motion picture patrons when the initial presentation of "Virtuous Men" is made in the near future. This will be in the nature of a well known stage player to be seen in the forthcoming Ralph Ince Film Attraction. Irene Bordoni, at present in "Sleeping Partners" current in the Bijou theatre, New York, will be seen in "Virtuous Men." Incidentally, the presence of Miss Bordoni in the first S-L Picture marks her debut on the screen in film entertainment of any type.

Joins Goldwyn Scenario Staff

Thompson Buchanan, playwright and incidentally author of "Thirty a Week," a Tom Moore-Goldwyn subject, has joined the Goldwyn Pictures scenario department, arriving during the past week in Los Angeles to take up his new affiliation.

Mr. Buchanan has had years of training in the drama and as a dramatic critic on three of the newspapers of his native city, Louisville, Ky. Among the novels of which he is the author are "The Castle Comedy," "Judith Triumphant," "Making People Happy" and "The Second Wife."

Two Michelena Pictures Soon Ready

Following the announcement by Beatrice Michelena and her own company of the completion of "Just Squaw," word comes from San Francisco that two other productions starring this actress, which have been months in the making, are about ready for screening. Miss Michelena has been quietly working on these three pictures for a period of twelve months.

The feature pictures which are now receiving their finishing touches, are "The Deadline" and "The Spitfire," attractions which are said to contain a wealth of screen entertainment and which will prove admirable successors to "Just Squaw."

According to the information from San Francisco, the sample print of "Just Squaw" will be forwarded East within the next week. A national publicity and advertising campaign is being arranged for the Michelena pictures and, according to Miss Michelena, no big film attraction of the past has ever received more elaborate support from a promotion angle.

As soon as the campaign on the first three Michelena pictures is well under way, Miss Michelena will begin big preparations for the filming of another series of three productions. Virtually four months will be devoted to the making of each feature, for under the present arrangements, a full year will be given the popular screen star to complete the three pictures.

Early in April the releasing and other details in connection with the issuance of the initial Michelena picture, "Just Squaw," will be announced.

Leads for Tom Mix

Indicative of the high grade of casts with which William Fox surrounds his stars is the announcement this week that Juanita Hansen, who has been a star in her own right, is to be leading woman for Tom Mix in the whirlwind Western star's forthcoming production, which bears the temporary title, "The Romance of Cow Hollow." This picture will be made under the direction of Arthur Rosson at Hollywood, Cal.

F-P-Lasky Coast Plant Hums

Resume of Plans for Coming Year Points Toward Increased Production of Big Specials

"MORE big special productions" was the keynote of a statement issued last week by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation regarding production plans at the West Coast studios during the coming year.

Specials just completed include, "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," staged by Hugh Ford from the Hall Caine story, "For Better, For Worse," a Cecil DeMille production from a drama by Edgar Selwyn, and the latest Griffith-Artcraft, "The Girl Who Stayed at Home."

Plans for forthcoming productions include the presentation of Captain Robert Warwick in "Secret Service," to be produced by Hugh Ford; Irene Castle in the Robert W. Chambers story, "The Firing Line;" and "Peter Ibbetson," with John, Lionel and Ethel Barrymore in the cast.

Star series productions contemplated at the western studios will present such Paramount players as Bryant Washburn, Ethel Clayton, Wallace Reid, Lila Lee, Vivian Martin, etc. The comedies to be staged in the west include the Arbuckle two reelers under the new three million dollar contract; and the Paramount-Mack Sennet releases."

Thomas H. Ince, now safely housed in his new plant at Culver City, is preparing to make a large number of Paramount films with Dorothy Dalton, Charles Ray and Enid Bennett and also a quantity of personally supervised specials similar to "The False Faces."

The William S. Hart pictures produced under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince will be other features of the output. Mr. Hart has invaded the scenario field once again and his latest Artcraft picture is the work of Lambert Hillyer and Mr. Hart, who also collaborated in the direction. "The Money Corral" is the title.

U. K. Whipple, International staff cameraman, has gone into Germany with the American army of occupation as the first independent motion picture cameraman to accompany the Allied Armies into enemy territory. Heretofore all pictures taken in Germany and showing the activities of the army of occupation have been made by photographers attached to the United States Signal Corps.

On December 2, Whipple went to France aboard the "George Washington." Upon his arrival at Brest, Whipple obtained some exceptional pictures of President Wilson and President Poincare, General Pershing and others who greeted the American statesman at the pier.

United Tries the Bonus System

Employees to Be Promoted from the Ranks When Ability Is Shown—Think Exhibitor Will Profit

IN the belief that intensified service to its Exhibitor-members through the resulting incentive to initiative and industry among its branch managers, representatives in the field, and the home office forces, United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., has established and put into immediate operation a community plan of promotions and bonuses on the order that maintains in the Civil Service for its managers and other employees.

By the movement, as announced by J. A. Berst, president of United, the prevailing tendency among executive officials to go outside the field of the existing staff to fill new appointments for arising vacancies, is to yield to a plan of selection from among existing employees whose qualifications and suitability for higher positions, shall, wherever possible, receive priority of consideration in preference to the prevalent system of importations from outside personnel.

The first application of the plan is being directed toward the field sales forces. An announcement sent out last week to all branch offices of United put this promotion by merit policy on record for all its sectional and divisional employees.

"A careful daily record is being kept of every salesman's work," the announcement states, "As well as of his expenses, so that it is possible to tell at a glance which salesmen in the organization are producing the most effective results." With this record as a guide, the statement adds, United will endeavor, wherever possible, to fill all vacancies in its sales and managerial staffs by promotion from among those men whose records justify such promotion. This plan, it is thought, will work out advantageously for two reasons: first, because the United plan is more thoroughly understood by United's own salesmen, men specially trained to appreciate the merits of the co-operative system, than by managers who might be drafted from other companies; and secondly, because the policy of promotion for merit will serve as a great incentive to bring forth the best efforts of the men in United employ and thus induce an efficiency which will tend to the benefit of United Exhibitor-members.

The first results under this policy have already been recorded. C. F. Parr, until recently a United salesman in the Denver Exchange, has been appointed manager of the Salt Lake City Exchange. Homer Howard, also, who made an exceptionally good record as salesman in the Buffalo district, has been promoted to the managership of the exchange located in that city.

"Common Clay" Sets New Pathe Record

"Common Clay," the A. H. Woods' screen presentation of the Harvard Prize Play by Cleves Kinkead, is said to have broken all booking records for a special feature and Pathe Exchange, Inc., is in constant receipt of the hearty commendation from exhibitors all over the country who tell the same story of satisfied and enthusiastic crowds and packed houses. Martin Johnson Plans Three-Year Journey

ROBERTSON-COLE this week announced that Martin Johnson and his wife, of "Cannibals of the South Seas" fame, are planning a three-year trip back to the cannibal isles.

The Johnsons will start on what they confidently expect will prove to be a three-year trip fraught with all manner of dangers at the hands of cannibalistically inclined savages of the South Seas and the wild bushmen of the back country of the Malaita, Monday afternoon, March 24.

Preceding their departure on the Twentieth Century, Mr. and Mrs. Johnson will be the guests of honor at a luncheon at the Hotel Astor, at which several score of their intimate friends and professional associates will bid them "good-by," and sing "Aloha Oe."

At Chicago, Mr. and Mrs. Johnson will make a brief step, and will personally appear at the Randolph theatre, where the "Martin Johnson's Cannibals of the South Seas" pictures are the current attraction. The next stop will be at Independence, Kansas, the "home town" of the Johnsons. Thence a brief stay at Kansas City where the patrons of the Doric theatre will be privileged to hear Mr. Johnson relate some of his vivid experiences among the South Sea savages, and then on to Los Angeles, where the travelers will visit the producing units of the Robertson-

Enid Bennett in "Partners Three"

WHILE the greater part of the action of "Partners Three" is laid in the West, in fact, on the desert—we would advise you to keep away from the ordinary "western" exploitation if you are using this one. With due emphasis on the attractive title and the name of the star, Enid Bennett, the appeal should be made straight to the heart.

Miss Bennett has been largely identified with comedy roles during her motion picture career and if you want to appeal directly to her admirers you have a chance to tell them that she appears in an entirely different characterization, for here she has a straight dramatic role. But we would build the greater part of the exploitation on the picture itself and its dramatic qualities.

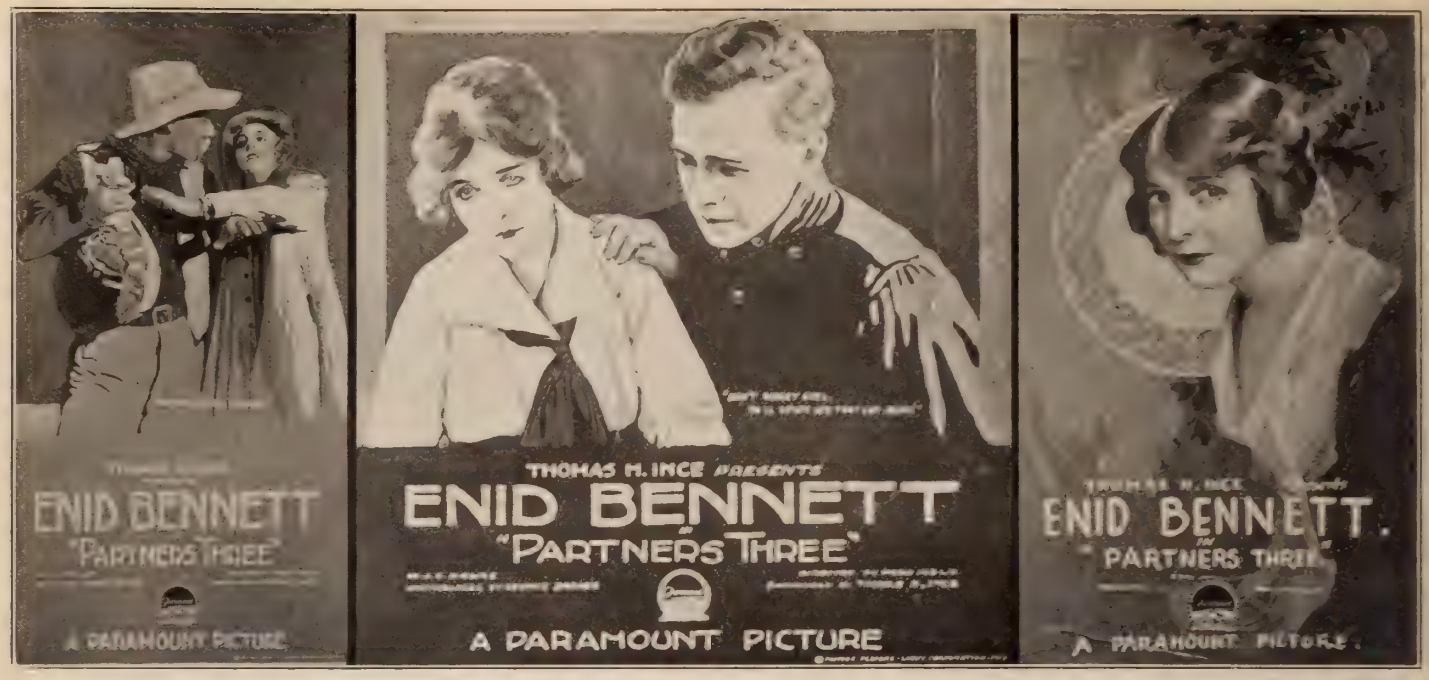
First we would disabuse the public mind of the impression that this is one of the westerns where the hero is riding around on a bucking horse and using the lasso and "gun" at every opportunity—or rather we would not leave that impression in the first place. Keep the intensely human side of it dominant and appeal at the same time to the red-blooded element in the men and the love of romance among the women. Call it:

"A throbbing American story of a wonderful love and a terrible hate."

NOW here is the story: Agnes Cuyler, through the death of her parents and lack of training for the serious side of life, is compelled to become a singer in a cabaret, a life that she loathes. She is entirely apart from the other women of the place, doing her bit of song and dance and then retiring from the scene, much to the disgust of the proprietor. And so when a group of rich western men appear and one of them is attracted to her the cabaret owner demands that she sit at their table.

Grant Haywood, one of them, immediately undertakes liberties, to the disgust of his companions, and is repulsed. But he is strangely smitten with the girl and for days afterwards lavishes presents on her. He tells her that he is a millionaire in the west and presses his suit so earnestly, while the spell of loneliness is so strong upon her that she marries him—more to escape the life of the cabaret than because she really loves him. He has pictured the west to her as a land where her soul may be free from the sordidness of the city, and this wins her.

But once in the desert town that he calls his home, he reverts to himself, a drunkard and a scoundrel. And so when the two are presumably leaving the town for their home the girl seeks to prevent him from drinking more and when the bottle is smashed he hurls her from the automobile and leaves her to perish in the desert. Alone she struggles along and finally faints from the lack of water, but just at that moment there comes on the scene Hassayampa Hardy, described as a desert rat, an old man who is still hoping to strike it rich. He takes her to his little shack and revives her.



REALIZING that he cannot keep the girl in such an abode alone with him Hardy takes her to the nearest town where the eating house is always in need of waitresses, because the ones employed marry off so rapidly. There she quickly gets a position. Then one day there comes staggering into the place Arthur Gould, an invalid from the East who finds that his physical condition prevents anyone from employing him. He is broke and tries to steal something to eat. Agnes catches him, but after hearing his story she declares that she will care for him and gave him a room.

Then the tongue of gossip starts a-wagging and a group of the women of the village call on her to demand that she leave the town. But it is just at that moment that Hardy, come to the village for his supplies, chances on the scene and with a few words concerning the past of some members of the "committee" sends them away in hasty retreat. With the news that he expects to make a strike the three of them then form a partnership and take their departure to Hardy's cabin, Gould all this time believing that Agnes is his daughter, as the old man has explained to all for her protection.

THEN comes the "strike." But while all looks so bright for the partners three there comes an unexpected turn. Haywood had been seen to drive away from the town in which he made his headquarters with his wife, and when he failed to bring her back he was questioned by the other men. For a time he made the excuse that she was visiting some friends in another town, but the demand is so strong that he goes to seek her. It is while he is driving over the desert that he discovers the mine of the partners three and then the claim papers buried under the marker. He is astounded to find that this paper contains the names of Hardy, whom he has robbed and who has sworn to kill Haywood, and of Agnes.

Taking the paper with him Haywood goes under cover of night to the shack where Agnes sleeps alone, the two male partners retiring to the open, and finally persuades her that he has quit drinking and reformed, beseeching her to return with him and reminding her of the pledge that she gave at the altar. Her woman's trust causes her to yield, and after she has started to the automobile to accompany him, the villain opens the spigots to release the water supply and steals the note that Agnes has left explaining her departure.

MORNING comes and the men find Agnes gone without explanation, the water disappeared and the mining claim still missing. They refuse to believe that the girl has played them false and driven by thirst start out to make their way across the desert to the town. On the way Gould is overcome and Hardy is forced to leave him there as he makes his way to the town.

There it is that Agnes discovers both the claim and the note that she had written to her partners in her husband's clothes. She denounces him and he is about to kill her when Hardy appears. Faced with the man who has sworn to kill him, Haywood leaps from the window and into his automobile and starts out to escape into the desert. But the terrible vengeance is following.

Telling the girl of Gould's plight Hardy bids her take his buckboard and find the man while he himself starts out rifle in hand to trail the man he has sworn to die. Then come the most dramatic elements of the picture. While Agnes is in her quest, finally succeeding, Hardy gets close enough to Haywood to fire a shot into his gasoline tank. When his car comes to a halt he spies Hardy, rifle in hand approaching. The villain fires shot after shot, but still the avenger comes on, tongue and rifle silent.

Haywood flees on foot, and soon his struggle to escape the desert thirst comes upon him and as he raises his canteen to drink there is another shot and the water is lost. On and on he struggles, suffering the tortures that he has inflicted on his wife and her partners—but he is not to be rescued, but to perish in the sands amid the rattlesnakes and the skeletons. And then, with Hardy telling the girl that his hand has not taken the life of her husband, she is free to place her heart where it has been won—with Gould.

HERE are some of the selling lines:

"Her soul was pure, and she loathed life in a carberet, and so when there came to her a man and told her of the great land of noble things in the west she agreed to marry him. Then in the middle of the desert she found the character of the man she had married—a man who cast her from him to die of thirst when she kept him from drink. Again he found her happy, and once more his persuasion brought her back to him—this time for her to learn his greater infamy. How he perished in the very way that he had planned that she and her two partners should die is a drama so startling that you can never forget it."

"Men that she knew were all alike—for she was a singer in a cabaret, a life that she hated with every fibre of her being. Then there came a westerner, told of the clean life in the great west and offered his name. And because she wanted to live where all was pure and open she accepted him.

"In the desert she found his true character, but when he had left her to die of thirst she found one of nature's noblemen, and through him a youth that made the rest of the company—Partners Three. With them her husband found her again and she trusted him once more, to find that he had robbed her partners and had left them to perish on the burning sands. She hated herself because she had innocently brought evil on her friends—but it was a mild hate compared with the terrible vengeance that set everything right with the world again."

YOU may possibly conclude that these lines flavor too much of the gruesome, but we don't agree with you, for where there is a happy ending and the villain gets his just reward it is only the dramatic that appeals and creates word of mouth advertising for your theatre. We believe that if you pass up the strength and the unusual character of this sort you will lose something in the long run.

But here is a lighter one:

"This little cabaret girl hated her life—she longed for the companionship of clean people. She thought that she had found one, and she married him.

"Abandoned in the desert there came one of the real men—a grizzled seeker of gold. And in the little restaurant where she worked there came another, and younger one, and him she befriended.

"Partners three they became and you can imagine the romance of the life in the desert shack, the search for desert gold, and their success. Of course there are thrills, for she had married the meanest man in the world, but they only add to the interest with everything coming out just right in the end."

AND then some shorter ones:

In the cabaret her heart was parched for an honest love. In the desert she found it and you will rejoice with her after you have seen this amazing story unfolded."

"From cabaret to the western desert is a long jump, but this little girl made it because she hungered for an honest love. And she found it—only after her husband had left her to die of thirst on the hot sands."

"Partners Three they were—and all broke financially. But they had a wealth of courage and they were rich in the sense of right. They shared in the perils of the desert and in the pitfalls of villainy, but there came to them wealth and a glorious happiness."

"Years of life in the desert hadn't weakened his oath of vengeance or his faith in the good and true. And the way he kept his word and brought happiness to his young partners is one of the most gripping stories ever told."

At left Haywood casts his bride out in the desert; in the center, a close-up of her, and at the right he comes again to the miner's cabin to claim her

Action and Tense Story Should Give Big Appeal

OF course you are going to take full advantage of Miss Bennett's popularity and her success in her recent productions, and after you have done that you should put the greatest stress on the interest in the story. Without hitting any sensational high spots, there is a line here that you might use to advantage:

"Have you ever picked up a wonderfully interesting novel and refused to lay it down until you have read to the last line? This is the sort of a story you will find in 'Partners Three.' You will be wanting the reels to unwind faster to bring you the solution, and then when it's all over you'll be sorry there's not more to see."

You should be willing to use larger space than usual, for in the first place you want either a striking picture of the star or a scene from the production and then you want room enough left to tell something of the character of the picture. We have given you some lines that indicate the thrills. Don't make the vengeance idea too strong, because you may leave some with the impression that this spirit runs through the production. As a matter of fact it is a tensely dramatic story with the sort of an ending that al' will agree is perfectly right.

AFTER you have used the striking picture of Miss Bennett we would advise you to refer to some of her most recent successes, for they have been comedies and they will serve to lighten up your display. Among them have been: "When Do We Eat?" "The Vamp," "Fuss and Feathers" and "Happy Though Married."

Then the title wants to be played in strong type. It suggests romance and adventure and this can even be strengthened if you will have a cut made from any of the several stills which shows the girl, the youth and the old miner together. There is one that shows them seated by the campfire, but in this case the black background should be cut out. Another shows the trio panning gold.

Keep away from those pictures that show Miss Bennett almost dying in the desert, but if you have to use one of these be sure to explain the happy ending of the picture.

Use the picture to attract attention to your display and you are pretty apt to make the people read your selling lines, and then you have them.

By all means refer to the fact that Robert McKim in the cast. He is known wherever screen villains have been seen, and therefore under the name of Miss Bennett we would employ the lines:

"Supported by that most convincing of all screen villains, Robert McKim."

HERE is a stunt that will attract attention and you can probably get the cooperation of one of your newspapers in putting it over. Most of you will remember how popular it used to be for the papers to publish the story of "the meanest man in the world."

In cooperation with your paper offer a series of prizes for the best stories of the meanest man in the world. Not only will this draw from the past all the tales of the villainy that have been printed, but it is also likely to stir up a lot of fun and if you will use this a week in advance of the showing of the picture you will get the fullest returns.

Have a board of judges pass upon the merits of the answers and then the newspaper will probably print again the winning answers. After that has been done take the winning answer and include it in a striking display advertisement and caption it!

"Judges in the Evening Times contest have decided that this was the meanest man in the world."

Then reproduce the winning story set in ordinary newspaper type single column; and below this say:

"But then they had never seen 'Partners Three' for here the villain left his bride to die in the desert, sought her back that he might rob her and her two partners whom he thought he had doomed to death. You'll agree that he is the meanest man yet—and that he got the very right punishment while those he sought to wrong, 'lived happily ever after.'"

IF you use the letter plan with your mailing list we would call attention to the fact that Miss Bennett is here seen in a powerfully dramatic story and we would call attention to the story as we have suggested in the second paragraph of this article.

There should be nothing freakish about your lobby display. Don't yield to any temptation to reproduce a desert in your lobby by putting sand on the floor and distributing a lot of cacti. You will only have a mess.

Feature prominently the name of the pictures then every picture of Miss Bennett that you can get. There are a number of striking scene pictures with this and they should be mounted on sufficiently large white cardboard to attract attention. Around these we would have neatly printed some of the selling lines that we have already suggested.

YOU will not need the usual scenic on this bill for there are plenty of striking views in the desert and we would rather have the public go away from the house talking about these than anything else. There should be plenty of comedy and the musical numbers should generally be in the lighter vein.

You can get an effective opening for the feature by having one of the songs of friendship sung. "Dear Old Pal of Mine," will fit in well here although it does refer to men. But if you want to bring in others you can use "Love, Here is My Heart," "Sweet Genevieve," "Love's Old Sweet Song" or "Girl of Mine" and they will all be pleasing. Carry this music right into the screening, and then with the cabaret scenes you will want to go into the jazz effects.

Herbert's "Love Theme," Grunfeld or Nevin's "Romance" or any of the better known of these can be used for the theme of the girl and the man. We would pay especial attention to the music here because the action is so tense and the accompaniment will make the effect on the audiences all the surer.

Strong Cast Supports Viola Dana

"Madelon of the Redwoods," Her Next Metro Vehicle, Is from Well Known Novel

METRO has selected a novel by Mary E. Wilkins Freeman as the next starring vehicle for Viola Dana, and an announcement made last week places special stress on the strength of the cast selected to support the little star.

"Madelon," the name of the novel, will give way to "Madelon of the Redwoods" on the screen version. The action of the story is said to be much along the lines of Bret Harte's famous "M'Liss."

Wheeler Oakman has the leading male role opposite Miss Dana. Mr. Oakman was last seen in the same capacity with Edith Storey in the Metro productions "Revenge" and "The Claim" which were released a little over a year ago. It was on the completion of the latter's successful picture that Mr. Oakman asked Metro to release him from his contract in order that he might join Uncle Sam's fighters. He has just returned from overseas where he was in the second line trenches with California's 144th Artillery Regiment, at the time the armistice was signed. He has only been discharged from the service recently and immediately was engaged to play the lead with Miss Dana.

The second player in the supporting cast is Edward J. Connelly. He has recently been seen in "Johnny on the Spot," "Jeanne of the Gutter," and Nazimova's production of "The Red Lantern."

Another of the principals is Peggy Pearce, a versatile young screen actresses. This is Miss Pearce's first appearance in Metro productions.

The fourth member of the cast is Virginia Ross, who has just completed work in the part of Huang-Ma in Nazimova's recently completed "The Red Lantern."

Pat O'Malley is the last of the five principals selected in this all-star cast to support Miss Dana. In this drama of the tall timbers Mr. O'Malley will be in his element, and he is an actor who can always be depended upon to give a good account of himself.

Martin Johnson Plans Three-Year Journey

Cole Company, which has general charge of the distribution of the Martin Johnson pictures.

At San Francisco, the Johnsons will be the guests of Mrs. Jack London. It will be recalled that Mr. Johnson was a member of the original crew that sailed from the Golden Gate harbor on the schooner Snark, that memorable and historic adventure that Jack London engineered and which awakened the admiration of the English-speaking world.

Drew Comedies Win Over Another Theatre

To be featured on the programs of a theatre that has heretofore consistently refrained from showing any comedies at all is the distinction won by Paramount-Drew comedies. This new series of two-reelers dispelled the prejudice of the management of the California theatre, San Francisco, for short subjects in humorous vein which are so essential for a well balanced program.

"Romance and Rings," the first Paramount-Drew release, was played at this house with special musical accompaniment. In keeping with the subtle humor of the comedy, Musical Director Heller fitted the latest musical comedy hits to the mirthful action. The picture and its presentation evoked praise from most critical audiences.

The California theatre, Los Angeles, under the same management as the San Francisco house, is also headlining these comedies.

Lucas Brings Out a House Organ

Harry K. Lucas, general manager of the Lucas Theatre Supply Co., Atlanta, Ga., which company handles Simplex Projectors in the South, has given an agreeable insight as to his versatility, he having published his first edition of the "Cosiki," which is an eight-page magazine crammed full of breezy and timely trade notes, epigrams, illustrations and chatter concerning the supply business.

Mr. Lucas in his inimitable manner writes of the qualities of his wares in real, big-time style which can not fail to interest. A feature of the "Cosiki" is the Lucas editorial, which is a timely after-the-war story with a moral.

His description of his visit to the U. S. S. "George Washington" upon his late New York trip, when the Simplex installations on that ship were shown him, is also entertaining.

The rear cover is devoted in almost "yellow daily" style to a cartoon showing a figure of "progressiveness" reaching out his "Simplex arm of strength" and strangling opposition.

Arrow Sells "Law of Nature" Territory

The fact that "state rights are back" would appear to be proved by a deal closed by W. E. Shallenberger, Presidnt of the Arrow Film Corporation, New York, with Edmund K. Fox of Washington, D. C., in behalf of the David G. Fischer production entitled "The Law of Nature."

Mr. Fox takes over the feature for exploitation in Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, Mississippi and Louisiana.

The campaign is being carefully thought out at the Fox main office in Washington, and it will commence with the bill-boarding with twenty-four sheets of all the principal cities in these states which in itself will involve an expenditure of twenty-five hundred dollars. The picture will be put out as a road show.

Madge Kennedy Is Presented by Goldwyn in "Daughter of Mine," in Which She Has the Role of a Jewish Girl

"Eternal Magdalene" Proves Timely Film

EXHIBITOR enthusiasm over Goldwyn's Easter week release of the special production of "The Eternal Magdalene," by Robert H. McLaughlin, has been manifested in a heavy booking record from most of the twenty Goldwyn exchanges, following trade showings of this production by the Goldwyn managers.

Following the announcement of the exhibition of "The Eternal Magdalene" for the week of April 20 by Thomas Soriero at his Park theatre, Boston, and after the Boston trade showing, contracts were at once closed for simultaneous subsequent showings at the following theatres:

Strand theatre, Lowell, Mass.; Franklin Park theatre, Dorchester, Mass.; Washington theatre, Boston; Old South theatre, Boston; Royal, New Castle, Ind.

Incidentally, one of the Boston Sunday newspapers in conjunction with the presentation of this picture is running a full-page essay, "Famous Magdalenes in History," by Louis Sherwin, the dramatic critic, in association with Robert H. McLaughlin, the author of both the play and its Goldwyn screen version.

Exhibitors in the larger cities are planning a newspaper advertising and publicity campaign of unprecedented scope and daring utilizing a special series of remarkable half-tone and line-drawing cuts by the organization's own art department and special artists of national reputation. Goldwyn declares that few motion pictures produced in recent years have ever loaned themselves so completely to fine exploitation.

"Four Star" Feature Claims an Unusual Cast

IN line with the policy of an all-star cast for "Four Star" pictures, "As a Man Thinks," the first of the Augustus Thomas series of features, presents Miss Leah Baird as the star supported by players well-known in the theatrical world.

Henry Clive, the leading man, is an internationally known vaudeville headliner. In addition to his work before the camera he is at present engaged in painting twelve front pages for the Sunday American. He has appeared in Goldwyn and Fox pictures.

Betty Howe, has been featured by Artcraft and co-starred by Vitagraph. She plays the role taken by Gail Kane in the original stage production of "As a Man Thinks" in which John Mason starred. Mr. Mason's original role is portrayed by Charles C. Brandt, well-known on Broadway and in Paramount pictures as a character actor.

The role of the artist's model, in which Charlotte Ives created a furore in the stage production, is enacted by Mlle. Elaine Amazar, a Parisian and noted grand opera singer. This is Mlle. Amazar's first picture appearance in America, but not her first before the camera, having starred in Pathe and Gaumont productions in Paris.

Alexander Herbert plays Vincent Serrano's original role—that of the sculptor. Warburton Gamble, whose latest screen appearance was with William Faversham in "The Silver King," plays the role created by Walter Hale.

The Augustus Thomas pictures are Harry Raver productions. George Irving directed "As a Man Thinks" which, like the other Thomas "Four Star" picture, will be distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Inventions in Current Events Subject

First pictures of several new inventions are among the features of Universal Current Events No. 11 released through Universal exchanges by International. This issue shows the invention of a Parisian aviator, a folding hangar for aeroplanes. Like a balloon the big hangar can be folded up and packed in a wagon. Another invention shown in the weekly is that of a New Yorker who has created a contrivance that will expedite the loading and unloading of ships. This unique loader is seen in action before the camera.

First National Purchases Special

Secures Macauley Production of "Whom the Gods Would Destroy"—Exploitation to Be a Feature of Release

"WHOM THE GODS WOULD DESTROY," the Macauley special, has been secured as an attraction by the First National Exhibitors Circuit and will form a releasing unit in that organization's list April 15.

The deal was consummated March 18 by Harry Schwalbe and E. H. Hulsey, acting for the First National, and Harry Reichenbach for the Macauley Photoplays.

"No film in recent history has been promoted to a greater or more far reaching extent than 'Whom the Gods Would Destroy' will be," said Mr. Reichenbach. "Almost one hundred thousand letters weekly are being sent broadcast over the country, exploiting the merits of the picture.

"In every city in which the various Leagues to Enforce Peace, and Leagues of Nations' Societies hold their conventions, 'Whom the Gods Would Destroy' is given extolling by members of the convention in their speeches and by the organizations in their literature."

Walter B. Measday, formerly secretary to President Wilson, and who acted in the sale of the film in behalf of the Macauley Company, stated that his reason for selecting the First National to distribute the picture is best told by that company's results.

"We discovered by investigation," said Mr. Measday, "that the First National organization was credited throughout the trade with a gift for getting the maximum distribution in dignified and important houses, and as the distribution of the film is just as important to us as the financial returns, this item entered in no small way in influencing us.

"'Whom the Gods Would Destroy,'" said Mr. Schwalbe of First National, "is a big picture, a splendid entertainment, wonderfully well produced, and meets the standard we have set and we are going to distribute it."

The picture will approximate sixty-five hundred feet when completed for distribution. The printing and hand color work is in charge of Watterson Rothacker, of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company of Chicago. Ollie L. Sellers, production manager of the concern, will remain at Chicago until the prints are shipped, aiding in the assembling work. Frank Borzago, the director, will proceed to Los Angeles, where work on the second Macauley film will begin at once.

Land Burned for S-L Production

Among the spectacular features which abound throughout the course of "Virtuous Men," the initial Ralph Ince Film Attraction, now being made ready for presentation by Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, is a real forest fire. It is said these scenes were secured at the risk of the lives of several cameramen, headed by William Black. Many weeks of location hunting occupied the attention of Ralph Ince, under whose personal direction "Virtuous Men" was made, before a suitable spot could be found for the staging of the fire. In order to furnish the exhibitors of the country and their audiences with a realistic thrill, Sawyer and Lubin finally decided to purchase five hundred acres of thickly wooded ground in the Northwest forest region. This land was finally secured in the northern part of Minnesota. Ralph Ince, accompanied by William Cahill and a staff of assistants, together with E. K. Lincoln, Robert Cummings and Danny Hayes spent two weeks in securing these scenes.

Last Lockwood Production in April

Metro announces that the last big Screen Classics, Inc., production starring Harold Lockwood, will be released in April.

The name of the drama is "The Man of the Hour," and it is stated that it gives the star some of the finest opportunities he has ever had on the screen.

Screen Classics, Inc., has held in reserve this particular picture for the reason that it has acquired a peculiar significance as the last and biggest thing that Harold Lockwood ever did before a motion picture camera.

The story is a screen adaptation by Fred J. Balshofer, from the novel by Henry Kitchell Webster, and Mr. Balshofer directed the star in the filming of it, with Gaudio as sponsor for the photography. Yorke Film Corp. made the production.

Harry Carey Addresses Many Audiences

Harry Carey, star of Universal western plays, is establishing a record for appearing in public on his tour of the principal cities of the West. On the last lap of a 5,000 miles trip Carey has shown no signs of weakening after having addressed 453 audiences in various cities before arriving at Chicago. Carey's last stop prior to reaching Chicago was Des Moines and in the Iowa metropolist, Carey made sixteen appearances at six theatres in two days, in addition to being guests of Manager M. J. Frisch of the Universal exchange and exhibitors at three luncheons and shaking hands with several thousand admirers.

To those who have met Carey on his tour there is no question but that Carey is personally the same, sympathetic, hard-fighting, nature loving character he portrays on the screen. Motion picture critics and interviewers on Western newspapers have devoted many columns to praise of the Universal star and in telling of appeal to the audiences he has addressed.

Endorses Bruce-Educational Series

Theodore L. Hays, manager of the New Garrick and New Liberty theatres, of St. Paul, Minn., writes to the Educational Film Corporation that he has made extensive use of the Robert C. Bruce Scenic pictures, and is willing to cheerfully endorse the Bruce productions as classics among the nature releases. He states that he has found the Educational product uniformly good, and the International cartoons, in particular, have been very satisfactory.

Mr. Hays is one of the foremost exhibitors of the middle west, and outlines his policy in the brief paragraph that concludes his letter: "Personally I am of the thought that the best photoplay program is the well-balanced one, embodying the feature, scenic, comedy, news and educational subject."

Slater Sells His Laboratory Stock

The interest held by Clyde Slater in the Sanborn laboratories at Culver City, has been sold by Slater to the other stockholders of this closed corporation, P. H. Burke and Oscar D. Bennett, who will continue the business of this laboratory. Slater will now devote practically all of his time to the interest of the Max Handschiegl color process which makes possible the natural color of films in a mechanical way. At the present time portions of films being made by D. W. Griffith, Mary and Jack Pickford subjects, and J. Parker Reid's "Sahara," are being made at the Handschiegl laboratories.

She's in Demand

Audrey Chapman, who played the part of Sally McBride in Mary Pickford's "Daddy Long Legs," shortly to be released by the First National, is a comparative newcomer to the screen, but because of her unusual attractive manner and personality has been playing important parts in a number of West Coast made productions. Miss Chapman recently played in support of Earle Williams in the Vitagraph subject, "The Usurper."

Eight a Year for Doris Kenyon

Star of De Luxe Pictures, Inc., Has Already Released Four Through Sherry Service

DORIS KENYON believes that the only way for a star to reach the highest quality in productions is to limit herself to eight features annually.

At that, she asserts, there is never an idle moment for a conscientious worker. She has already completed four productions which have been released through the William L. Sherry Service and is already well along in the work of the fifth picture.

De Luxe Pictures Inc., produces the big specials, starring Doris Kenyon, and De Luxe practically means Doris Kenyon as she holds a one-third interest in this producing company and is the treasurer.

Theodore C. Dietrich is President and General Manager and is considered an able pilot and executive for the concern because of his many years of successful experience with International and others. The pictures have been distributed through General Film exchanges throughout the country as Sherry Service productions and for New York State and New Jersey, the William L. Sherry exchange in New York City handles the Kenyon pictures direct.

"Twilight" is the current De Luxe Production starring Doris Kenyon, and according to all reviewers and exhibitors who are presumed to know, it has registered an unqualified success.

"Wild Honey," preceded the current production and the first two were entitled "Street of Seven Stars," and "Inn of the Blue Moon." After a severe attack of Influenza, from which she has fully recovered, Miss Kenyon returned from Florida and will catch up with her schedule of eight a year.

"Twilight" is in six reels. Some of the scenes in the mountains of North Carolina required hundreds of picturesque mountaineers. Frank Mills is Miss Kenyon's leading man and J. Searle Dawley directed.

It is related that the company was so determined to make a certain situation effective that they waited fully eight hours while the perspiring persistent director used every artifice to finally induce a horse to yawn.

The story of "Twilight" was written by Vingie E. Roe, and originally appeared under the title of "The Alchemy of Love" in the Metropolitan Magazine.

Carl Hovey, managing editor, saw "Twilight" and declared in no uncertain terms that many good stories appearing in his magazine had been made into photoplays but that usually the stories were so changed and distorted that little remained of the original.

He asserted, however, that with "Twilight," the producer not only retained all the good qualities of the story but had made several additions that greatly enhanced the dramatic value of the picture.

China Welcomes Return of the Drews

That the comedians, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, are favorites in China is shown by a recent article in The Revue, published at Shanghai. Under the caption, "A Welcome Return," the Chinese cinema critic writes enthusiastically about the return of the Drews to the screen and their entering into a contract with President Amedee J. Van Beuren, of the V. B. K. Film Corporation, for the production of two-reelers.

"The Iron Test" Sets a Record

Vitagraph Announces Moreno-Holloway Serial Surpasses Any Serial the Company Has Yet Marketed—Helps Box Office

IN a statement sent out this week, Vitagraph shows that the home office statisticians have clinched their claim at the outset of "The Iron Test" serial showings, that the new Antonio Moreno-Carol Holloway product would exceed in exhibitor earnings any of Vitagraph's serial thus far put on the market.

Vitagraph's sales promotion department made the investigation on which the statement is based. Inasmuch as normal conditions more nearly obtained in the territory served by the New York branch, that section was accepted as the basis for exhaustive inquiry. Influenza shut downs in many sections of the country at the time of the announced release of "The Iron Test" excluded such teritories from consideration, at this time, as conditions as near normal as possible were desired as a foundation. Of course, shutdowns occurred in the New York territory, but this fact makes the record-breaking showing recorded by the New York branch all the more remarkable.

This showing evidences exhibitor business exceeding that achieved by any Vitagraph serial which antedated "The Iron Test." Everywhere in this territory, exhibitor comment on "The Iron Test" imputed to Antonio Moreno and his fair co-star, Carol Holloway, growing popularity.

Gladys Leslie, Vitagraph Star

Neither Antonio Moreno nor Carol Holloway embarked on "The Iron Test" as unknown quantities. Both were known to screen fans the country over as powerful factors in chapter play drawing power when Vitagraph realized that a combination of their talents would result in an ideally matched team. They brought this about, and their judgment has been fully confirmed by the public.

Exhibitor inquiries at Vitagraph branch offices today testify most eloquently to that fact; with "The Iron Test" still current in many localities, they are already keen to know all about the newer Moreno-Holloway serial, "Perils of Thunder Mountain," on which work is well under way at snow-clad Truckee, Cal.

Triangle Keeps Busy on Holmes Features

CLOSING a short but effective tour of the Northwest last week, Charles H. Christie of Christie Films, returned to the Los Angeles Studio, announcing that among a number of important negotiations closed, Christie films, including the newly announced Christie two-reel Specials and Christie Comedies, had been sold to the First National Exhibitors' Exchange through the main Canadian office at Vancouver, British Columbia, for all of Western Canada.

This deal makes possible the branching out of Christie Comedies in Canada, which, since both Al E. and C. H. Christie are Canadians, has long been felt desirable, but due to war conditions has been held in abeyance for many months.

Meeting John A. Schuberg and W. P. Dewees, president and general manager respectively of the First National of Canada, at their main office in Vancouver, Mr. Christie presented the outline of the forthcoming Christie-Specials in two reels and contracts were soon signed for the release of these, as well as the entire output of Christie Comedies in one reel to the First National houses in all of the territory of Port Arthur, Ontario, to the Pacific Coast. The first shipment of one-reel comedies will be made immediately, so that those exhibitors who have been unable to secure Christie subjects since war conditions were imposed will be able to take up regular releases. The first of the two-reel Specials will go to Canada about April 15.

United Announces New Gordon Picture

United Picture Theatres, Inc., announces the completion at the Brunton Studios, Los Angeles, of its next feature picture in which Kitty Gordon is to star. The title, which is said to have been selected from more than 100 submitted suggestions, is "Playthings of Passion." Two and a half months have been devoted to the making of this picture. The story is by William Anthony McGuire, scenarioized by Jack Cunningham and directed by Wallace Worsley. It has to do with the metamorphosis of a society butterfly.

Hodkinson Tries Clip-Sheet Form

The News Department of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation is endeavoring to put its best foot forward by sending its material to the daily newspapers in a clip sheet form. It is the aim of the department to furnish the motion picture editors of newspapers throughout the country with only such material as they can use, and to put that material in the most convenient form. A feature of the Hodkinson clip sheet that we believe will be appreciated is the half-inch white space between the columns, giving plenty of room for clipping.

He Pays to Advertise an Apology

Last week a producer actually paid for advertising space in which to make a public apology. This apology is offered by Myron Selznick, president and general manager of the Selznick Pictures Corporation which has announced eight Olive Thomas features yearly as its first offering. Mr. Selznick's apology, as it appeared in the advertising pages of last week's issue of Motion Picture News, reads as follows:

"I apologize, and I know you are going to accept my apology.

"I expected to be able before this to talk business with the thousands of exhibitors who have been telegraphing and writing for SELZNICK PICTURES franchises. "But I am working out a plan of publicity, service and cooperation on a scale never before attempted. It is original and stupendous. It cannot be imitated. It will be used exclusively for SELZNICK PICTURES.

"I will be ready to announce this plan shortly. Meanwhile I must ask exhibitors who have been looking for these pictures to accept my apology and be patient a little longer.

"Selznick Pictures would go over big anyhow. This new idea will make them a tremendous sensation."

"Virtuous Men" Claims Unusual Features

The sponsors for "Virtuous Men," the initial Ralph Ince Film Attraction, presenting E. K. Lincoln as star, claim for this production an unparallelled series of spectacular scenes. Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin, responsible for the production, are said to have incorporated in this picture all of the essentials demanded by exhibitors in productions of this caliber.

Among the spectacular and impressive scenes which Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin claim, stamp "Virtuous Men" as a "Special," may be mentioned the following:—a riot in the bunk house of a lumber camp in which several hundred men participated; a forest fire for which many acres of ground thickly studded with trees was burned; what is said to be the most terrific and realistic screen fight yet filmed. The participants in this struggle were E. K. Lincoln, the star, and Robert W. Cummings. The struggle in which they engaged for the camera is said to compare favorably with the memorable fight in "The Spoilers."

Starts New Western

The scenario for Eddie Polo's new Universal serial still being far from finished, under the direction of Jacques Jaccard, the star has begun work on a third two-reel Western drama entitled "Buck Lawson Pays a Debt." This is the second of a series of Buck Lawson stories Polo has had for a subject. The previous film drama "Buck Lawson Comes Home" deals with the return of a soldier from France to find an Eastern financier gradually forcing his friends from their land in a Western town.

The Elaborateness of Sets and Attention of Detail Are Hinted at in these Stills of "The Red Lantern," Nazimova Production Which Is Rated Very Highly

"Made in America" Timely Subject

Hodkinson Corporation this week called attention to the general timeliness of "Made In America," the series which it is releasing in episodes. With the soldiers returning from over there, the picture is considered more timely than ever.

"Made In America" is a complete presentation in a series of eight one-reel episodes, of the experiences of more than three million young Americans in training here and in France with its aftermath of splendid valor on the battlefield.

"Made in America," is released one reel every week, each reel an episode complete in itself, covering completely with wealth of realism and scrupulous accuracy, each phase in the progress of the American soldier, from the signing of his registration card, until he made history across the seas.

"Made in America" is published and distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation through Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Select Reports Success for Talmadge Feature

Norma Talmadge's latest Select picture, "The Probation Wife," is said to be going over big in every territory. Reports reach Select's home office daily of record-breaking runs, and scores of exhibitors in foremost cities are said to be canceling other bookings in order to obtain early dates for this attraction.

During the week of March 9th to 15th "The Probation Wife" played the Rivoli theatre in New York, where it was well received.

In Chicago, at Sig Faller's Bijou Dream theatre, "The Probation Wife" closed a run of two weeks on March 22d. During this period the attraction was also shown at other Chicago theatres.

Among the other big city theatres where "The Probation Wife" has already been shown are the Stillman and Metropolitan theatres in Washington, the Walnut Street theatre in Cincinnati, and the Alhambra theatre in Indianapolis.

Metro Reproduces China for Nazimova Film

IT has been said that "a thing of beauty is a joy forever," but, aside from its preservation in screen form, the production of Nazimova's screen version of Edith Wherry's novel, "The Red Lantern," is wont to follow the course of other and far less costly productions, which, after completion of the picture, are torn down and destroyed.

All the picturesque beauty of the Orient, including the elaborate Dragon Room in the bespangled Temple, with its massive onyx pillars, its carved throne inlaid with precious stones, its handwrought filigree and dragons and all the sumptuousness that surrounded the yellow monarchs of the Manchu dynasty in the ancient land of the mongol which was reproduced with vivid splendor and accuracy, have served their purpose, and are, though only a few weeks old, already obsolete.

In this picture depicting the strife and sorrow of the Boxer Rebellion in the city of Pekin in the year 1900, Nazimova has spared no expense in making it the greatest spectacle ever staged before a motion picture camera—or battery of cameras.

When the novel was originally suggested as material for her art, she at once decided that the detail of the settings must be accurate in every respect. With this end in view, Richard A. Rowland and Maxwell Karger, who present the star in all her screen appearances, immediately purchased a ticket for one first-class passage from San Francisco to a Chinese seaport. The ticket was given to one of their best photographers with funds and instructions to get first-hand "stills" of the ancient city of Pekin.

William Fox Releases Five April Films

UNUSUAL variety marks the William Fox features scheduled for release in April. Comedy, drama and Western romance all will be found in the five pictures which will be sent out to exhibitors under the Fox banner. There will be one William Fox Standard Picture, two Victory Pictures and two Excel Pictures.

The Standard Picture to be released is "Wolves of the Night," featuring William Farnum. Mr. Farnum only recently completed this picture, which is described as telling a powerful story of the northwest copper country and the fight of a mine owner to save his property and his wife from unscrupulous financiers. The picture is based on a story by E. Lloyd Sheldon and was directed by J. Gordon Edwards, who staged "Cleopatra," "Salome" and other big William Fox successes.

The two Victory Pictures set for release are "Pitfalls of a Big City," featuring Gladys Brockwell, and "Help! Help! Police!" starring George Walsh. "Pitfalls of a Big City" is described as a stirring story of the underworld and is said to be the biggest and strongest picture yet scenario is the work of Dennison Clift.

made by Gladys Brockwell. The story was written by Bennet R. Cohen, and in the cast are William Scott, William Sheer, Al. Fremont, Sashion Dearholt and Helen Wright. The scenes for "Help! Help! Police!" were taken at Palm Beach, which is the locale of the set story. The story was written by Irving McDonald and the scenario is the work of Raymond L. Schrock. The picture was directed by Edward Dillin.

The first picture made by Albert Ray and Ellimor Fair for William Fox will be released next month. This is "Married in Haste," and persons who have seen it at private screenings declare it sets a high standard of fast, clean fun and clever characterization.

"The Love That Dares," starring Madlaine Traverse, is the other Fox Excel Picture to be released next month. This is Miss Traverse's third picture as a William Fox star, the others being "The Danger Zone" and "Gambling in Souls." Her great success in "The Caillaux Case" placed her in stardom. "The Love That Dares" was directed by Harry Millards. The story is by Elmer Harris.

Rupert Julian is Back to Screen

Universal Announces Director-Actor in "The Fire Flinger"—Star Has Dual Role—Also Directed

AFTER a year's absence from the screen, during which time he has confined his efforts to directing, Rupert Julian will be seen on the silver sheet shortly in "The Fire Flingers."

Adapted from William J. Neidig's serial story in the Saturday Evening Post, by Waldemar Young, "The Fire Flingers," calls upon Mr. Julian to play not only a dual role but to direct the production as well and those who have pre-viewed the film assert that he has risen to the occasion, and made the production a distinct triumph.

"The Fire Flingers," though but recently published in the Saturday Evening Post, has a literary history that extends back almost twenty years when Mr. Neidig was a free-lance newspaper man in San Francisco. In 1899 Neidig wrote "The Fire Flingers" and submitted to the editor of "The Family Journal," a Frisco publication. Only one copy of the manuscript was made and this was lost when, after a few weeks The Family Journal died the death of hundreds of other magazines with good policies but poor finances. The script was lost. Mr. Neidig determined to make "The Fire Flingers" a bigger and better story than in the form, it was submitted to the Family Journal, but before he gave it much thought several years had slipped by. However, the basic idea for the story was added to month by month and about a year ago the new story was sold to the Saturday Evening Post. Dodd, Mead & Co. are publishing "The Fire Flingers" in book form and these volumes will be ready for the public late in March.

Rupert Julian and Jane Novak, in "The Fire Flingers," Universal Production

Rupert Julian's dual role in "The Fire Flingers" calls upon him to portray two characters of very contrasty moods. As Richard Olwell, a wealthy printer, Julian is called upon to impersonate a selfish, drunken man with low moral standards and as Richard Hatton, ex-convict, attempting to reform, he is forced to play the part of a sympathetic, bright, honest man, who, by circumstance is forced to act as Olwell, which proves by no means an easy task. In Julian's support in this film vehicle are Fay Tincher, who is seen as Maggie Driver, Jane Novak, as Mrs. Olwell, Fritzie Ridgeway as Ellen, the maid, E. A. Warren as Chris Cotterill, and Clyde Fillmore as Chief Burley.

Christie Comedy Pictures Invade Canada

IN accordance with the policy of the Triangle Film Company's distributing organization to release, in addition to its other productions, a series of Taylor Holmes' special presentations, activities again are the keynote of this concern.

Lawrence Windom, who directed Taylor Holmes in "It's a Bear," the first Triangle Holmes' special release, is now busily engaged in assembling the supporting cast for this comedian's next picture, the working title of which is "Upside Down." This is a screen adaptation of George Agnew Chamberlain's story published in Harper's Magazine, entitled "Lovely Reason," and has a New York locale. The scenario is being written and revised by Clara Barenger, who recently finished the scenario of "Come Out of the Kitchen" for Mary Pickford. She is collaborating with Wallace Clifton. This latest Holmes picture will be placed in production shortly at the Biograph Studios. Many of the scenes will be shot in and about New York City, with settings that include Carnegie Hall and the Metropolitan Opera House.

The members of Mr. Holmes' supporting cast in "Upside Down" will shortly be announced.

In connection with his announcement that he had just completed "Taxi," Director Windom enthusically remarked that he considered this one of Mr. Holmes' best comedies, better, in fact, than "A Pair of Sixes" or "Ruggles of Red Gap," which he produced with this comedian under the Essanay banner. The supporting cast of "Taxi," which was written by George Agnew Chamberlain and published as a serial in the Cosmopolitan Magazine, includes Lillian Hall and Irene Tams, The scenes of this production were shot in and about New York City, while the interiors were taken in the Biograph Studios in the Bronx, which has been leased by Triangle for these special Holmes productions.

Cast Looks Good

Prominent in the cast of "Getting Mary Married," Marion Davies' latest starring vehicle just completed, are Norman Kerry, playing opposite Miss Davies; Frederick Buntun, Amelia Summerville, Matt Moore, Constance Beaume, Helen Londrotch, James P. Laffey and Sophie Marson.

Precision Issues New Catalogue

The Precision Machine Company is to be congratulated upon the appearance of the 1919 catalogue which has just been received.

The general artistic style of this catalogue alone makes its appeal, it being bound in a fawn-colored straw-board finished cover with the simple words, "Simplex Projectors," heavily embossed in maroon on the front cover, this being the only printed matter appearing either inside or outside of the catalogue covers.

The book itself is finished on a heavily glazed paper with an orange border on the top and bottom of each page. Unlike the average motion picture machine catalogue, this one carries no parts or detailed price list, the first few pages being devoted to a short history of the Simplex, incidentally giving the reader an intimate insight into the story of the efforts of the designers of the Simplex, Messrs. Edwin S. Porter and the late Francis B. Cannock. Two splendid half-tones of both these geniuses also appear.

The reader is then shown the important working parts of the Simplex, both by clear finished half-tones and in plain, concise language. The story of the Simplex lens plant at Morris Park is also told briefly, as are the facts concerning the new Incandescent Mazda Equipment which will be ready April 15th, and also the "Extralite" shutter, which has already become famous.

The center page spread is devoted to three artistic half-tones of the regulation and Type "S" Simplex in normal positions and a small view of the regulation model on an extreme downward pitch, respectively. The last page is devoted entirely to general prices of equipment and necessary accessories.

It is announced by the Precision Machine Company officials that each of their twenty-three American distributors have been sent their allotments of these catalogues, and announce further that all in the trade are respectfully requested to send for one of these books which compares favorably with even the finest automobile catalogue that has come to light.

Pathe Expands Publicity Department

Vastly increased activities, due to the ever-growing list of feature, serial and short reel productions released, has necessitated the expansion of the quarters of the Advertising and Publicity Departments at the Home Office of Pathe Exchange, 25 West Forty-fifth street, New York City.

The eighth floor now houses P. A. Parsons, Advertising Manager; Randolph Lewis, Publicity Manager, and Frank V. Bruner, Serial Publicity Manager.

George Arthur Gray, magazine writer and reviewer, and recently of the editorial staff of the Dramatic Mirror, has joined the Pathe organization as Assistant Manager of Serial Publicity, working with Frank V. Bruner, who, besides directing this division, has assumed editorial management of the Pathe Sun.

This is Harry Morey in what Vitagraph considers his best character part to date. The production is "Fighting Destiny"

Now Head Cameraman

Glenn McWilliams, who started two years ago with Douglas Fairbanks in the capacity of assistant camera boy, has gradually reached the post of head cameraman for the agile comedian. This promotion came with the retirement of Hugh McClung, who resigned because of a nervous breakdown due to a recent attack of influenza and pneumonia. Glenn's father is secretary to the Mayor of Los Angeles, who was among the first to offer congratulations.

The Fairbanks' camera staff now includes Pliny Horne, formerly of the Triangle; Charles Warrington, and James Farrell.

"Stitch in Time" Progresses Nicely

Under the direction of Ralph Ince, Vitagraph's production of "A Stitch in Time," in which Gladys Leslie will soon appear, is rapidly rounding into form, and if the enthusiasm of the Vitagraph studio officials is any indication of what may be expected from the film, another real big picture is forthcoming.

The success of "A Stitch in Time" on Broadway is still so recent that it needs scarcely any comment.

Albert Capellani, Who Will Produce "Oh Boy" for Pathe Distribution

Buys Screen Rights to "Told in the Hills"

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has purchased the screen rights to "Told in the Hills," by Marah Ellis Ryan, the novel, and with a large and carefully chosen cast under the direction of a prominent director, the production will be started at an early date for release as a big special attraction.

Written nearly thirty years ago and first published in 1891, "Told in the Hills" has sold continuously ever since, passing through edition after edition and being in the continuous interest of the reading public, almost an American counterpart of "Lorna Doone." The gross sales have reached nearly three-quarters of a million copies and in all over fifty editions of the book have been published.

Since its appearance the author has written many other books, including "Squaw Elouise," "A Pagan of the Alleghanies," "Merze," "In Love's Domains," "Miss Moccasin," "My Quaker Maid," "The Bond Woman," "The House of the Dawn," "The Woman of the Twilight" and others, besides several volumes of short stories, but "Told in the Hills" has remained her best known work.

The central figure of the story is a young man who marries the girl his brother has wronged, accepting the child as his own. He then leaves his home, having provided for an income for his wife, and goes to live among the Indians. Here he buys a squaw to protect her from being beaten, but does not live with her, and becomes a Government scout and helps to keep the Indians friendly. Another woman comes into his life and they learn to love each other, but her belief that he is a squaw man keeps them apart. He gives his life in averting an Indian war and dies in the arms of his sweetheart. His brother promises to marry the widow, thus righting the original wrong.

Select Names Marion Davies New Feature

SELECT PICTURES CORPORATION officially announced this week that Marion Davies' next Select Picture will be "Getting Mary Married." This is an Allan Dwan production, directed personally by Allan Dwan, and the photoplay was written expressly for Miss Davies by Anita Loos and John Emerson.

"Getting Mary Married" will follow Miss Davies' current Select attraction, "The Belle of New York," which is now being shown throughout the country in connection with one of the biggest newspaper advertising campaigns ever launched.

Marion Davies has the title role of Mary in the production, and her leading man, Norma Kerry, has the part of James Winthrop, Jr. Mary is the stepdaughter of old John Burton, who dies and leaves a stipulation in his will that Mary must live with the Boston Burtons for a year before she can inherit the money. This plan does not please her, but it is the only way she can obtain money to repay one of the unfortunate investors who have been cheated by Burton. During her stay with the Boston Burtons she becomes acquainted with Jimmy Winthrop. The Burtons would like to have Winthrop marry one of the Burton girls, but they hope to marry Mary to some undesirable person in order to break the rules of the will so the inheritance will go to them instead of to Mary. However, Winthrop falls in love with Mary and says that he will arrange to help the person Mary wants to aid if she will consent to an early marriage.

Brentwood Makes "Better Times"

"Better Times" is to be the title of the comedy-drama now under production by the Brentwood Film Corporation. The new feature carries the theme of sunshine, being where you make it, and is from the pen and direction of King W. Vidor, the author-director of "The Turn in the Road," a recent release (March 16) of the Exhibitors Mutual Distributing Corporation.

Coming Program Offerings

Reports Some Record Bookings

Exhibitors Mutual Declares "What Every Woman Wants" Is Going Strong—Production Made by Jesse D. Hampton

RECORD-BREAKING business is reported by Exhibitors Mutual from a number of its exchanges.

"What Every Woman Wants," the Jesse D. Hampton production, featuring Grace Harmond in an all-star cast, is proving one of the most popular subjects handled by Exhibitors Mutual since its organization, it is claimed.

This feature has been booked over the Chicago circuits of Ascher Brothers and Lubliner and Trintz. The bookings have been so arranged that these circuits will not conflict in their dates. These contracts are the biggest ever signed by an Exhibitors Mutual exchange, with the exception of the Cannibal films, and is a good indication with what favor the Hampton picture is meeting throughout the country.

After looking over the feature in the Chicago office of Exhibitors Mutual, Max Ascher of Ascher Brothers, predicted it would prove one of the best money makers he had ever booked. Not only is there an appealing title to the picture, but it has a story that will interest every woman, and any man who has to foot the bill for "what every woman wants," which in this instance is clothes. The story as written by William Parker is popular in sentiment and Jesse D. Hampton has made a production which not only Exhibitors Mutual but Exhibitors as well, are finding a sure fire success.

During the week of April first the Chicago exchange of Exhibitors Mutual broke all records by booking three of its features in as many loop district theatres. Exhibitors Mutual films headed the programs at the State Lake, Randolph and Lake theatres. This is the first time in the history of any Chicago exchange that similar bookings were recorded.

Business is increasing rapidly in all Exhibitors Mutual exchanges. "The Turn in the Road," the Brentwood production which Robertson-Cole recently purchased for release through Exhibitors Mutual, is in great demand. Moore's Rialto in Washington, D. C., booked it for the entire week of March 17, and did exceptionally good business.

"The Lamb and the Lion," Billie Rhodes' latest feature, played four days in Moore's Garden in Washington during the same week.

Alice Brady Feature Ready for Release

"MARIE, LTD.," Alice Brady's Select Picture for March, will be released this week, Select announces, and prints are now being distributed to first run theatres by the various Select exchanges. "Marie, Ltd.," is from a story by Louise Winters which appeared recently in one of the popular magazines, and the scenario is by Jane Murfin, who has collaborated with Jane Cowl in a number of successful stage plays. Kenneth Webb directed.

The story of "Marie, Ltd.," concerns the experiences in New York of Drina Hilliard, the daughter of Marie. Marie is the proprietress of a fashionable millinery store on Fifth avenue. When Drina was a child her mother and father separated, the mother coming to New York and Drina remaining in the West with her father. After Drina completes her schooling she also comes to New York and makes her home with Marie. She meets many of the prominent people who patronize her mother's fashionable shop and two well-known society men become enamored of her. With one of the men the fascination is mutual, but events tend to force Drina to marry a man who is much older than she in order to protect her mother from a serious scandal. When the other suitor learns of Drina's trouble he comes to the rescue and matters are adjusted so that Drina gets the man of her choice.

"Marie, Ltd.," offers a number of interesting and elaborate scenes of New York life, including several shots in reproduction of an exclusive millinery shop in New York's fashionable uptown shopping district.

World Adds More Theatres for Kinograms

World Pictures announce that beginning next week forty-six more theatres will screen Kinograms for the entertainment of their patrons. The experience of the World with Kinograms discloses that the World has, in less time than in any other news weekly, placed this news reel in a maximum number of houses. Kinograms, in its short existence, has scored a notable number of real news beats, the most important of which was the return of President Wilson from France, shown in Kinograms before any other news reel.

California Books 'Em

Learning of the preparations of the Christie Film Company for the making of one two-reel comedy each month, has lead the management of the California, Los Angeles, the newest and largest theatre in the west coast producing city, to make a contract for the first twelve of these releases through Manager Harry MacIntyre of the Peerless Film Service, Inc., branch of Los Angeles. The California theatre is now running one Arbuckle each month, two William Parsons Goldwyn Capitol Comedies, and the addition of the Christie will complete their comedy program.

"Oh, You Women," Comes on May 4

"Oh, You Women!" the special John Emerson-Anita Loos Production, it was announced by Walter E. Greene, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of distribution, will be released on May 4. The film is heralded as the funniest feature comedy of the season based on a novel idea which is particularly timely. Because of the exceptional basic idea and general theme of "Oh, You Women!" this production was staged as a special, and the Famous Players-Lasky organization will release it individually to exhibitors. Thus any exhibitor will have the opportunity of booking this production.

"Oh, You Women!" was produced by Emerson-Loos under the working title, of "When the Boys Come Home." The film was finished several weeks ago, and excited considerable enthusiasm around the Famous Players-Lasky Studio in New York City. When it was shown to the executives of this company, it met with unanimous approval

"From Headquarters" Reaches the Screen

With weeks of advertising of the most comprehensive sort back of it, "From Headquarters" this week reaches the screen. This Vitagraph release featuring Anita Stewart is possibly her greatest, a supposition which will be definitely settled when reports of the reception of the picture reach the home offices of Vitagraph in the course of the next few weeks.

The role portrayed by Miss Stewart in "From Headquarters" is one that would tax the resources of a Bernhardt.

Supporting Miss Stewart in "From Headquarters" is a cast which includes players of the screen whose names have become familiar ones with the country's vast picture patronage. The play was directed by Ralph Ince, whose competent supervision of Miss Stewart's work has been a factor in the making of her career.

The story of "From Headquarters" involves the thing called "Justice."

Gets Cast for Two-Reel Westerns

William L. Sherrill, President of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, wired his New York office that he has engaged Jack Richardson, George Chesbro and Anna Wild to appear in the two-reel Western Dramas, being made by that company on the West Coast, and in which Texas Guinan, the female Bill Hart of the screen, is to be starred. The engagement of these three makes a noteworthy addition to the company already employed.

"A Skate at Sea"

"A Skate at Sea" and "A Movie Riot" have been selected as the L-Ko comedy releases for April 2 and 9, through Universal exchanges.

The first named comedy features Charles Dorety and has been directed by Vin Moore.

Murray Film Set for April 14

"What Am I Bid" is the title selected for Mae Murray's next Universal special attraction scheduled for release on April 14. The film is an adaptation of an original story by John B. Clymer and Harvey Thew, and has been produced by Robert Z. Leonard in six reels.

In addition to being especially suitable to Miss Murray's talents, "What Am I Bid" is said to be one of the most unique productions ever filmed at Universal City. The story relates the manner in which a mountain girl, virtually sold to a bootlegger by her drunken, degenerate father, by coincidence meets a secret service man, who takes such an interest in her that she decides to educate herself, and by an ingenius method finally lifts herself to the social standing of the man she loves.

In support of Miss Murray in this, her latest finished production, are Willard Louis as Crimp, Ralph Graves as McGibbon, John Cook as Yarnell, Gertrude Astor as Diana Newlands, and Joseph Girard as McGibbon's father.

"Unknown Love" Gets April 27 Release

Pathe announces that the release date decided upon for Leonce Perret's big emotional production, "The Unknown Love," with Dolores Cassinelli and E. K. Lincoln, is April 27. Miss Cassinelli, it has been amply demonstrated, is a particularly appealing personality to women, for she typifies the very spirit of girlish romance and her beauty, coupled with her strongly developed dramatic sense, is the big factor of her success. Another artist appreciation comes from Albert Levering, the well known illustrator who declares that she is "the soul of youth and beauty and the story that she glorifies is one that has been in the heart of every woman."

Kerrigan Draws in Salt Lake

Another proof of the ever growing popularity of Jack Warren Kerrigan, the Jesse D. Hampton star, is the large crowds that attended the American theatre in Salt Lake City when "Come Again Smith" was exhibited. For every performance on the Sunday and Monday shown the theatre was crowded to capacity. Kerrigan's pictures are distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. His newest is "The End of the Game," a Western thriller, to be followed by "The Best Man," a secret service story of mystery and romance.

"The Potum of Swat"

None other than the dignified mayor of Greenville does honor to "Smiling Bill" Parsons in the fat funmaker's newest Capitol Comedy, "The Potum of Swat," a Go-Get-'m Potts story distributed by Goldwyn. Greenville is a peculiar burg, in that its population, from its chief executive to its lowliest citizen, is afflicted with the life extension mania—in other words, every one wants to become a centenarian.

Universal Sets Date for Corbett Feature

SIMULTANEOUSLY with the release of "The Red Glove," starring Marie Walcamp, Monday, March 17, came the announcement from Universal City that work on the Universal serial, "The Midnight Man," which will introduce James J. Corbett to the screen, had progressed so rapidly that a tentative release date for "Gentleman Jim's" cinema debut had been set. Unless unforeseen obstacles arise the Corbett serial will be released on May 12, the Universal serial department has stated. Director James Horne is now working on the eighth episode of the serial and is in hopes of having the serial within one or two episodes of completion by release date.

The Corbett serial is being adapted from an original story by James W. Horne and Kenneth B. Clark. Harvey Gates has put it into scenario form.

The cast for "The Midnight Man" includes Kathleen O'Connor as Nellie Morgan, Joseph W. Girard as Mr. Morgan, Frank Jonasson as John Gilmore, Joseph Singleton as Detective Arnold, Orral Humphrey as Ramah, a Hindu, Georgia Woodthorpe as Martha Gilmore, William Sauter as Fred Hargreaves, and Noble Johnson as Spike, a roustabout.

The Corbett serial will be in eighteen episodes. Universal's advertising and publicity forces are now at work on the big campaign book, posters and numerous stories for newspapers and magazines, so that the serial may receive the utmost in boosting.

"Police" on Schedule

"Police" is the third of the Essanay-Chaplin quartet of revivified comedies to be released, bookings on which are reported by the George Kleine System to be larger than when first issued. The release date is March 29, although there are a number of pre-runs in downtown theatres of the larger cities for March 22.

"The Bank," the second picture, is now playing in first-run houses throughout the country. It is meeting with as great a success as "A Night in the Show," and even surpassing it.

In "Police," Charlie, on being released from prison, is exhorted by a fake minister to walk the straight and narrow.

American to State Right "Damaged Goods"

It was announced from Chicago this week that American Film Company, controlling "Damaged Goods," would release the production on a state rights basis within the near future.

In discussing the matter, John R. Freuler, secretary-treasurer of American, said: "Yes, it is true that we are going to offer 'Damaged Goods' to state rights buyers. Insistent demands from exhibitors who wanted to run it, and letters from state rights buyers eager to secure a certain territory have finally induced us to yield to the demand."

Grossman Press Book

Harry Grossman reports the completion of an unusually elaborate and effective press book which puts into the hands of exhibitors the surest fire instrument ever evolved to draw the crowds to his presentation of "The Carter Case," a fifteen-episode, Craig Kennedy serial, in which Herbert Rawlinson and Margaret Marsh appear as co-stars.

The press book will be sent with the paper to every exchange for distribution among the exhibitors.

Elaine Hammerstein, Star of "Wanted for Murder," Special Release of Independent Sales Corporation

Well known New York exhibitors had a bully time at the studio where Leah Baird was making scenes in an Augustus Thomas Special for release through Hodkinson. Charles Haring, Henry Haring, John Manheimer, Louis Blumenthal, Leah Baird, Arthur F. Beck, Claire Henlein and William Brandt are in the picture

Frank Hall Promotions

Owing to the increased activities in the organized picture interests of Frank G. Hall, president of Independent Sales Corporation and active in the organization and promotion of the Rothapfel Unit Program, Mr. Hall announces a number of promotions in the organization's forces and additions to the staff of the forces in the New York and branch offices.

With the acquisition of the Rothapfel Unit Program and the increased executive work incident thereto, Mr. Hall has recognized in Harry P. Diggs, former publicity director for Independent Sales Corporation, the executive ability and wide experience necessary to hold the chair of business manager for the Rothapfel Picture Corporation.

Lynn S. Card, general manager, Independent Sales, announces the promotion of E. S. Flynn from branch manager at Kansas City to special representative at the Home Office; Frank Gillman from purchasing agent to assistant general sales manager; Walter Hopkins to purchasing agent, and Murray Hawkins from salesman to branch sales manager at the San Francisco office. Arthur Werner has been engaged as studio manager at the Bacon-Backer Studio where Samuel L. Rothapfel is producing the first Rothapfel Unit Program.

Helps Out in Booking "Are You a Mason"

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, through its exchanges is distributing to exhibitors a complete list of the names and addresses of the Temples of the Mystic Shrine, so that Potentates and members of this Masonic order may be circularized in connection with the showings of the Paramount-Drew comedy, "Once a Mason," which is released March 16.

The comedy, it is pointed out, will prove highly entertaining for Masons—it tells so little about Masonry—even as it will amuse and interest all who are not Masons—it seems to tell so much.

Christie Enters Feature Comedy Field

Fay Tincher's return to comedy in "Sally's Blighted Career," now being filmed under Al E. Christie's direction, marks the entrance of Christie Brothers into two-reel comedy production. After two years of comedy making, having limited their activities up to the present time to the production of comedies in one reel, the broadening of the scope of production enterprises comes as the culmination of an idea long comtemplated, but not put into execution until the demand should make the time ripe.

In this branching out into the making of Christie Specials, Charles H. and Al E. Christie state that it is not their desire to go into the so-called feature production, but contend that the best type of comedy can be made in not more than two reels. Both of these young men contend that many a two-reel feature has been dragged out into five. So, says Charles H. Christie, "Why not reverse the process and make five-reel stuff in two?"

Neal Hart Returns in Arrow Feature

Neal Hart, the Westerner, who will be well remembered by exhibitors and fans for his work in "The Border Wolves," "Love's Lariat" and "The Lion's Claws," and numerous other subjects returns again to the screen, this time through the medium of the Independent market, having placed his attraction with the Arrow Film Corporation for distribution.

It is expected that the picture will be ready for the State Right Buyers by April 1, and immediately upon its completion Hart will again leave for the cattle country in Wyoming to produce another story.

The Export and Import Company has already contracted for the foreign rights on the first Neal Hart picture and the Eastern Feature Film Company of Boston, of which Herman Rifkin is president, have purchased the New England rights.

"Stolen Orders" Keeps Up Good Pace

William A. Brady's picture "Stolen Orders" continues to roll up new box office records, it is announced. In Ohio where "Stolen Orders" is being distributed by the Argus Enterprises and where that concern is carrying on an extensive and highly effective campaign of exploitation, the Brady picture is paralleling the remarkable success achieved in other territories. Fred Desberg, of Cleveland, one of the foremost Ohio exhibitors in a letter to the Argus company says: "We opened up Saturday March second with 'Stolen Orders' at the Mall and Alhambra Theatres, and broke all records for all time. We turned away thousands of people who were unable to get in. This is particularly remarkable in view of the fact that our best records have been made on features of not to exceed four and one half reels in length, whereas this picture is seven and one half reels."

In the New England territory the Brady picture continues to duplicate its record breaking Boston business.

Pathe Releases Astra Western Subject

"Go Get 'Em Garringer," a five-reel Astra star production, will be released by Pathe on March 23. It is a story of strongly organized border bandits of the West, of a sweet girl enmeshed in their web of infamy; of a two-fisted, quick-shooting he-man, who revelled in the sport of hunting down the criminals—a regular Western drama of the "wild woolly days," with occasional flashes of comedy and the tender glow of sentiment.

Helene Chadwick is the heroine, and Franklyn Farnum plays the part of Garringer.

April Brings New Larry Semon Comedies

Some time in April Vitagraph will inaugurate its important new Larry Semon comedy service, with this popular comedian appearing exclusively in the new series, supported by a company of fun-makers chosen from the best talent in the field.

The Larry Semon Comedies will be released once a month and will be directed by the star himself. Blazoning the new laugh-path as the first release will be "Well I'll Be ——."

This first Larry Semon feature comedy has been completed, and a view of the same, which has been obtained by a few fortunate ones, reveals it to be anything but the usual slapstick variety.

"The Dutiful Dub"

Harold Lloyd, with his "tortoise-shell lamps," looks the part he carries so well in the Pathe-Rolin comedy, "The Dutiful Dub," released March 23.

"Laugh with Lloyd" is a slogan of Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, Managing Director of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres, New York, who has booked the Lloyd comedies for a year.

The Independent Field

Alice Hastings, in a striking moment in the Zion Film production, "Khavah"

"Khavah" Expected to Be Ready Shortly

The first Sholom Aleichem picture, "Khavah," which is being produced by the Zion Films, Inc., under the direction of Charles E. Davenport will soon be ready for release. Because of the demands from many sources that the finished product be shown the big exhibitors, Mr. Davenport is rushing the work on the picture and on Saturday night completed all the interiors at the Estee studio, necessitating his entire cast to work both day and night.

"Eddie Luck," the technical director put a corps of men to work finishing up the Russian village "Somewhere in New Jersey" and the cameramen began shooting exteriors early in the week. Those who have seen the village declare that it is true in every detail to Russian life.

Alice Hastings plays the title role, "Khavah."

The supporting cast consists of Giacomo Masuroff, Alex. Tenenholtz, Phil Sanford, Sonia Radin, Billie Wilson, Ray Friedgen and Anna Kehlman.

Irving Ruby and Jack Young are the cameramen and Ray Friedgen is the assistant director.

"Carter Case" Reports Big Bookings

Harry Grossman, vice-president and general manager of Oliver Films, Inc., expresses great satisfaction over the reports of advance bookings coming in from the exchanges throughout the country that are handling his production, "The Carter Case," a Craig Kennedy serial, written for the screen by Arthur B. Reeve and John W. Grey. Advance bookings are said to be pouring into the offices of all of the exchanges, and Mr. Grossman states that at the present rate it is indicated that all records for serial bookings will be broken.

The principal territories of the country are now covered by the leading exchanges.

Hall Names the Fifth of a Series

"When My Ship Comes In" Stars Jane Grey, Under Direction of Robert Thornby—Story Is Dramatic

"WHEN MY SHIP COMES IN," a screen version of Gouverneur Morris novel, of the same title, is announced by Frank G. Hall, President of the Independent Sales Corporation, as the fifth of the series of 10-20-30 special productions. Jane Grey, one of the most popular stars on the speaking stage, who has been seen in some of the screen's most successful productions is the star. Robert T. Thornby, formerly director for Lasky productions, directed.

According to reports from those who have witnessed private showings of this production, it's a typical Gouverneur Morris recital, told in dramatic episodes on the screen. Gouverneur Morris is conceded by literary critics and the American public to be one of the best fiction writers among present-day authors. His works are known here and abroad for their heart-interest and romantic touches, and his "When My Ship Comes In" has been cited as his best work in recent years.

His stories, both short and serial, have appeared in America's best known and most widely-read magazines and many of his books have been adapted to the screen. "When My Ship Comes In" is his latest representation in the silent drama and under the direction of Robert Thornby, who is one of the screen's most capable directors, it has been transferred to the screen with all the Morris characteristics of plot construction, theme and suspense.

Jane Grey, who has the featured part, is known to both screen and stage for her portrayals of roles that carry appeal. She has been seen in many of Broadway's biggest hits, and is appearing this season with Leo Dietrichstein in "The Marquise de Priola."

Mr. Hall, in commenting on this late addition to his 10-20-30 series, said that it represents all that stands for entertainment in the silent drama. "It's big in story, cast and production. The personnel of the cast represents artists who have won fame on both stage and screen."

Territorial Sales Makes an Announcement

THE great demand for state right pictures, and the brilliant prospects this field of the motion picture industry offers, is reflected in a statement issued this week by the Territorial Sales Corporation, which is now preparing to do business at 1600 Broadway.

The State Right Field is once more returning to its normal condition, and, after feeling the pulse of the state right buyers throughout the country, the Territorial Sales Corporation expects a season of unprecedented success,

According to the Territorial Sales statement, most producers, in making state right pictures, have overlooked the fact that there is a tremendous demand for middle class pictures. They overlook also the fact that most state right offerings are either too expensive or too cheaply made to warrant their purchase.

"The Territorial Sales Corporation is in the field to purchase motion pictures on a rights buyer. This is the type of picture which we are going to avoid."

business-like basis," this statement reads. "There are so many angles to this business that many are overlooked by most firms engaged in the state right field. We are going to handle pictures from the shortest subjects up to the most costly productions, but we are not going to pass up the 'in-between' films—the five and six reel features which will make money for the state right buyer who purchases them and for the exhibitor who books them.

"There is a big demand for the highest type of picture, but there is no demand for the picture which brings big money and then falls dead on the heads of the state

Bizar in Screen Successes, Incorporated

Edward I. Bizar announced this week that he has resigned from Metro to establish the Screen Successes, Inc., distributing exchanges, of which he is one of the incorporators and vice president, as well as general manager. Offices have been installed in the Candler Building, New York. Mr. Bizar announces that Screen Successes will open exchanges in New York and Buffalo for the distribution of "The Spreading Evil."

The incorporators of Screen Successes, Inc., are S. Strausberg, S. Blendes and Edward I. Bizar.

Mr. Turner will have charge of the productions featuring such players as Myrtle Stedman, Wheeler Dryden and Grace Harte.

At the Left Is a Silhouette in the Bruce-Educational Scenic, "The High Horse." The Center Shot Is from Separate Trails" and at the Right Is Another "High Horse" Glimpse

Hammons Cites Three New Bruce Scenics

"THE LITTLE HIGH HORSE," "The Restless Three," "Sundown" and "The Wolf of the Tetons" are among the most important of the Robert C. Bruce Scenics, says Vice-President E. W. Hammons, of the Educational Films Corporation of America, in his recent announcement of the subjects for release. The newest offerings, and the balance of the series for the current season, which are still in the laboratory, are examples of the quality and novelty that have made Bruce attractions internationally famous.

Of the twenty subjects which were scheduled for he current season, more than half have not yet been released. Mr. Bruce has spent several months at the laboratories at Wilkes-Barre, Pa., cutting and arranging the new material, and the positive prints are now being delivered to complete the series.

The Bruce American Scenics have established an international reputation, and since 1915, when Mr. Bruce came out of the West with his first subject, more than seventy-five single-reel productions have been completed. These subjects were the first to be devoted to the beauty spots of our own Western States, and have consistently maintained their leadership in the field of scenic pictures from the first release. Theatre patrons who have admired these "Educational" releases since their inception will be most apt to realize and appreciate the progress that has been made in making the American scenery so thoroughly interesting and entertaining, and will be best able to explain why Bruce single-reel attractions frequently dominate the programs of which they are a part.

Plans for the season of 1919-1920 are now being made, and scenarios and outlines covering an eight months' trip, which is to result in twenty new subjects, are near completion. Following Mr. Bruce's usual practice, all preparatory for the actual photography is done in advance—all the subject matter and plans of operation being carefully thought out before leaving New York. The locations and titles of the coming series are to be unusual, and quite distinctive in comparison with the earlier productions.

"White Heather" to Get Broadway Showing

"THE WHITE HEATHER," Maurice Tourneur's latest production, which is expected to have its premiere within a few weeks at a New York theatre, marks the director's first California production.

Mr. Tourneur came to America from France five years ago and immediately jumped into prominence, producing "The Whip," "A Poor Little Rich Girl," "Barbary Sheep," "The Rise of Jenny Cushing," "Prunella," and "The Bluebird." Then Mr. Tourneur launched his own producing company, making "Sporting Life," "Woman," and "The White Heather" in succession. However, not until he started work on "The White Heather" did he go West.

"The White Heather" is adapted from Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton's Drury Lane theatre production in London and later at the Academy of Music, New York. It has one of the most remarkable punches ever screened, according to observers, and is staged with all the beauty, discrimination and artistic judgment which fans and exhibitors have come to expect in a Tourneur production.

"The White Heather" is to be released in the open market, following out the director's policy of independent production. The date of the New York premiere will shortly be announced by Mr. Tourneur's agents, Hiller and Wilk, Inc.

Twenty-thousand copies of the picture of Virginia Pearson painted by Hamilton King, on this month's issue of the Theatre Magazine, will be distributed throughout the country by the Virginia Pearson Photoplays Company.

Jones Succeeds After Four Others Fail

The release of perhaps the most talked of film produced, "Mickey," has brought to the screen the greatest achievement of F. Richard Jones, who as director of this subject, produced a picture of unusual merit, after four other directors had failed for one reason or another.

Wherever this picture has been shown it has met with instantaneous success, due largely to the "mouth to mouth" advertising of the people who witnessed its projection. Like most all of the big successes of the stage and screen, it has but a simple story, but so well has the plot been knit that it is most interesting through every scene, and builds up to a sensational melodramatic climax precisely staged. Since directing the production of "Mickey," Director Jones has made a number of comedies, and his most recent effort is the coming release, "Yankee Doodle in Berlin," which has been sold by Mack Sennett to Sol. Lesser for distribution throughout the United States. It is the belief of the fortunate few who have seen this satire that it will prove the most popular long subject of the screen, and it is expected the box office receipts will double and triple those of Mr. Sennett's previous big subject, "Tilly's Punctured Romance."

Middle West Likes Ford Serial

R. C. Cropper, of the Bee-Hive Exchanges in Chicago, Indianapolis and Milwaukee, reports the bookings for Francis Ford's latest serial, "The Silent Mystery," to be steadily increasing, with each succeeding week. It seems to be an expected occurrence for an Exhibitor to report his house records broken after running the first episode.

R. F. Oekler, of the Casino Theatre in Chicago broke his house attendance and receipts record on the first episode and upon the showing of the second episode broke the first record in both attendance and receipts, crowding 2,563 people into a house with a seating capacity of only 300.

Albert Teitel Joins Inter-Ocean Film

Albert Teitel, a pioneer film man, best known through his connection with the Ideal Laboratories and Studio of Hudson Heights, New Jersey, which he founded, is now on the technical staff of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation.

Mr. Teitel will pass on the photography of every subject released by Inter-Ocean to the world market, and will make his office on the fourth floor of the new Inter-Ocean Building, 218 West 42nd Street, New York City.

He is a chemist by profession and was a student at the Sorbonne, Paris. In 1910 he entered the motion picture business as Secretary of the Ortho Film Company, one of the first independent commercial laboratories in New York. Then he became a supervisor of films for the General Film Company.

He was President of the Multicolor Film Improving Company in 1915, and the next year organized the Ideal Film Laboratories and Studios, becoming the first President of the operating company.

In the absence on the Coast of E. H. Kaufman, accessories manager of Inter-Ocean, Leon Schlesinger of the sales department, is taking charge of the carbons and accessories controlled by the firm.

Donald B. Shepard, formerly of the United Theatrical Equipment Corporation, is an addition to the projection department of Inter-Ocean.

Briggs Completes Three

Briggs Pictures, Inc., this week announced that the company has completed the first three one-reel comedies, from the cartoons of Briggs which appear in one of the New York dailies. The comedies are said to be entirely different from any of the nature yet made. The first is called "The Days of Real Sport," with a subtitle of "New Folks in Town." The second is called "When a Feller Needs a Friend," and the third is "Skinny is Surprised." The films are being cut and edited, and releasing plans are expected to be announced shortly.

Outing Chester Camera Man "Hunting" for Moose

Runcie Leaves for South America

W. O. Runcie, camera man for the Outing Chester pictures which are produced by C. L. Chester in co-operation with Outing Magazine, left Wednesday for an extended trip through South America in search of new and picturesque material for the screen.

Mr. Runcie's trip will take him into Mattegrosse and through a territory which has never before been caught by the camera. In spite of the value of this country for moving picture scenics, it has been practically untouched by tourists and camera men because of the hardships it involves and the dangers from the suspicious natives, who are resentful of the presence of a white man.

His pictures will include a trip down the famous "River of Doubt," which is identified with the travels of the late Theodore Roosevelt.

These South American films will be added to the series of Outing Chester pictures now running at the Strand and released through the First National Exhibitors and other exchanges to leading theatres all over the country.

"Mickey" Claims Record for Milwaukee

"'Mickey' holds the record for the city of Milwaukee," writes Wisconsin Film Corporation, who control the rights to this production for the State of Wisconsin, "for the total number of houses and days played. Up to the present writing we have played one hundred and one days and have sixteen more days to play, making a total of one hundred and seventeen days in all. There are fifty suburban houses in the city of Milwaukee, and we have played all except three, for which we expect contracts also."

Tyrad Shows Faith in State Rights

That the state rights markets has developed unusual activity and is more promising than it has been for some time, is the report made by Tyrad Pictures, Inc. of 729 Seventh Avenue, New York City.

Tyrad Pictures, Inc., of which Mathias Radin is president and general manager, and Jacques Tyrol is secretary-treasurer and director general, is state righting the following productions: "And The Children Pay," a social drama in seven reels by Winifred Dunn; "Your Wife And Mine," a six reel feature made in England and France; and "Her Right To Know," a five reel feature made in England and France.

State rights for these productions are now being sold with the exception of New York and New Jersey territories, which are handled by Tyrad itself. In addition Tyrad is distributing to New York and New Jersey exhibitors a line of one, two, and three reel dramas, comedies, and educationals.

Pioneer Keeps Six Films on Market

The Pioneer Film Corporation has six features which they have placed on the state right market. Every one of them has scored a real hit and is making money for exhibitors. The films are perhaps some of the finest dramas that have been made.

The six features include "Wives of Men" in which Florence Reed scored such a hit. "Suspicion," the sensational story of the harm gossip does. "The Still Alarm," adapted from the famous stage success. "Soul of a Child," a five reel heart interest story. "Little Orphant Annie," the filmization of James Whitcomb Riley's immortal poem, and "Little Mother."

Gets Gaumont Serial for Two States

The Fontelle Feature Film Company, of Omaha, Neb., this week announced that it has secured the rights of distribution in Iowa and Nebraska to the ten-reel Gaumont serial, "The Hand of Vengeance." This company has also secured the rights in the same States to "Satan on Earth," also a Gaumont picture, and the Gaumont News and Graphic Weeklies. Fontelle has also taken over "The Masque of Life."

GOING TO PLAY "MICKEY"

IF SO, GET IN IMMEDIATE TOUCH WITH C. EDGAR MOMAND, GARDEN THEATRE, FLINT, MICHIGAN, FOR HIS WHIRLWIND, BUSINESS GETTING ADV. CAMPAIGN.

C. EDGAR MOMAND got a booking on "Mickey" and immediately proceeded to delve deep into the unlimited fund of advertising possibilities he saw in this subject after a private screening.

The result was that he drafted a "teaser" campaign and thorough business-building, interest-rousing set of ads that have served to invigorate the entire 120,000 town of Flint, Michigan, and positively stop show business (with "Hearts of Humanity"—which burned up twice as much newspaper and four times more billboard space—"Potash and Perlmutter"—by popular local stock company—big six-act vaudeville bill and other houses offering strong competition and opposition).

LET MOMAND'S ADS MAKE MUCH MONEY FOR YOU

In a nutshell—all you need is a "Mickey" booking, a good seating capacity, Momand's "Mickey" ads and a privilege of putting your money in some bank.

No need of any theatre manager wasting any time trying to evolve "box-office smashing" ads—Momand has saved the effort. Conserve your energy for handling the crowds and the money.

There are five good interest-compelling "teaser" ads (Momand tells you how he used them) that creates an impatient desire to see the picture. There is one feature article, 4 columns by 10½ inches. There are also four display ads. And there are seventy inches of live reading notices and a "Press Review," by Roy Lawrence of the Flint Daily Journal. These, all of them, Momand will send you at once on receipt of $25 (certified check, bank draft or Western Union only).

GET A "MICKEY" BOOKING AND GET MOMAND'S ADS

Don't be afraid to spend some money putting "Mickey" over. Momand had it booked for only four days, but held it for balance of the week. Popular demand would support it another full week. Momand has the whole town singing, whistling, talking "Mickey" and dancing "Mickey." Crowds jammed so they nearly demolished his theatre front. And Momand's theatre is off the main "drag." But that fellow's advertising copy draws! He puts in the pep and the punch. Limited number of sets are available. Telegraphic remittances will receive first consideration. Act wisely and with acceleration.

MOMAND'S "MICKEY" ADS WILL MAKE YOU MUCH MONEY

They are an intimate type of personal appeal that get under the skin and create a profound desire to see this film. "Mickey" satisfies hugely. And the result will be greater returns than fondest hope can surmise.

No House or Town Too Large or Too Small to Use Them. Use Them and You Won't Realize that You Have Any Competitors.

Mar. 12, 1919.

Mr. C. Edgar Momand,
Garden Theatre, City.
Dear Mr. Momand:—
Permit me to compliment you upon your clever advertising program of "MICKEY."
That the publicity was effective is evidenced by the crowds standing in front of your theatre.
Very truly yours,
THE FLINT BOARD OF COMMERCE.
E. B. Linabury, Secretary.

Mar. 14, 1919.

C. Edgar Momand, Manager,
Garden Theatre, City.
Dear Mr. Momand:—
The advertising campaign that was compiled by you for the "Mickey" picture is a winner. The crowds that thronged the Garden Theatre entrance every night is proof enough that your special advertising copy did the trick.
Very truly yours,
THE FLINT DAILY JOURNAL
C. H. McKinley, Advertising Manager.

Abrams Releases George Beban Picture

Charlie Chaplin Congratulates Hiram Abrams on His Engagement as General Manager of United Artists Distributing Corporation

AN interesting chapter of trade history is recorded in the fact that Hiram Abrams is now offering state rights on George Beban's latest production, "Hearts of Men," which is the first production the character actor has ever offered to independent buyers, and the last picture that will ever be so offered to the trade by Mr. Abrams, as he is soon to devote all his time and efforts to the general managership of the United Artists' Distributing Corporation, as announced last week.

All of George Beban's former photoplays have been released by Paramount, and this first departure on the part of the star from program releasing indicates that he will in the future distribute his pictures through independent exchanges. Mr. Beban had in mind this new form of marketing his productions when he made "Hearts of Men," for the picture is said to contain many points of interest to the state right buyer.

That much seems to be proven by the fact that Sol Lesser, considered one of the most astute judges and buyers of films in the country, purchased the rights to the Pacific Coast States immediately after viewing the picture.

Mr. Abrams recently made a record in state right sales, when he disposed of the rights for the entire country to Mack Sennett's "Yankee Doodle in Berlin" within ten days. "Hearts of Men" is being exploited from Mr. Abrams' headquarters in the Longacre Building, New York City.

"Mickey" Rights Sold for Entire World

THE rights to "Mickey," Mack Sennett's, seven-reel super-production, have now been disposed of for the entire world.

In the United States the territories are controlled by the following exchanges: Magnet Film Exchange, New York City, for Greater New York; Gardiner Syndicate, Buffalo, N. Y., for New York State north of Westchester County; Boston Photoplay Corporation, Boston, Mass., for New England; Supreme Photoplay Productions, Pittsburgh, Pa., for Pennsylvania, Ohio, and West Virginia; Sidney B. Lust, Washington, D. C., for Maryland, Delaware, District of Columbia, and Virginia; Mr. S. J. Samuels, for Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Tennessee, North and South Carolina; Kentucky to Big Features Film Company; Mickey Film Corporation of Chicago for Illinois; Wisconsin Film Corporation of Milwaukee for the State of Wisconsin; J. Horwitz Productions for Michigan; Leon Victor of Kansas City for Missouri, Kansas, Iowa, and Nebraska; De Luxe Feature Film Company of Seattle for Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana, Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Louisiana, and Mississippi; Midwest Greater Features Company for Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, and New Mexico, and Sol. Lesser, All-Star Features Distributors, San Francisco, for California and Nevada.

In every single territory "Mickey" is said to have broken records and established a precedent for box-office receipts.

The advertising campaign back of this production is making the name "Mickey" a household word. Not only have the leading talking machine and piano roll companies made records of the "Mickey" song, which is fast becoming the most popular hit of the year, but throughout the country there are "Mickey Socks," "Mickey Shirts," "Mickey dinners," "Mickey Cocktails," and in Wheeling, W. Va., a prominent tobacco manufacturer has already placed upon the market "Mickey" Twist, which in design is an exact duplicate of the twist Mickey buys for her father in the story.

Dalton Reports Many Deals Closed

Emmett Dalton has returned to New York after a tour of the southern territory with his production, "Beyond the Law." Besides the account of tremendous business at the houses, in many of which he appeared personally, Dalton reports two sales of territorial rights on the picture.

New York State and Northern New Jersey have been bought by Nathan Hirsh, president of the new Aywon Film Corporation. Mr. Hirsh has arranged with Dalton a side-deal involving special publicity and exploitation, and it has been decided that in some theatres Dalton will make personal appearances under the auspices of the Aywon.

Dalton announces also the sale of all the southern territory to the First National of Richmond, Va. This sale, he states, includes Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Virginia, North and South Carolina, and was made on the strength of the box-office receipts of the theatres throughout the territory where he played "Beyond the Law" himself.

Hopp Hadley Did It!

Hopp Hadley, advertising manager for Rothapfel Pictures Corporation and Independent Sales Corporation, is responsible for the artistic borders enclosing Samuel L. Rothapfel's announcements to the public of his Unit Program. Hopp has a lot more ideas he intends to spring before Sam has his "coming-out" party as a producer.

Plan Special Aid on Rothapfel Unit Program

Samuel L. Rothapfel, Producing Rothapfel Unit Program

INDEPENDENT Sales Corporation is preparing plans calling for special aid to exhibitors in the exploitation of the Rothapfel Unit Program, which will soon be ready for distribution through the Film Clearing House.

Frank Hall, president of the Sales Corporation, started the campaign moving last week by starting two men out to blaze the trail.

Charles L. Schwerin, one of the prominent independent men in the Middle West, who is manager of Independent Cleveland branch, and Leon J. Rubinstein, who has specialized on exploitation methods, are the two selected by Mr. Rothapfel and Mr. Hall to carry out these plans.

Mr. Schwerin, after three days spent at the New York office in consultation with Messrs. Rothapfel and Hall, left for Cleveland, Thursday, from which place he will go to Boston on the first lap of his trip which will carry him to every important centre from Boston to Richmond, covering the Eastern territory. Mr. Rubeinstein left New York Saturday for Chicago and will work from there down through the Middle West to Dallas, Tex.

Lynn S. Card, general sales manager of Independent Sales, and Harry P. Diggs, business manager of Rothapfel Picture Corporation, are looking after the New York end of this campaign.

"We have arranged a campaign," said Mr. Card, "that will reach every nook and corner of the United States. Every exhibitor will be reached not alone by personal and circular announcements of Mr. Rothapfel's program but by representatives of the Rothapfel Unit Program, who are instructed to assist in every way possible."

A FACT

It is a matter of record that practically all the clients that associated themselves with us in the early months of our business history are with us today. We justifiably regard that as the finest tribute that could be paid our effort to serve them competently and faithfully.

Universal Newsettes

Universal Producing Company has been increased to a total of thirteen, at least there being that many directors employed at the present time. The most recent addition being R. S. Sturgeon, who has a number of exceptional photoplays to his credit, and will first direct Priscilla Dean in "The Chatterbox," which has been purchased from Bayard Veiller. Waldemar Young is preparing the screen continuity.

George Holt, who has been an actor in films for the past five years taking leading parts in many Vitagraph and Universal productions, has been engaged to alternate with Jacques Jaccard in the production of two-reel Western dramas. Jaccard has just finished the filming of "Buck Lawson Plays to Win" and Holt is now starting on "Cold Steel." Eddie Polo and Eileen Sedgwick are the leads of this series.

With "The Great White Darkness" completed under the direction of Paul Powell, Monroe Salisbury has been transferred to the direction of another, and will play in "The Open Road," an original story which gives him an Italian characterization, the son of Italy who comes to the West. Rhea Mitchell will have the leading feminine role, the queen of a western honkey tonk.

Neal Burns, who recently returned from the Army, and Vera Stedman, late of Mack Sennett studios, have been engaged to play in one-reel comedies being made under the direction of Jack Dillon.

William S. Campbell is continuing on his series of two-reel animal comedies featuring the members of the Universal zoo, with Dora Rogers and Rube Miller being the principals in the human roles.

Fox Studio Doings

After a month at Flagstaff, Arizona, making snow scenes for "The Wilderness Trail," the company under the direction of E. J. LeSaint, and headed by Tom Mix, has returned to the studio, where everything was in readiness for the production of a new subject titled "The Coming of the Law," which is now being made under the direction of Art Rosson. Agnes "Brownie" Vernon has been selected as leading woman, and the initial scenes have been made, although the entire cast has not been named.

"Words and Music," a photoplay by William Charles Lengel, and continuity by Charles Kenyon, is to serve as the second co-starring vehicle for Albert Ray and Elinor Fair, recent acquisitions of the William Fox organization. Scott Dunlap, who has been identified with a number of Los Angeles producing companies as assistant director, and for nearly four years assistant to E. J. LeSaint, has been promoted to the ranks of director, and this will be his first production.

Tom Santchie, Frank Elliott, Mae Gaston, Tom Guise and George D. Williams have been cast in support of Madlaine Traverse for "The Love That Dares," now in production under the direction of Harry Millarde. This will be Santchie's first appearance on the Fox program. The story was written by Elmer Harris and scenario by Dennison Clifte.

The film now being finished under the direction of Frank Beal and starring Gladys Brockwell, with William Scott and William Sheer as principals, has been named "The Divorce Trap." The Lynn Reynolds Company, with Peggy Hyland as star, is still at the Santa Cruz Islands for sea scenes of "Miss Adventure."

The F. P.-Lasky Studio

That Harry Houdini is to come to Los Angeles the latter part of April and play in a mystery detective photoplay of five reels for Famous Players-Lasky has been announced by Jesse L. Lasky, now at the West Coast studios. Irvin Willatt has been selected to direct the filming of this subject.

Captain Robert Warwick arrived in Los Angeles March 12 for appearance in the Paramount-Artcraft Special "Secret Service" to be filmed by Hugh Ford. Everything is in readiness for the making of this subject at the Lasky plant.

Delays from one cause or another have prevented producing units at the Lasky studio from beginning on new subjects this week as anticipated, and aside from the finishing scenes being made by Cecil B. DeMille for the Edgar Selwyn story, "For Better, For Worse," there is not a company working there.

Many changes are being made at the studio on Melrose avenue owned by the Clune Producing Company, which has been leased by Douglas Fairbanks, and it was stated this week Fairbanks would be located in his new quarters, leaving the Lasky studio during the week of March 22.

A letter to the West Coast office of Motion Picture News from B. L. Waite, owner of the Minor theatre at Arcata, California, brings the information that the company under the direction of James Cruze and headed by Wallace Reid filming the Captain Peter B. Kyne story, "The Valley of Giants," is having great success in the filming of scenes and also securing the desired exteriors

In the absence of Isadore Bernstein, general manager of the National Film Corporation, William Parsons in giving his attention to production matters of the studio while Bernstein is away looking after the marketing of the labor picture, "The Boomerang."

All National Companies are now at work. Director Frank Grandon with Billie Rhodes, who in the coming production has Lloyd Whitlock as leading man, and Melbourne MacDowell appearing in one of the most important parts, went to near San Diego, where a great many of the scenes for "The Sea Waif" will be filmed. The company expects to be gone about ten days. Miss Rhodes has just completed work in "The Love Call," which was made under the direction of William Louis Chaudet.

Henry Walthall, who played under the direction of Bertram Bracken in the National's coming special release, "The Boomerang," is again with Bracken appearing in the leading role of the E. Phillips Oppenheim story, "The Long Arm of Mannister." Franklyn Hall prepared the continuity for this, and it will serve to introduce a new film leading woman in the person of Olive Alcorn. Hallin Burr (Hal Cooley) is playing the heavy, and William Clifford is taking the principal character role.

William Louis Chaudet is now editing the latest William Parsons Goldwyn Capitol comedy titled "A Wonderful Night," which is based upon the celebration which may take place in many parts of the country on the last day in June. Parsons is said to be at his best in this picture, and has Loretta Blake, Lloyd Whitlock and William Seiter as his principal supports.

Bobby Vernon, in the Christie Comedy, "Bobby Comes Marching Home"

Peggy Hyland, Fox Star, in "The Rebellious Bride"

Two comedies have been completed at the National studio which feature Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven. The first has been named "What Could Be Sweeter," and the second now being edited "No You Don't." Robert McGowan, who for some time was with the Christie Company, is co-director of this company.

Thomas H. Ince this week engaged Miss Adele Buffingham as a member of the scenario department at his Culver City studio following the submission by Miss Buffingham of a story for a photoplay which was her initial effort, and was purchased for $300. The story is to be used for Dorothy Dalton. Miss Buffingham, up until the time of accepting the scenario position at the Ince Studios, was cashier at the California theatre, Los Angeles.

The Pauline Frederick picture has been completed by Hobart Henley, who is shortly to leave for the East, where he has completed arrangements for producing photoplays. Up to this time no decision has been made as to who will be Miss Frederick's director, but there is a rumor that friend husband, Willard Mack, will take care of this duty in addition to supervising scenarios for this star.

Madge Kennedy is to begin work the week of March 22 in a new subject under the direction of Clarence Badger, but release title has not been selected, nor has the cast for this been named.

The Norbig studio in Los Angeles has been leased by a newly organized company, which will make films showing the adventures of Captain David Fallon, M. C., the first of which is now in production and titled "The Dawn of Truth." Eliot Howe has been engaged as director; J. J. Kasztor, cameraman, and G. A. Williams is general manager. The pictures will be released as the El Capitan Series.

With Pathe Players

Plans are being made at the Astra studio in Glendale for the filming of another serial for Pathe, while the producing company is busy making the last six episodes of "The Tiger Face," now being directed by Paul C. Hurst with Ruth Roland and George Larkin in the leading roles, and a cast made up of Mark Strong, George Fields, Fred Kohler, Harry Moody, Ester Walters and others. Preparations for the new serial are in charge of L. G. Gasnier. Mrs. Gasnier arrived on the coast March 12 and will spend considerable time here.

Baby Marie Osborne was expected to arrive in Los Angeles March 17, after a tour of three months from east to west making personal appearances at theatres in connection with her film.

About Metro Players

The first West Coast made Emily Whalen story was started the week of March 15 at Metro Hollywood studio under the direction of Henry Otto. The title of the film will be "The Amateur Adventure."

A new story has been selected for May Allison which is by E. V. Durling.

A sculptor in Ohio wants Madlaine Traverse to pose for him while he makes a heroic figure of beauty for the Buckeye state.

This being between pictures for Bertram Grassby, he don't know whether to leave it grow or shave it off—speaking of mustaches.

Jack Holloway has put his naval officer's uniform in moth balls, and is now assistant director to Thomas Heffron at the Hampton studios.

Fay Tincher admits she doesn't know whether there will be another picture after this one Al Christie is making. Strenuous is the word.

Richard Willis, familiarly known as "Dick," served us with another envelope full of his compliments this week—mimeographed. Thanks, Dick.

Bob Brunton is stealing Heines' stuff, for Bob claims there are fifty-seven varieties of bugs at the studio. Just what do you mean, Bob?

Fritzi Brunette was down from Santa Barbara this week to say "howdy" to the folks at the Symphony theatre where her present release is being shown.

Larry Semon is said to play the title role in his recent comedy titled "Blackhands and Blockheads, and now he is asked to prove how he can be the plural.

Bill Desmond is authority for the statement that New Zealand trout are bashful in the presence of strangers, and will not bite when the line is held by a foreigner.

Darrell Foss has given up his quiet ways and gone in for golf. He plans on having the balls finished with radium so that he can continue the game after night falls.

W. M. Ritchey was heard to remark the other day, "a number of words does not make a photoplay any more than a lot of incidents make a plot." You're on the right foot, Bill.

Behold an author steps forth from the photoplay ranks—George Holt. He has written a book on the ups and downs of an actor, and from what we have heard, he could almost make it an encyclopaedia.

Art Rosson was about to direct a wedding scene when the minister said, "When I was a minister in"—and then a long explanation was given. The man is not a minister now, and the scene was made.

A postcard from Fred Goodwins some place in London, says he's through with the British army, and the latter part of March will be on the lookout for the statue of Liberty. Next stop will be Los Angeles.

F. McGrew Willis is back amongst us. We don't know that he's been away, but we haven't heard of McGrew for some months, and now he has written a photoplay for Jesse Hampton titled "The Man Who Turned White."

Winnie Westover tips off that Roscoe Arbuckle likes coffee so well that he has all the white linens of sets dipped in the amber fluid — meaning coffee — so that the place will have a proper atmosphere for a breakfast scene.

Tom Moore and Ed. J. Brown carried a spear together years ago, and when Tom saw Brown playing a minor part in "The City of Comrades," Tom, out of respect for the past, arranged with Director Harry Beaumont for a close-up of the two.

John Gilbert went out the other week to have a honeymoon, and having carefully selected the secluded hotel, thought he would have a quiet time, but they all knew Jack and wedding marches were played for every meal, and they served rice too.

Otto Lederer, who has so naturally impersonated the Jewish characterization for Vitagraph pictures, was seen on our Broadway last week in the title role of "The Wooing of Riley," all of which leads HOOKUM to say "versatility, thou art a jewel."

Society: Bryant Washburn, Jr., Marjorie, Florence and Carter DeHaven, Jr., Jack Mulhall, Jr., Dick, Bill and Tom Ince, Jr., Snookey Rosson, Irving Cummings, Jr., and Martha Wolfelt were guests at Mary Pickford Rupp's birthday party. Ages, one to ten.

A portly officer stepped into HOOKUM office and presented his card, "Captain David Kirkland Swim," and looking up from his be-littered desk, the editor beheld no other than David Kirkland, the former director of pictures hereabouts. Welcome home, Dave.

Prosperity is amongst us at the Vitagraph lot. The Spring automobile buying epidemic has hit hard. General Manager W. S. Smith is going about in a new Buick; Earle Williams in a shiny Hudson; Joe Rock and Gilbert Pratt, Appersons, and Earl Montgomery in a MacFarlane.

Mabel Normand has organized a "I-Knew-You-When Club" at the Goldwyn studios, and inasmuch as Owen Moore, now playing at the concrete city, began work before the camera at the old Biograph the same day that Miss Normand received her first $5 check, she has permitted him to be the first charter member.

Dustin Farnum appeared at the Fox studio last week just as Brother Bill was finishing his first scene of his coming subject, and Dusty presented his brother with two huge bunches of American Beauty roses. For the benefit of those who are not on the inside, HOOKUM will advise that Dusty and members of the Fox organization put the job up on Bill, but it didn't make him a bit mad.

Pat Dowling has moved again. He is now serving as publicity man and general assistant in the sales department at the Christie studio, all of which explains why Pat wears a derby. Here's his first effort from the lot titled "Reasons Why":

The Al Christie first two-reel "Special," "Sally of the Chorus," featuring Fay Tincher, is going to be a "sure hit," according to the following members of the cast:

Fay Tincher — "Al Christie ALWAYS wore his leather coat when directing my scenes."

Harry Dep—"My cow-lick and Fay's striped stockings certainly put the picture over."

Molly Malone—"The piano-player at rehearsals was so good-looking."

Harry Edwards—"I play four parts. Watch for me."

Patricia Palmer—"I can't dance. I do a specialty number in this picture."

Envious chorus girls—"I wish my face had Molly Malone's knees."

Roscoe Karns—"Stage managers give such tone to a production. I play the stage-manager."

Al Christie—"It's hokum."

Everybody, sotto voce—"The shimmay chorus wasn't so bad!"

(That's the biggest single piece of news that ever appeared in HOOKUM.)

VITAL STATISTICS

HOOKUM almost went to press without chronicling the marriage of that Celtic hero, William Desmond, and Mary MacIvor which was solemnized. Bill is on a vacation.

Motion Picture News,
New York City.

Gentlemen:

It is with a feeling of deep regret that I note the ending of my subscription to Motion Picture News, and I wish to take this opportunity to thank you for your courtesy and generosity in sending the News overseas at what proved to be a losing proposition for you, inasmuch as the postage has nearly doubled the subscription price.

Everywhere in France the News has reached me, whether at the front, in the hospital, at rest billets or on leave, and it has enabled me to keep in constant touch with the motion picture situation in a manner impossible to duplicate.

As my movements for some time to come are uncertain, I am not renewing my subscription until I am demobilized, but wish to express my sincere thanks for your kindness and patriotism, and to wish you success.

Ince Engages Director Joseph De Grasse

Joseph De Grasse, one of the most experienced of motion picture directors, whose screen career dates back to 1909, has been engaged by Thomas H. Ince, and is now directing Dorothy Dalton in her new picture which, written by John Lynch and scenarioized by C. Gardner Sullivan, is as yet untitled. In this production Miss Dalton has as her leading man, H. E. Herbert, actor of the stage and screen, who has played leads in stage productions opposite Billie Burke, Mrs. Patrick Campbell, Blanche Bates, Martha Hedman, and other stars. One of his most noteworthy screen performances was in the leading role in Thanhouser's "The Man Without a Country."

Does Well with "The Better 'Ole"

Manager Shakman, of the Eighty-first Street theatre, New York City, notified the Cinema Distributing Corporation, who are leasing "The Better 'Ole" to exhibitors through the World Exchange, that his Monday night business of March 10 with this picture broke a record.

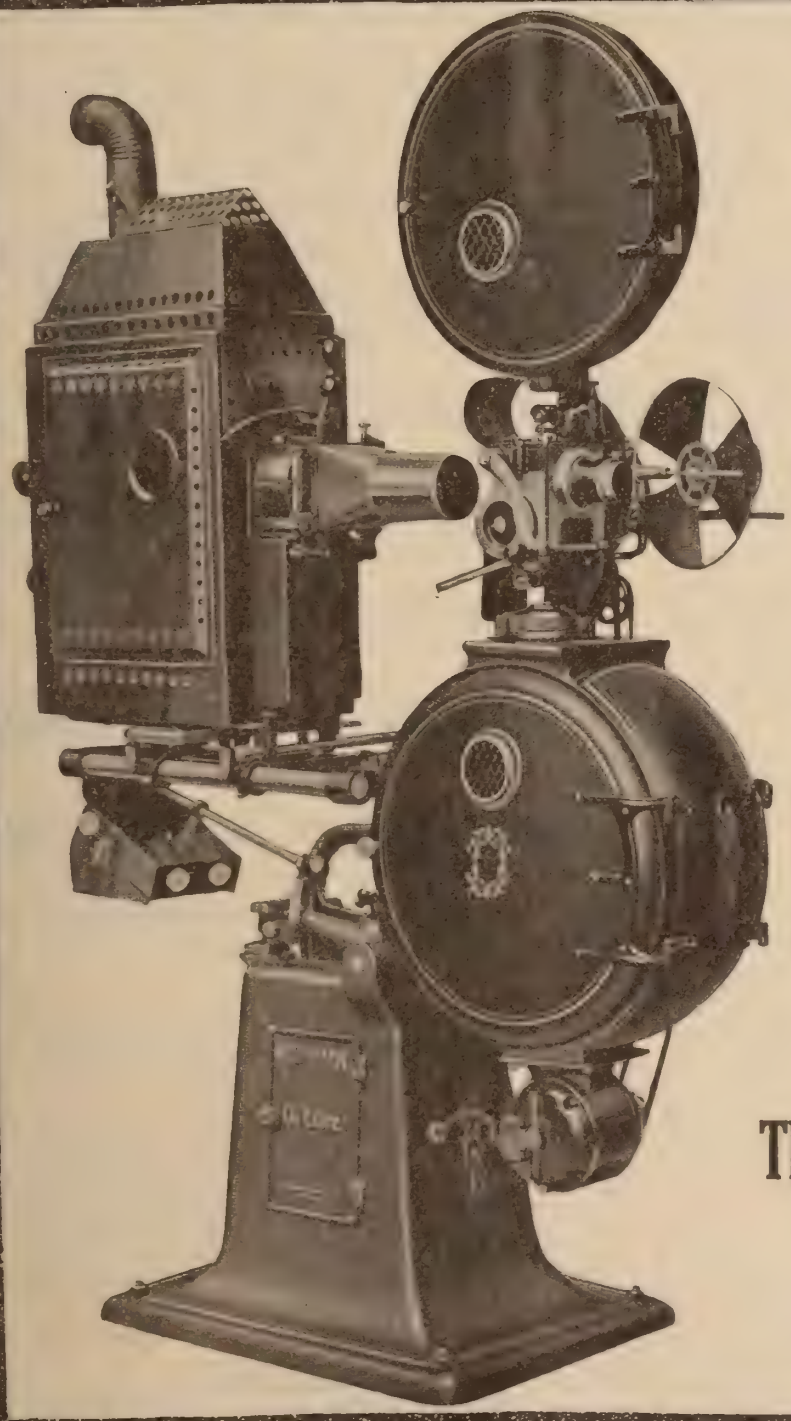
Invites Minister to See Fox Feature

The Exhibitors' Service Bureau of the Fox Film Corporation announced this week that Jack Farren, manager of the Victoria Theatre, Rochester, N. Y., adopted a novel scheme, that had two objects, in presenting Tom Mix in "Hell Roarin' Reform."

As soon as he had received his dates for this picture—which is said to be one of the best ever made by Tom Mix—he invited all the clergymen in Rochester and vicinity to attend one of the performances. In "Hell Roarin' Reform" Mix plays the role of a cowboy who becomes a volunteer minister for a brief time and cleans up a bad gang in a Western town.

By inviting the clergymen to see the picture. Mr. Farren not only obtained widespread newspaper publicity—one of his objects—but he also hoped to convince the clergymen that their general attitude toward motion pictures was unjust.

Girls' College Sees Select Production



Previously skeptical about the advisability of allowing the girls of St. Mary-of-the-Woods College in Indiana to witness a showing of Constance Talmadge in "Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots." Sister A. Clare, Dean of the Academy, has since declared "Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots," in which Miss Talmadge is presented by Lewis J. Selznick, to be entirely free of objectionable features and the finest film ever shown at St. Mary-of-the-Woods.

"Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots" was the first Constance Talmadge attraction the good Sisters and students of St. Mary-of-the-Woods had ever seen.

Equipment Service

Just the framer connection in the mechanism, but made up to the Motiograph specifications.

We began using this connection in the Motiograph in July 1915. Not a single one has been replaced from defect or wear.

There are hundreds of machines in use with this connection, and yet in four years not a request for this sliding disc. Other parts given same special attention.

A good reason why Motiograph users don't wear out their equipments, and can write as follows:

Enterprise Optical Mfg. Company,
Chicago, Ill.

Dear Sir:

Please find enclosed check for $7.50 covering parts for Motiograph. I wish to say that this is the first money I have spent on my machines since I bought them three years ago. They have been in use every day. I have just played "Hearts of the World" and the manager, Mr. Willard, said that these machines gave him better pictures than they had had anywhere since they have been out on the road. I call this some record.

Yours very truly,

SILVERTIP

THE STANDARD NEGATIVE CARBON

The Silvertip, designed and made to give high class projection on direct current, stands alone in the field. A fair trial has convinced a large number of projectionists of the high quality of this carbon which is now highly recommended by them. The Silvertip used in connection with the Columbia upper is the standard direct current trim in the majority of high class motion picture houses.

The Columbia-Silvertip combination gives a light source of high intensity, together with flickerless screen registration. The Silvertip is heavily plated with metal having a silvery finish from which it derives its trade name.

E. L. Bragdon.....Technical Editor

Why Is It?

WHY is it that when a man lacks certain knowledge, he does not make every endeavor possible to obtain the needed information so that in the future he will not be troubled by the same questions again?

It seems to be human nature for a man to be ashamed of a lack of information and never to admit that he does not know all about everything. Why is it? Why when a certain subject comes up, about which a man is not informed, does he not go to some reputable source of information and become enlightened.

This question came up the other day when a representative of the I. A. T. S. E. was in my office talking over general projection questions and the problems which affect the publisher as well as the projectionists.

It must be borne in mind that the publisher has in his employ, or should have, a man who, though he may not spend all his time in the field, is versed in mechanics, electricity and optics. This technical knowledge, which has been gained by long study, is not possessed by many of the men in the projection rooms of the country.

The projectionists in general on their side have gained a knowledge sufficient to hook up the various apparatus in a projection room and operate it satisfactorily till something goes wrong. Then they find themselves over their heads. This is natural and in no wise their fault; it is merely a case in most instances of lack of opportunity.

Now—will some one please tell me why it is that these projectionists are not frank with themselves. Why don't they come out into the open and say, "I don't know this but I WILL learn and the next time it comes up I won't be stuck?" Why don't they sit down and take the question in hand and write to the trade paper and demand the needed information? In addition why don't they go to every other available source and seek the same information? In this way they will soon pile up an enormous fund of knowledge which they have not got at the present time and are not attempting to get. They seem satisfied to merely drift along.

The representative of the I. A. T. S. A. with whom I talked said that the reason was plain enough. It was a case of being afraid of being laughed at. He said that he had seen many men with a trade paper tucked in their hip pocket sneak off to some hiding place in order to read the Projection Department. They were ashamed to be seen improving their knowledge, for it was an admission of ignorance.

Gentlemen, this is wrong; it is not the way to improve our industry. It is not the way to gain the respect of those who are better posted than you. Ask questions and ask them from every one who has the actual information. Don't limit yourself to asking from one source only; ask from as many as possible. One man may be able to explain the point more clearly than another, but be sure that the answer given you is correct and that you don't start piling up a lot of misinformation, for this is worse than no knowledge at all.

I am glad to say that the above condition does not apply to all projectionists for there are some who are thirsting after knowledge from every available source. These are the men who will get ahead and will in the end be sought for by the big houses which are up or will be erected.

With these conditions in mind we are decided on a policy which we think will be greeted enthusiastically by every projectionist in the country.

We intend to take every piece of mechanism used in a projection room and analyze it, taking it unit by unit, describing it in detail with illustrations so that it should be able to be handled by every projectionist in the business. This is regardless of whether the mechanism has been on the market for a long time or is absolutely new.

This is going to be done from a strictly educational angle for a projectionist may be using one make of generator today and may go to another theatre tomorrow where there is another make installed. He should know all there is to be known about this mechanism which is new to him and which he is supposed to operate perfectly. Instead, he walks in and rather than admit his ignorance, he takes hold and hopes that his guess as to how it should be operated will be correct. Has this happened to you? It has to others for they have told me about it.

Mr. Bragdon is with the News to help every man who wants help. He likewise needs your assistance. He wants your suggestions. He wants to know what you want to know. He has his plans laid out but they are subject to your suggestions, if these suggestions are along instructional lines.

In the future we hope the Projection Department will be read openly and discussed by all. Those who know thoroughly the topics taken up should call the attention of those lacking the knowledge to it. In this way we are all cooperating to advance this general knowledge of projectionists, so that they will be of continually increasing value in promoting our industry from the Projection Room.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

Operation Costs, Aberration, Lens Names

James Porter asks:

1. How do you figure the cost of operation of a lamp that is using 50 amp. 220 v. D. C.? Also as to rheostats when you have figured loss in wattage?

2. What is the essential difference between spherical and chromatic aberration? They both seem to me to have the same characteristics.

3. The objective lens contains the meniscus and bi-convex. What are the names of the other two and what is their proper positions in holder?

REPLY: 1. You pay your light bill in kilowatt hours, that is, so many thousand watts used for so many hours. To find the cost of operation of your lamp take the voltage of the line, which 220; multiply it by the number of amperes used, or 50;

$$220 \times 50 = 11{,}000 \text{ watts.}$$

Divide by 1,000 to get the number of kilowatts, and multiply by the cost of the current in cents. If, for instance, you are paying 8c. per kw.-hr., your lamp is costing you

$$\frac{220 \times 50}{1{,}000} \times 8 = 88\text{c. per hour.}$$

The rheostat makes no difference in the cost of operation. What current your lamp doesn't use is converted into heat by the rheostat.

2. When parallel light rays after passing through a lens do not come to a single focus on the principal axis of the lens, but instead cross the axis at different points, the lens is referred to as having "spherical aberration."

If light rays are passed through a spherical lens, the white light is broken up into the various colors of the spectrum, so that instead of securing an image of pure white light, several other primary colors are visible, usually on the edges of the image.

"Spherical aberration," then, has to do only with the meeting point of light rays; "chromatic aberration" means color separation.

3. The objective contains the following lenses, given in the order met by a light ray leaving the condensers:

bi-convex
convexo-concave or meniscus plano-concave
bi-convex.

New Idea, Film Rental, According to Damage Caused by Operators

HARRY SCHLEGEL of the Alvin theatre, Mansfield, Ohio, suggests a method by which progressive managers can be brought to realize the value of high-class projection. His letter, which follows, should bring out many replies from projectionists who have ideas of their own on this subject. Send your ideas to the NEWS so that other readers of the Projection Department may have them to discuss.

"Motion Picture News, New York City.

"Gentlemen:

"In reference to A. B. Werlan's letter of February 15 issue, I want to say it is a good letter and every bit of it is true. The manufacturers should not punch the film before they send it out. Why not keep good prints for the projectionist and send the bad ones to the operators?

"What I mean is to better the conditions of the operator and make them all projectionists. Why does the film exchange man charge his biggest rental in the finest houses where they have the finest projection rooms and the best projectionists available? These big houses run a week or more on one print without a drop of oil, a tiny scratch or a punch hole. The very next day when the film comes from such places the exchanges turn around and sell it to another house for $15.00 a day. There, they run it through their old machines, punch it full of holes and soak it with oil just because the manager is too stingy to buy new equipment to better his own business.

"There are many men who understand their business but have not the proper equipment to work with. They have coaxed and pleaded with their managers to buy them new equipment but with no results. The only way you can reach those managers' hearts is through their pocket book. They will not listen to something for their own good. When their machines are two or three years old they buy a few dollars worth of repairs, and claim their machines are as good as new.

"Now there is only one thing left to do. We will say, for example you own one of the finest theatres in a big city. You have one of the finest projection rooms in the world where you do not punch films, where you do not let a drop of oil fall on it, or cause a tiny scratch. But the exchange man makes you pay $1,500 a week for a production; while down the street a little further there is a man who has a theatre equally as fine in every respect, but who has one of the rottenest projection rooms you ever set your eyes on. Why will the same exchange man sell a production at the same price per week, where the machines and projectionists are doing dollars worth of damage to it every day it is run.

"Why does the exchange man make you pay just as much rental as the man who is ruining the film, when you are not doing a particle of damage to it. Why not send out inspectors to inspect the conditions encountered by their films? Why not make the man who has the old equipment, the careless operator, and who is doing damage to the film, pay more rental for the same picture? This man would soon wake up and get new equipment and a reliable projectionist, so that he would not have to pay the extra rental price. With these improvements his screen results would be 100 per cent better, and his business at the box office more than satisfactory. He would also save the film exchanges thousands of dollars every year.

"Yours truly,

(SIGNED) HARRY SCHLEGEL."

Signalling Devices

WE have received a sketch of a signaling device from Projectionist George W. Carson, Hannibal, Mo., with the request that it be given publicity for the benefit of other projectionists.

The device will be described here because in our opinion, while it may be preferred to punch holes, it has an inherently bad feature which other inventors should not incorporate in their signaling devices.

Mr. Carson's device consists of two parts: the bell from an alarm clock and a 1½-nch washer. The bell is screwed to the inside bottom of the upper magazine to the right of the fire trap. Then when the film is rewound the washer is placed between two layers about fifteen inches from the end. The film in unwinding comes to the washer which falls, striking the bell and giving the signal.

Now the bad feature, of course, is the loose washer, although the chances of trouble are practically neguigible. Nevertheless, it is far better not to have any loose object in the magazine. The washer might lodge between the film and the fire trap opening with results that everyone can perceive.

Although we cannot endorse Mr. Carson's device he is showing the right spirit by placing his ideas before his fellow projectionists. Many of you readers have devices which would be of general interest. Send them to the Projection Department for comment and the interest of others.

Sensible Substitute for Punch-Holes

Galesburg, Ill., March 8, 1919.

Motion Picture News,
New York City, N. Y.

Gentlemen:

Regarding punchmarks in films. Here is the way I take care of changeovers: When I first get my show I give it the once over on the rewinder and prepare a cue sheet. About 50 feet from the end of each reel I take a title or some of the action and mark it "Lite." That is where I light up the other lamp and have it burning steadily before the time to change. Then at three feet from the end I mark "Warning" on my cue sheet taking a title or some of the action as I did for the "Lite." Finally, most exchanges put a mark of identification about a foot from the end of each reel, so for "Change" on my cut sheet I write "Perforations." If there are no perforations or if I cannot make them do, I can always find some of the action that will.

Altho, I hold no brief for the operator who uses punchmarks, the exchanges and producers are really to blame. They are very keen about putting out one sheets for the musicians, but the operators are never given a thought. If all the exchanges and producers would adopt a standard cue sheet for every production, one reel or ten reels, then put a fine on every man returning a film with punchmarks, as Brother Waldo of the Strand suggested, the punch in the hands of an operator would soon be as extinct as the Dodo.

Yours truly,

(Signed) F. C. Goldquist,
Chief Operator.

Motor Machine Gives No Trouble

Mr. William Gardner, Crescent theatre, Pittsford, N. Y., writes as follows:

"Motion Picture News, New York, N. Y.

"Gentlemen:

"I am using two Powers 6-A Machines, one of which is a hand drive. This machine seems to give an excessive amount of noise at the intermittent sprocket. Is this due to its being a hand driven machine and if so why? The motor drive machine never gives any such trouble as this. I put on a new intermittent spocket but it didn't help any."

Reply: The fact that one of your machines is hand driven and the other motor driven should make no appreciable difference in their operation. The probable reason for a certain amount of noise at the intermittent sprocket is the presence of wear on the pin, cross and cam. This trouble can be corrected by following the directions for taking up wear on the Powers Intermittents which have appeared in the Projection Department of Motion Picture News. The better way, however, is to return the entire Intermittent to the factory and have them go over it thoroughly and put it into shape. Your trouble is not in the intermittent sprocket as was proved by the continuation of the noise after a new intermittent sprocket had been added.

To Adjust Lens for Smaller Pictures

Mr. Samuel Paluso of the Pass Time theatre, Leona Mines, Va., writes as follows:

"Motion Picture News.

"Gentlemen:

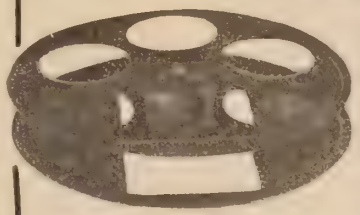
"Everything in our theatre works well except the lens. First, the picture on the screen is too large. Is there any way we can adjust the lens for smaller pictures? Second, the lens doesn't always give the same sharpness on the screen."

Answer: You have an objective lens of too short equivalent focus. Write to any motion picture supply house, giving them the following information, and for a small sum they will exchange your present lens for one better suited to your conditions: length of throw measured from film to screen exact; width of picture you wish to show; and make and type of machine.



If the trouble expressed in your second question is not due to dirt on your lens system, check up on the following: does your lamp house always remain in the same position? Are your condensers reasonably tight in their holders? Are your tension shoes properly adjusted so that the film is held rigid while passing by the aperture?

We are always glad to answer questions but when the information supplied us is as meagre as given above, our answers must be, to a considerable extent, merely conjecture on our part. It is impossible to go too far giving details when asking questions.

Chemical Fog

By J. I. Crabtree

(b) After dissolving a portion of the sulphite and adding the Elon, dissolve the remainder of the sulphite and carbonate together, cool and add to the Elon-sulphite mixture.

The above procedure is necessary so that when the carbonate is added the solutions are cool. If a hot carbonate solution is added to the developing agent, even in the presence of the preservative, some substance is formed which produces chemical fog.

In the case of developers containing no bromide, used for testing the quality of plates and for developing under exposed negatives, it is absolutely necessary to mix the developer with cold water if a minimum of fog is desired.

In the case of some samples of paraminophenol which are discolored by the presence of oxidation products, these may be partially removed by boiling after adding to the sulphite solution. In this way the oxidation products are reduced back again by the sulphite to paraminophenol, though the solution should be cooled again before adding the carbonate. If pure chemicals are used such a precedure is, of course, entirely unnecessary.

Bromides and iodides are added to a developer to compensate for any chemical fog produced by the developer, or inherent in the emulsion. It is immaterial at what stage the bromide is added during mixing.

When mixing a developer the following rules should therefore be followed:

1. Dissolve the preservative first. In the case of Elon dissolve only a portion of the sulphite first, dissolve the Elon, and then add the remainder of the sulphite.
2. Make sure that one chemical is dissolved before adding the next. If the alkali is added before the crystals of the developing agent are dissolved, each crystal becomes oxidized at the surface and the resulting solution will give fog.
3. Mix the developer at as low a temperature as possible.
4. In the case of desiccated chemicals like sodium carbonate and sodium sulphite, add the chemical to the water and not vice versa.

Two practical methods of mixing are possible, as follows:

(a) Dissolve all the chemicals in one bottle or vessel by adding the solid chemicals to the water in the correct order (in the formula the ingredients should be named in the order in which they are dissolved). For example, to mix the following formula proceed as follows:

Sodium sulphite	75 Gms.
Elon	10 Gms.
Hydroquinone	5 Gms.
Sodium Carbonate	50 Gms.
Potassium Bromide	1.5 Gms.
Water to	1 L.

Dissolve about ten grams of the sulphite in about 750 cc. of warm water and then dissolve the Elon. Now dissolve the remainder of the sulphite and then the hydroquinone. Finally add the carbonate and bromide and dilute to 1000 cc.

For large quantities the filter bag method should be used, the chemicals being placed in the bag and dissolved in the above order.

(b) An alternative method is to dissolve the preservative and developing agent in one vessel and the carbonate and bromide in another, cool and mix. This method is the safest and best for quantity production.

For example, to mix the following motion picture developer proceed as follows:

Sodium Sulphite	4 lbs.
Hydroquinone	13 oz.
Sodium Carbonate	4 lbs.
Potassium Bromide	3 oz.
Water to	10 gal.

Dissolve the sulphite in about one gallon of hot water, then dissolve the hydroquinone and filter into the tank. Then add one gallon of cold water to the tank, dissolve the sodium carbonate and bromide in one gallon of hot water and filter this into the tank, immediately adding cold water up to ten gallons. The object of adding cold water to the tank before adding the carbonate is to cool off the solution before the carbonate is added.

Mixing Concentrated Developers

The extent to which a developer may be concentrated is determined by the solubility of the least soluble constituent, because a stock solution should usually withstand cooling to 40° F. without any of the ingredients crystallizing out. Usually, the hydroquinone and Elon come out of solution on cooling, but by adding alcohol (grain, wood, or denatured) up to a concentration of 10%, the crystallization is prevented, since the developing agents are very soluble in alcohol.

The addition of the alcohol does not prevent the other ingredients such as sodium sulphite from crystallizing out, in fact, the alcohol diminishes their solubility and therefore increases the tendency to come out of solution.

A paraminophenol-carbonate developer is difficult to prepare in concentrated form, though by adding a little caustic soda the solubility of the paraminophenol is increased and a stronger solution can be thus prepared.

When preparing concentrated developers it is important to observe carefully the rules of mixing, taking care to keep the temperature of the solution as low as possible if a colorless developer is to be obtained.

Two-solution Developers

A two-solution developer is simply a one-solution developer split into two parts, one containing the carbonate and bromide, the other containing the developing agent and preservatives so that the developer will oxidize less readily and therefore keep well. The reason why it is customary to keep a developer like pyro in two-solutions, is because pyro oxidizes much more readily than Elon or paraminophenol with a given amount of preservative.

For purposes of mixing only one solution developers need be considered because the same rules regarding mixing apply in both cases.

Developing Troubles

In order to be able to explain the reason for any particular developer trouble it is necessary to understand thoroughly what takes place when the ingredients are mixed in the wrong order or if any ingredient is omitted from the formula, and also the effect of chemical impurities. It is impossible in this article to indicate every possble trouble but the more important ones may be listed as follows:

1. The developer gives fog or chemical fog. Fog is the chief trouble caused by faulty mixing. It may be due to any of the following reasons: Violation of the rules of mixing, mixing the solution too hot, omission of the bromide, addition of too much carbonate or too little sulphite, the use of impure chemicals, etc. (See article on Chemical Fog above.)

2. The solution is colored. As a general rule the developer when mixed should be colorless, and if colored the developer should be suspected as being liable to give fog. In the case of a pyro developer mixed with bisulphite which contains iron, the iron combines with the pyro to form an inky substance which imparts a dirty red color to the solution.

If a pyro developer is mixed as two separate solutions A and B, the pyro B solution which usually contains only carbonate and bromide, should be perfectly colorless, though if carelessly mixed in dirty vessels it may be colored brown by the presence of a little pyro A.

3. If the solution does not develop, then either the developing agent or the carbonate was omitted during mixing.

HOW TO MIX FIXING SOLUTIONS

Fixing baths may be divided into the following classes:

1. Plain hypo solutions.
2. Acid hypo solutions consisting of hypo with the addition of sodium bisulphite, potassium metabisulphite, or sodium sulphite with acid.
3. Acid hardening hypo solutions.

1. No difficulty is usually experienced when mixing a plain hypo solution. When mixing a quantity of solution in a tank the filter bag method should be used and the hypo dissolved in warm water because the temperature drops considerably while the hypo is dissolving. If a scum forms on the surface of the solution on standing this should be removed by drawing the edge of a towel across the surface.

If a wooden cover is used for the tank, fungi often develops in a hypo solution and produce acid substances which tend to turn the solution milky. In such a case the tank should be thoroughly cleaned and the cover faced with sheet lead.

A plain fixing bath, however, is seldom used because it gradually becomes alkaline from an accumulation of alkali carried over by prints and plates from the developer and this tends to soften the gelatine, while the image continues to develop in the fixing bath, so that if two prints stick together, more development takes place at the point of contact causing uneven development. If the bath is acid, the acid kills or neutralizes the alkali in the developer carried over, thus preventing unevenness.

2. In order to be able to mix an acid fixing bath intelligently it is necessary to understand a little about the chemistry of the acid fixing bath.

Hypo can be made by boiling together sodium sulphite and flowers of sulphur until no more sulphur is dissolved. If acid is added to a hypo solution sulphur is again liberated, forming a milky solution known as milk of sulphur. If sodium sulphite is present however, any sulphur which tends to come out of solution combines with the sulphite to form more hypo and the solution therefore remains clear.

This sulphur cannot be redissolved by adding sodium sulphite to the milky solution except by boiling, while on standing it is apt to settle on prints or plates as a scum. All acid fixing baths therefore contain either sodium bisulphite, potassium metabisulphite, or a mixture of sodium sulphite and some acid, and the following directions for mixing should be followed:

(a) Do not add the bisulphite or acid sulphite solutions to the warm hypo solution. The solutions should be perfectly cold when mixed or the hypo will turn milky.

Experience has shown that potassium metabisulphite has less tendency to produce milkiness than sodium bisulphite, though for practical purposes the difference is almost negligible.

Of the common acids, sulphuric, hydrochloric, acetic, citric, etc., acetic citric, and tartaric acids have less tendency to produce milkiness for a given degree of acidity than sulphuric, which fact would be expected from theoretical considerations.

(b) On keeping, an acid hypo solution gradually becomes milky, so that a stock solution of the sodium bisulphite, etc., should be kept and added to the plain hypo stock solution as required. For general purposes 50 cc. of a 50% sodium bisulphite solution are added to 1000 cc. of a 35% hypo solution. If any considerable excess over this amount is added, the hypo rapidly turns milky owing to the liberation of sulphur, especially in warm weather.

3. Acid hardening baths are prepared by adding to hypo an acid hardening solution which contains the following ingredients:

(a) An acid such as acetic, citric, tartaric, lactic, sulphuric, etc., which stops development.

(b) A hardening agent such as alum, chrome alum or formalin.

(c) A preservative such as sodium sulphite or sodium bisulphite.

The latter acts as a preservative in two ways: It prevents the formation of sulphur by the action of the acid on the hypo, while it also prevents the developer carried over into the fixing bath from oxidizing and turning brown.

Our activities for the past year have been nearly 100 per cent. devoted to war production of vital importance to the government, compelling us to discontinue regular manufacture in practically all of our lines.

The cessation of hostilities has now enabled us to begin the readjustment to a peace production basis. While this adjustment must be gradual, we are pressing it with all possible speed in order to satisfy the requirements of our normal trade at an early date.

We appreciate the patience and understanding with which our patrons have reacted to the situation and trust they may continue to exercise such consideration until our manufacturing facilities are once more on a pre-war footing.

Cue Sheets Latest Hits — Music — Musical Equipment

"Tacet" Marks on Music Cue Sheets

"TACET," in plain English "Silence" is the most misunderstood and in practical use, the most disapproved of and abused musical term. I know of very few musical directors and musicians who have attempted to practically employ this term in their musical programs. "What does it really mean?" a question I often heard expressed. If strictly analyzed, as to its value in musical film interpretation, it means "a classic effect," "a creater of dignified atmosphere," "a reliever of monotony," and last, but not least, a most invaluable aid in creating realistic atmosphere—as for instance—in a case where a dancing scene is the predominating feature of the picture, it is most natural that if the dancers stop dancing and applaud, the music has stopped, at least has stopped as far as continuity of the picture is concerned. I have seen hundreds of such scenes accompanied by an orchestra, organist, or lone pianist, but have never yet had the pleasure of witnessing a performance where the musician had judgment enough to break the musical continuity. In such a case, a "tacet" of fifteen or twenty seconds after the scene is finished would create an atmosphere nearest to realism and would by all means be an effect fully representing the action of the film, and would be a parallel of every woman's, man's, or child's mind in the audience.

I have reecntly arranged a music score for one of the finest pictures produced, entitled "The Unpardonable Sin," a production of unequalled quality and tensive action. This production represented the most complicated musical problem I ever attempted to solve. It was the "tacet" mark which was an invaluable aid to me in disentangling this musical labyrinth. In one of the scenes, a small Belgian boy, who was the bright spot during the entire production, marched over to a group of German soldiers, crying "On to Paris." He demonstrated his exclamation by marching backwards and then running away. A scene of such character is undoubtedly a musical puzzle. I, at least, don't know of anybody who could write a composition that could musically parallel such a situation. The only solution of such a problem is again the musical term "tacet," in conjunction with an effect such as a slow chromatic trombone smear from high to low during the scene where the boy walks backwards, followed by a quick smear from low to high when the boy runs away. This was exactly what I did. It is needless to emphasize that "tacet" was the responsible factor in influencing me to properly produce such an effect which the audience had sufficient time to grasp and understand.

In another part of the picture, a graveyard scene followed a chase of about ten minutes. This scene was of such a serious and mournful character that an organ solo was vital. Again the "tacet" of ten or fifteen seconds before the appearance of the graveyard scene was the only practical thing.

It is a technical impossibility to effectively segue from a ff. hurry to organ solo. I could mention hundreds of instances where a "tacet" mark is the only practical and perfectly medium to fittingly reflex certain situations and it is high time that musicians begin to consider this term as just as important as a dance number for a dancing scene or a march for a military scene. Of course, even the "tacet" mark, if overdone, and employed without judgment, is bound to create an opinion of laziness and incomptency.

I often employ the "tacet" term in my musical cue sheets, and I must confess I have been severely criticized for doing so, not only by musicians, but also by men in the same profession. I dare say that such criticism is unfair and unjust and must be considered an act of thoughtless judgment and ignorance of the situation prevailing during such cues.

It is easy to constructively criticize, but very hard to lecture in a constructive manner. No cue sheet is a perfect solution of a musical accompaniment. It was nothing and is nothing else but a continuity of the film production, divided into musical terms, demanding intelligent judgment and a sense of fittness for local color on the part of the executor, this being the only course of effectively employing such music cue sheets as an invaluable aid te musicians from an artistic, and to exhibitors from a financia standpoint.—THE EDITOR.

Review of Latest Musical Compositions

1—"Roses of Memory," by Bernard Hamblen. One of the best ballads of the year. Has the never failing appeal of simplicity and beauty combined. A refrain so haunting that it simply "grips" everyone who loves music. The most human song of the year. A wonderful melody. (Carl Fischer, Cooper Sq., N. Y.)

2—"Clematis," from the Boutonniere Suite of Gerard Tonning. Musicians engaged in film interpretation are always seeking that character of composition which suggests melody together with subtle agitation. In "Clematis" we find an entirely original and beautifully melodic composition which lends itself to extreme phrasing, and when tried in manuscript form by New York's leading directors, was acclaimed an acquisition to any musician's library. (Belwin, Inc., 701 7th Ave., N. Y.)

3—"Canterbury Bells," from the Boutonniere Suite by Gerard Tonning. Miss Marguerite Clark, Miss Mary Pickford and Miss Gladys Leslie are always difficult to musically interpret upon the screen, because they need charming and pleasing music, but of a light order. Such is the value of "Canterbury Bells," delightfully appropriate for garden scenes or as a love or character theme for pictures in which the three above-mentioned beautiful stars are frequently offered. (Belwin, Inc.)

4—"Then You'll Know You're Home." One-step by Jesse Winne. Although this number is only a few weeks old, it has already attracted such notice that we predict for it the greatest popularity of any Dance Number ever published. It's full of pep, and just MAKES 'em dance. Don't wait—get it now and be in line with the other up-to-date leaders (Chappell & Co., 41 E. 34th St.)

5—"A Little Birch Canoe and You" is a slow, dreamy walt —you simply cannot resist it. It is one of these "toe teasers" that dancers rave over. A positive overnight hit whose rippling, silvery strains are heard at all society functions. It is in a distinct class by itself—and establishes new precedent in the art of waltz writing. (J. H. Remick 217 W. 46th St., N. Y.)

6—"Egyptland," by Jas. W. Casey. "Forster" uncork another hit. We believe this will be as popular a "Hindustan." (Forster Music Co., 736 S. Mich. Ave., Chicago.)

7—"Arabian Nights." An Oriental number with the insinuating, swinging melody of the land of the sphinx. Th song and instrumental sensation of the musical season. Thi exceptionally attractive number has won great favor amon America's foremost singers, and is especially featured b dumb acts and all other acts using instrumental music. AT. H Harms, 62 W. 45th St., N. Y.)

8—"By the Camp Fire," by Percy Wenrich. It's the bes tune Wenrich ever wrote—and that's "going some!" Ne York has simply gone wild over the wonderful overnight hi They're playing, singing, dancing and whistling it in ever nook and corner of the city where is anything like musi (Le. Feist, 249 W. 40th St., N. Y.)

9—"Sweet Hawaiian Moonlight." The dreamiest, dancie of waltzes. The greatest Edison Record success. (M Kinley Music Co., 147 W. 45th St. N. Y.)

"Daughter of Mine" for New Goldwyn Picture

A NEW SONG called "Daughter of Mine," composed by Leo Feist, Inc., expressly for Madge Kennedy's latest Goldwyn Picture, "Daughter of Mine," is now entering upon a career in the world of music. The cover of the song bears the following dedication: "Dedicated to Madge Kennedy—The Dream Girl of the Screen." This is followed by a line which reads: "By courtesy of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation."

The new ballad is a singular tribute to the fame and popularity of the Goldwyn star. The decision to compose a song by the same title as the picture was reached by the Executive Committee of the Feist corporation. The Goldwyn billing on "Daughter of Mine" came to the attention of a Feist "reader," who immediately concluded that the sweet sounding title, the sentiment and thought behind it and the ever-growing popularity of lovable Madge Kennedy, would combine to form a most appealing and appropriate popular song.

The words of the song "Daughter of Mine" are by Sidney D. Mitchell; music by Archie Gottler. These composers have a long list of successful songs to their credit, but in "Daughter of Mine," Messrs. Mitchell and Gottler see their most fanciful composition.

Belwin's Latest Aquisition

ONE of the most important deals has just been consummated by Belwin, Inc., 701 Seventh avenue, New York City, thse livest, most progressive and most representative music publishing concern and jobbers of music in the United States, specializing in musical service to the motion picture industry. They have secured the exclusive distribution of the entire Luz publications, consisting of the Famous Luz Standard Series, A. B. C. Dramatic Series, Luz Photo-Play Edition, Descriptive Suite Series and the miscellaneous and concert music.

Negotiations have been pending for over a year on this transaction, owing to the difficulties arising from international copyrights.

Belwin, Inc., have entirely revised prices on this catalogue, and those which are now quoted by them are strictly net. The directors of Belwin, with their keen business acumen, foresaw the difficulties musicians had in discerning the net cost of music, and decided to eliminate the camouflage of so-called professional prices. The policy of selling music, subject to these so-called professional discounts, is deceiving. It is obvious that discount to be deducted must first be added, and as every purchaser of music is today allowed the professional discount, they decided to discontinue such a misleading policy, and committed themselves to strictly net prices, not only on the Luz publications, but also on all their own.

Belwin, Inc., is to be congratulated upon such a timely and appropriate acquisition, and we would suggest that our readers avail themselves at the earliest opportunity of this valuable collection of music, which will greatly enhance their efforts in film interpretation.

Moore's Rialto Theatre Now Used for Premieres at Washington

THE outstanding superiority of Moore's Rialto theatre, in Washington, as the ideal theatre in America in which to attain the most perfect effect in picture presentation is impressing itself upon representative film producers throughout the country.

Moore's Rialto is not a theatre originally built to house audible drama and now merely being used as a temporary home of the cinema. It was minutely planned and painstakingly constructed to realize the highest art of which the camera is capable. The seating arrangements, with a capacity of 2,000, are all on one floor. There is no balcony to distort projection or smother patrons seated beneath. There are, consequently, no pillars or posts to annoy the pleasure-seeker and no steps to be climbed.

Music at the Railto is a daily feature of genuinely noteworthy excellence. The symphony orchestra of thirty, under the direction of Mr. Daniel Breeskin, is by far the finest permanent musical organization in the Capital, and specially constructed fiber screen and high-voltage projection contribute to the uniform brilliance that characterizes the Rialto's pictured dramas.

These distinct advantages over a majority of the so-called "picture palaces" to which public patronage is invited, place the Rialto in a class by itself as a concrete fulfillment of the highest ideals of an art that is only beginning to come to full fruition. It is this irrefutable fact that is permeating to the inner consciousness of the industry's cognoscenti.

The most recent evidence of the admitted supremacy of Moore's Rialto is found in the selection of this house by Maurice Tourneur for the world premiere of "The White Heather," the latest of the famous Drury Lane melodramas to be adapted to the silver sheet by this Franco-American master of the technique of direction.

"The White Heather" was the major offering at Moore's Rialto the week of March 2, this showing representing a pre-release of several weeks in advance of the Broadway exhibition of the subject.

The Rialto indeed deserves the warm tributes paid it. The Rialto is the most imposing temple of the cinema in the Capital City and one of the most magnificent on the continent.

The front of the building on Ninth Street is of Indiana limestone with inlaid panels of imported marble. The ticket booth, accommodating two cashiers, occupies the center of a vestibule opening into the entrance lobby, in Grecian Ionic style, finished in marble and lighted by a concealed cove system. The color scheme here is blue and gold. Instead of giving into the theatre proper, the entrance lobby leads to the marble foyer, a unique feature in theatre design. This spacious lounging place—70 x 50 and 35 feet high—is an exact reproduction in marble, silk and Tiffany glass of the Temple of Apollo, with statuary in wall niches, an electric fountain in the center and singing birds in decorative cages at frequent intervals about the circumference of the room. The dome is surmounted by a Tiffany glass skylight installed at a cost of $2,000 and lighted from above by a multiple-color system. Off of either side of this superb innovation in playhouse arrangement open the rest rooms for ladies and gentlemen.

From the foyer access is gained directly to the auditorium proper, an immense hall, without balcony or gallery, seating 2,000 people on one floor. This enormous auditorium has a double cove dome fifty feet high and is lighted by a multiple- color system controlled by a system of dimmers from three separate switchboards.

The walls are panelled in plum-colored silk tapestry with which the upholstery of the orchestra chairs is harmonized, and the trimmings of the wall panels and balustrades are in Pavanazzo marble. Through the center of the house in horseshoe shape runs a tier of loge boxes, with Pavanazzo balustrades, seated with wicker easy chairs upholstered in canary silk. The boxes are stepped up sufficiently to command a clear view of the orchestra and screen over the heads of those occupying the orchestra chairs in front, and the orchestra chairs to the rear, in turn, are elevated to a point sufficient to enable the occupants to view the stage and screen unobstructed. In fact every seat in the Rialto is an obsolutely clear-view seat, there being no supports, pillars or posts of any description, and patrons have not a step to climb from the moment they enter the Ninth street door until they again emerge upon the street.

The orchestra, instead of being submerged in the usual trench, is placed upon a slightly raised platform immediately in front of the stage, surrounded by decorative tropical plants. The stage is so arranged as to place the screen at a distance of thirty-five feet from the nearest front-row orchestra chair. At each side of the screen opening are magnificent illuminated paintings representing Grecian field scenes, and over the proscenium is an arch of lattice-work through which additional tinted lighting is secured by the multiple-color system. The curtains concealing the stage paintings and the screen are of plum-colored silk velour, with canary panels bearing heroic figures, and the screen curtain is of satin.

The Rialto was designed by the firm of Blanke and Zink of Baltimore, New York and Washington, and was constructed under the personal supervision of Mr. John Zink by the Weller Construction Company. The color schemes which add dignity as well as artistic pre-eminence to a house of superlative charm were originated by Mrs. Moore, whose keen sense of harmony and beauty is further exemplified in the neatness and chic of the uniforms worn by the girl ushers and other house attaches. The interior decorations were executed by Sielke, the foremost mural artist in the United States.

The Rialto is the latest addition to the chain of downtown first-run photoplay theatres operated in Washington by Moore's Theatres Corporation, whose Strand, Garden and Plaza theatres for years have blazed the way in picture presentation in the Capital. The president of the organization is Tom Moore, franchise holder in the First National Exhibitors' Circuit and Washington's pioneer film man. Mr. Moore is an exhibitor of national prominence and one of the keenest judges of picture values in America. The secretary-treasurer of the company is Mr. J. A. Muehleisen and the general manager Mr. E. G. Evans.

Chemical Fog

How to Mix the Acid Hardener

Prepare the acid hardening solution as a separate stock solution and add this to the hypo solution as required.

The order of mixing is important, as follows:

(a) When mixing in one vessel, first dissolve the alum in warm water, then add the acid and add the sulphite immediately, otherwise if the acid alum solution is allowed to stand the alum will crystalize out again. It is sometimes recommended to reverse the process, namely, dissolve the sulphite first, add the acid, and then the alum, but unless the alum is finely powdered this does not readily dissolve unless the solution is war, in which case sulphur dioxide gas is given off from the acid sulphite solution.

(b) The best method is to dissolve the alum and sulphite in separate solutions, cool, add the acid to the sulphite and then add the alum solution.

If the order of mixing is reversed and the alum first added to the sulphite a white sludge of aluminum sulphite is formed which dissolves with difficulty when the acid is added. Therefore if after mixing the hardener is milky and a sludge settles out, this is due to a relative insufficiency of acid, that is the acid used was either not up to strength, or too much alum or sulphite was added.

With all other hardening baths the order of mixing is the same.

FIXING BATH TROUBLES

1. Milkiness of the fixing bath.

Sometimes a fixing bath turns milky immediately on adding the hardener, and sometimes after being in use for some time. The milkiness may be of two kinds:

A. If the precipitates settles very slowly on standing, the milkiness is due to sulphur and may be due to the following causes:

(a) Too much acid in the hardener.

(b) Too little sulphite or the use of impure sulphite, in which case there is not sufficient present to protect the hypo from the acid.

(c) High temperature. The hardener should only be added to the hypo solution when at room temperature. If the temperature of the acid fixing bath is over 85° F. it will not remain clear longer than a few days even when mixed correctly. The only remedy is to throw the bath away and mix fresh solution as required.

B. If the milkiness disappears on standing for a few hours, and a gelatinous sludge of aluminum sulphite settles out, this is caused by:

(a) Too little acid in the hardener. For example, supposing a formula calls for pure glacial acetic acid and 28% acid is used by mistake, then we have added less than one-third the required amount.

(b) Too little hardener in the fixing bath. When fixing prints, a relatively large proportion of the developer is carried over to the fixing bath which soon neutralizes the acid and therefore permits of the formation of aluminum sulphite. In the same way a fixing bath with the correct proportion of hardener when exhausted still contains alum and sulphite but no acid, and these combine to form a sludge of aluminum sulphite.

It is extremely important therefore to use only acid of known strength, because trouble is caused if we use either more or less acid than is called for in the formula.

2. The bath does not harden.

A frequent cause of insufficient hardening is the use of inferior alum which does not contain the correct proportion of aluminum sulphate. An exhausted bath which is alkaline will also harden very slowly, since alum hardens best only in acid solution.

Miscellaneous Solutions

The number of miscellaneous solutions used in photography for intensifying, reducing, toning, etc., is so large that it is beyond the scope of this article to deal with individual cases. The method of procedure is much the same as when mixing developers, and the order of mixing is usually stated very specifically.

Substitution of Chemicals

Occasion often arises when the photographer is out of stock of some particular chemical and he is tempted to substitute the chemical by another. In this chapter it will be shown how far substitution is possible in the case of developing and fixing baths, though the remarks will usually apply also to solutions in general.

Pictures Reviewed in Advance

[In addition to Advance Reviews—covering pictures shown too early to be included in The Complete Plan Book—readers will also find under this heading each week the reviews of short features and serial episodes.]

Two Educationals

("Sundown" and the Third Photoplay Supplement)

ANATOLE FRANCE never bethought himself of the motion picture when he wrote as his definition of criticism, "the record of a soul's adventures among the masterpieces." But, excusing ourselves before everybody for the parallel, this is just the record that a review of Robert C. Bruce's "Sundown" must be. Never, to our recollection, has Mr. Bruce compiled a more beautiful subject. The various views recorded on its single reel are the most inspiring that it has been our pleasure to see.

These views—mountains in the background, lakes, stream and forests to the fore—have been photographed into the setting sun. The tinting and toning is exquisite, the selection of scenes bespeak of the true artist. With all this beauty, when the author breaks into poetry or highly imaginative subtitles of his own writing, the effect is more like one uninterrupted dream than a mere motion picture. Personally, we think "Sundown" the best of Mr. Bruce's new series.

The third issue of the Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement contains intimate pictures of such well-known screen folk as Priscilla Dean, Jack Ford, Edith Storey, Dustin Farnum, J. Warren Kerrigan, Mae Marsh, William Russell and Geraldine Farrar. The reel is well edited and cleverly titled.—Peter Milne.

"Forbidden Fire"

(Starring Louise Glaum.—Presented by J. Parker Read, Jr.)

J. PARKER READ certainly has a valuable piece of picture property in "Forbidden Fire." And besides being good property it is good art. Probably the best thing that can be said about it is that in story interest, scenic investiture and lavishness of setting it brings back to mind the old pictures that Miss Glaum did for Thomas H. Ince. It brings all these back and it goes them just one better in every capacity. For as regards story, "Forbidden Fire," by the technically excellent and versatile C. Gardner Sullivan, presents a series of living characters in a series of situations fraught with strength and commanding power. And as regards atmosphere and setting the feature can well boast its superlative degree in these lines. The desert stuff is admirable indeed.

Telling the story of a faithless wife who deserted her husband when he was nearing success on an irrigation project on the Sahara, to find that the life of luxury she craved and which the Baron Alexis gave to her is void of happiness, then to find her husband a hopeless wreck from disappointment and drugs, to begin his rebuilding, believing that the shadow of death hangs over her if the man regains his faculties, the picture carries the spectator through a series of dramatically strong episodes, each one acted, directed and set with the utmost in artistry and effect.

Miss Glaum has never played with a more sincere show of feeling than in her role of the frivolous wife who learns to suffer and to love through her husband's misfortune. Mr. Sullivan doubtless wrote the part with the actress in mind and as a consequence something of a perfect union has been reached between the conception and the characterization

The picture was produced under the supervision of Allan Dwan, a statement of fact that in its mere self carries the suggestion of excellence. Art Rosson is credited with the directing. Some very fine art titles by I. V. Martin are included in the film while the photographic work of Charles Stumar offers still another occasion for praise.—Length 6,000 feet.—Peter Milne.

"WHEN A GIRL LOVES"—JEWEL

Immense Both from the Box Office and from the Screen

THERE can be little, if any, doubt regarding the great value of this production, for besides offering the exhibitor a star in the person of Mrs. Charlie Chaplin, the story it presents is vitally strong, and to match its many dramatic highlights it has snatches of comedy that instantly appeal to the popular mind.

The reviewer was present at the Broadway Theatre at a crowded Saturday matinee exhibition of the film and the audience practically "ate the picture up." It was interested in the star, immensely so; there were whispers on her entrance and even the succeeding times she appeared comments could be heard throughout the house.

But "When a Girl Loves" offers real entertainment after it has drawn the crowds. The story of the bad man who assumes a minister's role, at first for evil purposes, and who is won over to the side of right by a combination of influences, proves intensely interesting.

Lois Weber in her direction of the picture has staged it with full command of her craft and has proven herself in this work excellent in the dual capacity of author and director. William Stowell makes a commanding hero.—Length, 6 reels.—Peter Milne.

CATCH LINES

In which a bad man is called upon to assume the role of a parson. How his reform is negotiated through his assumed character and the faith placed in him by a girl forms one of the strongest and most entertaining photoplays of the year.

He feigned piety, honesty—he posed as a minister of the gospel. In reality he was a highway robber with a purpose in view as disastrous as it was vile and mean. But his feigned personality overcame his real self. For when a girl loves miracles will happen. See "When a Girl Loves," now at the ——— theatre.

AD TALK

Mildred Harris, otherwise known as Mrs. Charlie Chaplin, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest Jewel photoplay entitled "When a Girl Loves." Lois Weber, the star's director in all her previous pictures, both wrote and produced this offering, which is unusual in many respects. The star is supported by such well-known players as Wiliam Stowell in the opposite role, Alfred Paget as heavy, and Willis Marks and Wharton Jones in other parts of prominence. Broadly speaking, "When a Girl Loves" could be described as a western picture, but certainly the unconventionality of its story puts it in a class quite apart from the usual run of pictures dealing with the wild and woolly plains.

Miss Harris is awarded the role of the daughter of a minister who in on a train bound west, where he hopes to recuperate. Just before the train reaches its destination it is boarded by Eagle Ryan, in reality the leader of a notorious band of outlaws, but who poses before Bess and her father as an honest rancher. He offers them the hospitality of his ranch and, they having accepted, he goes on to the town and poses as the minister. His object is, of course, to locate a gold shipment. But his assumed role and the faith placed in him by Bess and her aged father work a miraculous change on the stony-hearted Eagle. Before many days have passed he is preaching the gospel to the wicked inhabitants of Oatman, and when it comes to a case of stealing the gold, Ryan is unable to go on with the job!

THE STORY

Eagle Ryan is leader of a notorious band of outlaws operating near the lawless city of Oatman. They plan to get a large shipment of gold which they know will come into the express office before long. Ryan learns that a minister is bound to Oatman for his health, together with his daughter, Bess. Boarding the train before it reaches their destination, he invites the easterners to make their home at his ranch. His invitation is accepted and Ryan goes on posing as the minister. When he enters the town his first encounter is with Ben Grant, the boss and bully of the place. In a terriffic encounter he bests him and then announces his intention of preaching next Sunday in the very barroom itself.

His attitude and his announcement draw a large crowd on the Sunday stipulated, and Eagle Ryan enters upon his task with a zest he cannot understand. Heretofore he had defied God and all thought of religion. Now he warms to his topic and preaches such a sermon that tears course the cheeks untouched for years. The town begins to talk. The minister thanks him and Bess looks up to him in admiration. Ryan tries to shake off the spell, but it is to no avail. The religion is working on him.

Then one of the old gang gets wind that the gold shipment lies in the express office with Ryan guarding it. Bess overhears them plotting and rides to save the man in whom she has so much faith. And this faith proves the making of him. He resists the bandits, saves the gold, but is severely wounded. On his recovery he confesses all—but is forgiven by both the townsfolk and by Bess, whom he has now grown to love.

"NEVER SAY QUIT"—FOX

George Walsh's Stunts Well Shuffled with Ralph Spence's Puns

THE striking things about this comedy are George Walsh's stunts and Ralph Spence's subtitles. With the former exhibitors are well acquainted; with the latter also they have come in contact heretofore. Mr. Spence has the habit of delivering a pun in every subtitle. Not only does he twist the English language to achieve this effect, but he even goes so far as to give his characters names that he can put upon. For example: Introducing Captain Zero—there were many bad men in Sing Sing, but none below Zero! Edson's "Slow Train Through Arkansas" is nothing compared to Spence's subtitles. How these quips and puns are received by an audience is something of a mystery to the writer—exhibitors may know judging from the last George Walsh feature.

In other respects "Never Say Quit" is superior to "Luck and Pluck." Director Edward Dillon has kept the action moving at a good clip and the stunts are realistically executed. The plot, by Raymond Schrock, is sufficient to carry the action and the gags, while the athletic star is surrounded by a competent cast.—Length, 5 reels.—Released March 16.—Peter Milne.

CATCH LINES

Would you sleep in room No. 13? Would you walk under a ladder, or let a black cat run across your path without suffering certain qualms of apprehension? Would you sit at a table with twelve others or start on an important trip on Friday, the thirteenth? In other words, are you superstitious? Reginald Jones wasn't, even though there were thirteen letters in his name. But a jinx pursued him, a jinx he could only shake when—but see "Never Say Quit," George Walsh's latest Fox picture. It's one of the merriest affairs ever presented at the ——— theatre.

George Walsh's latest Fox comedy is full of peppery fun, smart stunts, clever subtitles. It has action and lots of it, comedy and lots of it, unconventional stuff, and lots of that, too. See it at the ——— theatre.

A story of a man who tried hard not to be superstitious. A jinx follows him through four hilarious reels of comedy. But in the fifth hilarious reel he shakes it—forever—see George Walsh in "Never Say Quit."

AD TALK

Ever get followed all about by a jinx? Reginald Jones was relentlessly pursued by one. He was born on thirteen minutes after thirteen on the thirteenth month of the year and on Friday the thirteenth. Of course some of this is impossible but it makes the story easier to tell. When he was thirteen years old he dropped a mirror, walked under a ladder and saw a black cat dash madly across his path. He then discovered he had thirteen cents in his pocket and that his name had thirteen letters in it. Of course Reginald wasn't superstitious but then—so many thirteens made him feel a bit uneasy.

Well, the jinx did pursue Reginald. When he grew up everything to which he turned his hands turned back on him. He attempted to rescue a lady in distress and was rebuffed by the lady herself. He turned to another fair damsel whose late-male-companion was speaking harsh words to her, and before he got through he was fleeced of all his money and his watch. He missed his aunt's funeral, and by so doing missed a fortune, and then his uncle turned him into the cold world to hunt for a job.

And here is where the turning point in Reginald's career happened in. You'll see it on the screen of the ——— theatre, where "Never Say Quit," the latest Fox picture starring George Walsh, is being shown. It's full of stunts and clever comedy and peppery subtitles, and if you can't laugh at it we'll know that Reginald's jinx has turned on you. Edward Dillon directed the picture and, believe us, he's made a dandy job of it all. If you like to laugh you'll go crazy over "Never Say Quit."

THE STORY

Reginald Jones—thirteen letters in his name, count 'em—was pursued by an unlucky jinx all his life. Nothing ever went right. One day when he was in a restaurant and thought to rescue a lady in distress he rammed his unsuspecting head into the midst of a nice little badger game and got fleeced of all his money. Then when he had borrowed more from his uncle in order to attend his aunt's funeral—an act that would bring him her fortune—and when he had bought his ticket he ran into the badger crew and attacked them. The upshot was that he missed his train, missed his funeral and went back to his uncle's to attend his own financial funeral.

"Go down to the sea and land a job there," his uncle told him in no uncertain terms. So Reginald went down and landed a position as sailor on board a ship manned by Captain Zero.

"ALIAS, MIKE MORAN"—PARAMOUNT

A Real Human Character the Center of Fine Story

NO one familiar with picture production who read Frederic Orin Bartlett's "Open Sesame" in the Saturday Evening Post, could have missed its screen possibilities. The story of the slacker who gave an ex-convict his name that he might serve, the slacker who was shamed into becoming a hero when he learned that "his name" had gone down to glorious death in France, appeared as a fascinating picture even on the printed page. And through the Lasky production department Paramount has given the story real life, thrill, sensation, honest emotion, in its newer form.

Wallace Reid was a happy selection for the star part. He makes of Larry Young, alias Mike Moran, a human figure, human because he is weak and bad and because on him the war works its mysterious regeneration the way it has on thousands of others. We feel like offering thanks to the writer and producer of today who works such a human being into a story. The greater number of our heroes are fellows that have never turned a dirty trick, they are little gods, not members of the flesh and blood family.

The exhibitor should have no hesitation in taking the picture because it has the war background. It is this sort of a war story that lives despite time and the seasons of public fancy. Anne Little and Emory Johnson are good in other roles of importance.—Length, 5 reels.—Peter Milne.

AD TALK

Many of our patrons who are readers of the Saturday Evening Post will recall the story printed in ite columns some time ago entitled "Open Sesame," by Frederic Orrin Bartlett. Written around a coward who found his strength through a peculiar series of circumstances, this story was pronounced one of the best pieces of fiction ever carried in the popular weekly. Now, under the title of "Alias Mike Moran," it has been made into a Paramount picture with Wallace Reid as the star. And as "Open Sesame" stood as one of the best pieces of fiction ever written, "Alias Mike Moran" stands as one of the best five-reel pictures ever produced. There is nothing lavish about it—nothing spectacular—but it presents one of the cleverest character studies of a man ever brought to the screen and presents it by way of a fascinating and unusual plot.

Larry Young is a coward. There is no getting away from it. He wants to dodge the draft, and he finally secures a substitute to go in his place. But he must also disappear. He must live the other man's life—the life of an ex-convict. And then he learns that the man who went to fight that he might stay home had died a glorious death on the field of battle. Larry Young is a name that is praised! And Larry Young is alive, living under the alias of Mike Moran. How Larry repays the debt and lives to be a better fellow is absorbingly told in the picture.

Wallace Reid makes a thoroughly real character of Larry Young, while his support embraces such well-known Paramount players as Emory Johnson, Ann Little, Charles Ogle and Edythe Chapman. Don't miss "Alias Mike Moran." It's real.

THE STORY

Larry Young was a ribbon clerk but he hated to admit it. His salary permitted a few good clothes, and he was good-looking enough and sufficiently well bred to go among the rich and get away on a grand bluff. Larry was getting along very nicely until a certain war happened and a certain draft act was put through a certain congress. Then Larry's pedal extremities started to get frigid. Other people would have called him a coward. Larry thought the war, the congress and the draft act to blame for spoiling his good time. It was particularly aggravating seeing as he had just met Elaine, a girl he thought was the daughter of a millionaire ship-builder. A strong attachment had sprung up between the two. However, the draft was on.

Larry had met Mike Moran, ex-convict, who thought it pretty hard the country wouldn't give him a chance to show the stuff he was made of. He looked something like Larry, and the upshot of it was that they changed identities. But after the bogus Larry's departure, alias Mike Moran discovered that he would have to go somewhere else. Everyone thought him a hero, most of all Elaine. So he went to work in a shipyard and after a while read of "his" death on the field of honor. And then something stirred within him—some impulse forced him to Canada, to enlist and to fight that the name of Mike Moran might be covered with as much glory as was the name of Larry Young. He was wounded on the field, and when he recovered it was in a hospital with Elaine bending over him. To her he told the whole story and she forgave him—anyway, she had been masking too, for she was only companion to the shipbuilder's daughter.

CATCH LINES

Larry Young was a coward—his ignorance of life made him such, although he himself didn't know it. Then one day he found himself. He read in the paper that Larry Young had died a hero's death on the field of battle! He knew that the man's real name was Mike Moran. Mike, ex-convict, had gone to war in Larry's place and had covered the coward's name with glory. And it was not until then that Larry decided that the debt must be repaid. He would glorify the name of Mike Moran! See how he accomplished his purpose in the unusual photoplay, "Alias Mike Moran."

He was a draft-dodger, a coward—he lived a false life—he finally assumed another man's name to escape wearing the uniform. Then when he knew himself safe he was dissatisfied. His cowardice slipped from him and he wanted to fight? But could he? Had not his lies forced him into an assumed role that he had to maintain or face prison instead? See "Alias Mike Moran," one of the best Paramount pictures—and that's saying a lot.

Adapted from Frederic Orrin Bartlett's Saturday Evening Post story, "Open Sesame"—it was one of the fiction hits of that publication—it's one of the hits of the screen.

A careful perusal of the story will immediately suggest to you the strong selling point in this

FIRST off, the hero of this picture would do anything to get out of fighting. After he does skin out of it, he'd do anything to get in! And get in, he did, by heck! Just like all the boys now coming home. See him! See Wallace Reid at his best!

"TOTON"—TRIANGLE

Looks Like Star's Best Bet on Triangle Program

OLIVE THOMAS renews her acquaintance with those followers of Triangle releases, in "Toton," written by Catherine Carr and produced under the direction of Frank Borzage. Jack Mackenzie photographed. Relating as it does, a picturesque story of the Paris underworld and presenting Miss Thomas in a role that draws upon those characteristics which made this little star the hit of New York famed revue, Ziegfeld Follies, a few seasons ago, one does not go far amiss in reviewing this Triangle offering as the best that Miss Thomas has done on that program.

There is a sympathetic note sounded throughout the narrative and with the assistance of real, artistic support from Norman Kerry, Jack Perrin and Francis McDonald, whose characterization of the Paris Apache is to be noted as one of the strong points of the photodrama, Miss Thomas has brought her audiences to the doors of the Paris underworld and has shown them the pathos and spice of its life.

It's appeal is akin to that felt in reading an O. Henry story. The human interest is there and has been brought out by a cast of capable players. The photography is typically Triangle, which means that it is of the best. Frank Borgaze staged one of his best program features when he produced "Toton."

AD TALK

Olive Thomas, heralded by Harrison Fisher as one of the most beautiful show girls in America, appears in the dual role of an artist's model, and her child, in the Triangle Special Production "Toton," to be shown on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Miss Thomas first plays the part of a beautful French model, Yvonne, who is wooed and won by an American artist.

When her husband is called home at his mother's death, the father has the marriage of his son secretly annulled. Yvonne dies after giving birth to a little girl baby, who is then brought up by an Apache as a boy and taught to become the most expert pickpocket in the Latin quarter.

In the role of Toton, the little girl-boy thief, Olive Thomas is said to have distinguished herself as not only a beautiful woman but as a clever delineator of boy characters.

In the rapidly moving series of events and tense situations another romance is lived and the first German shell reaching Paris from the long range gun formed the climax of the story, and reunited father, daughter and sweetheart.

The plot is impressive and rich in sentimental appeal. Two well known actors were engaged especially for Olive Thomas in this production. Norman Kerry and Jack Perrin portray the leading male roles and Francis McDonald, of the Triangle playing forces, has a strong part as the Apache sweetheart to whom the care of the model's child is entrusted.

Leading critics pronounce "Toton" as the best thing that Olive Thomas has ever done.

THE STORY

David Lane, an American, meets Yvonne, a beautiful French girl in the Latin quarter of Paris. He sees in her the Madonna-like beauty that inspires him to implore that she pose for him, and in the days that follow they fall in love and have a happy honeymoon after their hasty marriage.

When Lane is called to America by the death of his mother, his father took advantage of the opportunity that offered and had his lawyers secure an annulment of the marriage of his son in Paris.

Yvonne dies shortly after the birth of her child, "Toton," and the little girl baby is entrusted to the care of her friend Pierre, an Apache. In revenge for the sorrow which Pierre believes that the American has brought wittingly to Yvonne, the little motherless girl is brought up as a boy and trained to become the most skilled pickpocket of the Latin quarter.

In the meantime, Toton's father has grown to middle age. He has never married again but has adopted a boy as his son. This boy, Carew, goes to Paris with his father, to pursue their artistic careers, and Toton becomes Carew's guide and studio boy.

When an attempt to rob their studio of valuable paintings, is made by Pierre, he recognizes Lane as the American he believes is responsible for the sorrowful death of Yvonne. In revenge he reveals to Lane the identity of Toton, educated as a thief, and taught to hate all things American.

But the European war and the subsequent shelling of Paris, brings about situations that convince Pierre of Lane's complete innocence in the injury brought about by his apparent neglect of Yvonne.

Pierre is injured, but lives to reveal to Toton the identity of her father and to see them happily united. Later, when America enters the war, Toton becomes the happy wife of Carew.

CATCH LINES

A round trip ticket from happiness to poverty —and back.

Olive Thomas portrays international romance in a dual role.

A beautlful love story filled with thrills of two generations.

Big Bertha's first shell into Paris united three fond hearts.

Toton was a girl in boy's clothes among the Parisian Apaches.

Toton's mother was the beautiful Parisian model of an American artist.

Toton, and Toton's mother of another generation, is portrayed by Olive Thomas.

Paris and the famed Latin quarter before America entered the world war.

SUGGESTIONS

When an exhibitor books this picture he should bear in mind that the star, Olive Thomas, is heralded by the famous artist, Harrison Fisher, as the most beautiful show girl in America. Therefore her cuts should be displayed in every available spot on all the advertising. Her photographs should also be profusely displayed throughout the lobby.

The prospective patrons should be reminded that they will witness a vivid portrayal of the famed Latin quarter of Paris before America's entrance in the World War. It should be emphasized that the clever characterizations of the beautiful Olive Thomas enables her to portray in a dual role a fascinating French model and also a boy understudy to a Parisian Fagin. From riches and happiness to poverty and wretchedness. She registers on both extremes of the social scale in two romances that thrill and captivate.

"THE END OF THE GAME"—HODKINSON

Too Much Footage in This Western of '49 Days

HERE we have the western feature laid back in the days of '49, with the dance hall, roulette wheel and poker table, all serving faithfully, in fact serving overtime during the course of the picture's run. Overtime because the action laid about the gaming tables, the bar, etc., and, for that matter, because all the action in the production is greatly prolonged. Our old friend tempo must needs enter into the review. The tempo of "The End of the Game" has no celerity in its makeup. The story could have been told and dismissed in half the footage.

AD TALK

J. Warren Kerrigan, the romantic western actor, will be seen in his latest photoplay entitled "The End of the Game" on ——— of ——— week at the ——— theatre. "The End of the Game" is a fine western picture written by George Elwood Jenks and directed by Jesse D. Hampton. In it the star has a thoroughly congenial role, taking the part of a western gambler of the good type, a man somewhat alone among the many cutthroats and crooked gamblers of the days of '49 in California.

This man, Burke Allister, see two strangers from the east arrive in town one day and hears the leader of the lawless element, Middleton, decide on a frameup, from which he will rescue them and so gain the gratitude of the girl. Allister, however, forestalls him and it is he who is the gallant of the occasion and it is on him that Mary Miller bestows her words of thanks. Middleton is furious at this and he rests not until he has lied to Mary and put Allister in her bad graces.

How Allister proves himself the man and how he rescues Mary from the clutches of the villain are events which unite to create a picture of lasting power. Kerrigan receives sterling support from such popular and able players as Lois Wilson, Jack Richardson, George Field and Alfred Whitman. The picture is notable for its wonderful scenery and fine photographic effects.

THE STORY

Two strangers arrive in a California gold town in the days of '49. They are Frank Miller and his sister Mary. The young man is enthusiastic and believes he is about to embark on one of life's adventures that will net him handsome returns in the way of money. Mary is more skeptical. She knows her brother's weakneses and is somewhat afraid. In the town there are bad men galore and only one who boasts of some conscience. He is Burke Allister, a Virginian, who had drifted west, lured as were others, by the promises of rich strikes, and who had become something of a semi-profesional gambler because of his naturally lazy temperament.

It is Burke who befriends the Millers the first day of their arrival and it is Burke who, after he has seen Frank swindled of all his money, forces the crooked gamblers to let him win it back. But even after this lesson Frank persists in hanging around the gambling hall with the result that one fine day he is shot and killed by the operator of the roulette wheel. Because Burke is a friend of the girl, Middleton, leader of the lawless element, plans to get rid of him. Warned of this Burke and the girl depart and establish claims some distance from the town. They find no gold, however.

One of Middleton's henchmen finds the girl and says that Burke was really responsible for her brother's death. She denounces him and gives herself into the offered protection of Middleton. It is from this "protection" that Burk finally rescues her after he has learned of her predicament. Then Mary is willing to believe in Burke's virtue and she happily goes to his arms..

SUGGESTIONS

Next to the star, J. Warren Kerrigan, the most important thing to play up regarding this picture is the fact that it presents a story of the gold rush days in California in 1849. Use phrasing as colorful as possible in describing this character and locale of the picture and if you think it wise you can go the limit on the shooting and the gambling scenes, for these are prominent throughout the length of the picture.

This sort of advertising will certainly appeal to the younger element while there are many among the grown folks who like a story of this old-fashioned variety.

SUGGESTIONS

"Never Say Quit" offers you a splendid advertising line in the fact that the hero is pursued by a "jinx." The subtitles of the picture inform us of the fact that there are thirteen letters in his name, that he was born on Friday the thirteenth, in the thirteenth month of the year. Use this sort of argument in your advertising copy. Dwell on the fact that the hero made good despite all this superstition of bad luck that was wished on him from the start. If there is any way that you can link this "thirteen" stuff up with your presentation of the picture do so. For instance, if you show it on the thirteenth day of the month, if thirteen enters into the street number of your house, etc.

Use George Walsh's name prominently and dwell on the fact that he is a good stunt man. If you played the last Walsh picture to success, use the name of Eddie Dillon, the director.

Lastly, if you want to advertise the picture in its own language run it off for yourself first and note the subtitles. They are on the pun and practical joke order, and contain a lot of lines that you might find adaptable to your advertising copy.

But Zero and the other villains hadn't figured on Reginald. The jinx-pursued young man soon got wind of the plot and came to the rescue. This time success crowned his efforts and he succeeded in summoning aid from a revenue cutter and having the rascals cast in chains. And he won the heart of the professor's daughter also. Good Chance for Stone to Do His Acrobatics

THIS story suits the star particularly well and gives him an opportunity of displaying his remarkable ability for acrobatic stunts.

As compared to his first two pictures, this one is more interesting and entertaining, because the plot is a little better and the stunts appear less forced—they are introduced more naturally; the star's role is also more appealing to the human sympathies.

The hero's impersonation of a friend, at his request, forms the foundation of the plot. He thus saves his friend's young sister from becoming the wife of a worthless titled person. Incidentally, he marries the pretty maid, with whom he falls in love.

Besides the athletic tricks there are also a number of situations that will draw good laughs, and where this star is popular the picture should give good satisfaction.—Released March 9.—Length, 5 reels. —P. S. Harrison.

AD TALK

Fred Stone, the popular Artcraft stunt-comedian, will return again to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his latest photoplay, a version of the popular stage play, "Johnny Get Your Gun." This picture is considered the best of Mr. Stone's three pictures which he made in California last summer, and a bare outline of the plot will suffice to convince the reader that this is more than a promise.

Mr. Stone has the role of Johnny Wiggins, a cowboy film actor who goes east to Florida posing as his friend Bill Burnham, this gentleman being unable to negotiate the journey as he languishes in jail, the direct result of a little hasty shooting. Johnny's mission is to straighten out the matrimonial and financial tangle that Bill's sister, Janet, has managed to become enmeshed in. His task is rather difficult. Janet's aunt is barely civil to the western gentleman, and only tolerates him because she knows his signature is necessary on the marriage papers. Nor does the count, who is courting Janet, take kindly to Johnny.

But all this antagonism counts for naught. Johnny proceeds to baffle the count—lassoes him out of the automobile just as he is about to elope—and then by a motion picture trick retrieves Janet's fortune, which a dishonest person named Milton is manhandling. Then—no, you're wrong—Johnny doesn't marry Janet—but takes the maid, Ruth, and departs for the west again, promising that the real Bill will soon arrive to make things much more livelier for the easterners.

Mr. Stone is supported by a large cast of Paramount-Artcraft favorites, each one chosen for their particular suitability for the roles involved.

THE STORY

When his pal, Bill Burnham, is thrust into jail for shooting up the town, Johnny Wiggins, a cowboy stunt man, agrees to go west in his place to straighten the matrimonial and financial affairs of his (Bill's) sister, who is being courted by a worthless count. Bill tells him that as none of the family has seen him since he was a boy, the impersonation will be easy for him to get away with. So Johnny, alias Bill, jumps on a train bound for Florida, and there delivers a severe shock to all Janet Burnahm's friends, in particular her aunt and the count. However, they are civil to him because his signature is necessary on the marriage papers. Matters are made worse for the eastern folk when Johnny falls in love with the maid, Ruth.

The count's butler knows that Johnny is not the real Bill and, despite the cowboy's threats, tells his master. So the count decides to elope with Janet and makes the attempt that night. But Johnny is on the spot and ropes the titled gentleman as he is about to ride away in the machine. Next Johnny turns his attention to Milton, a corrupt railroad man who has invested Janet's money in bad stock. He visits his house and by a typical "movie" stunt wins back the money.

At this juncture Janet sees that the count isn't so good and turns back to her old sweetheart. Johnny then thinks his work done and after making known his identity departs for the west, saying that the real Bill will soon arrive and that they will like him better because he is so much livelier! And of course Ruth goes back with Johnny as his wife.

CATCH LINES

Fred Stone's third Artcraft picture, a version of the popular Broadway play, "Johnny Get Your Gun"—see this rollicking comedy at the ——— theatre.

The Count Bullion-nia insisted on eloping with Janet. "All right," thought Johnny, who had been sent to the east to guard over just such situations, "let him try." The count did try, and just as his automobile was whisking around the curve he felt a rope slip round him and the next minute he was hoisted off into midair. Johnny had used his lasso to good effect!

In which a motion picture cowboy comes east and startles a community with some real western atmosphere.

In which a select Florida community receives a sample of western pep—via a cowboy film actor. It's some sample he hands out. As for laughing—see "Johnny Get Your Gun."

SUGGESTIONS

Advertise this as the third and best of Fred Stone's Artcraft pictures. Be sure to make mention of the fact that it was adapted from the Broadway success of the same name.

Dwell on the fact that the hero, a cowboy film actor, comes to the east and settles the financial and matrimonial affairs of his pal's sister. Bring out this contrast between the east and the west in the most humorous way you can. It always seems to go, and there are many good comedies of the future destined to be based on this same contrast, even as there have been many good comedies in the past based on it.

Mention some of the stunts performed by the star, such as a western dance, lariat throwing, and his feat of lassoing the villain as he is about to elope with the girl.

tion that Jewel has been offering you in other of her pictures still remains on this one. The value of that combination lies in the fact that the pictures are produced under the direction of Lois Weber, the most celebrated woman director in the business. This is another advertising argument to bring out and one which should not be overlooked in the rush to play up the star's name.

The story herein offered is also of an unusual character. It offers a number of interesting angles of its own. A glance at the synopsis will offer the exhibitor the biggest selling angle it possesses, that is, the bad man's masquerading as the minister.

"THE REBELLIOUS BRIDE"—FOX

Peggy Hyland Gives Best Performance in Fairly Amusing Picture

MILDLY entertaining fluff is "The Rebellious Bride," in which Peggy Hyland appears. It seems as if Miss Hyland needed the west (this is her first picture made there) to bring out her vivacity and charm to their fullest extent. Mayhap it was her new director, Lynn F. Reynolds, who worked the trick, but at any rate the star's performance is more gratifying than any she has given heretofore.

The story is laid in the Ozark mountains and tells of a strong-willed young lady who refused to marry the man of her father's choice and who, as a consequence, was forced into a marriage with the first man who came along. This fellow happens to be a handsome young aviator.

During its course the story contains some amusing byplay between the bride and her amazed husband. The scenery is pretty and the action spirited. George Hernandez has a good comedy part and Pell Trenton registers a satisfactory hero. "The Rebellious Bride" will prove satisfactory for those in the mood to be laughed at.—Length, 5 reels.—Released March 23.—Peter Milne.

AD TALK

Consider the position of this aviator, Arthur Calloway by name. One fine day he sets out in his machine from the metropolis of St. Louis, happy and carefree, swooping through the air like a skylark. While over a certain lonely section of the Ozark mountains he is foced to make a landing and, on examining his engine, discovers it needs repairs that require certain tools he has not in his possession. Making his way toward the distant village, he sees coming along the road in an old buckboard an ancient man and a very pretty girl. When they are close to him the man jumps from the vehicle, points a gun at him and announces that he is to marry Cynthia—the girl—right then and there!

Arthur is inclined to object, inasmuch as he has never met the girl, but the old gentleman's gun tells another story. Therefore the marriage service is spoken over the two young heads and they are man and wife! You'll admit that this is an unusual beginning for a picture and, after you've seen it, you'll admit that there are many more unusual things about it. In fact, "The Rebellious Bride," the name of the picture that presents this story, is one of the most unusual and at the same time amusing pictures that it has ever been out pleasure to present. It is filled with comedy, pretty romance and unusual story interest.

It is a Fox picture and can be seen at the ———theatre on ——— of ——— week, with charming Peggy Hyland playing the role of the girl. The picture was produced under the direction of Lynn Reynolds, than whom there is no better equipped director for making a pretty, humorous, outdoor picture of this variety.

THE STORY

Cynthia Quimby, a child of the Ozark mountains, has no desire to marry the man of her father's choice—Tobe Plunkett, the fat and oily school teacher of the community. Cynthia is as bright and carefree as the mountains surrounding her home and she hasn't thought seriously on romance at all. But she knows her mind. And Tobe looms as a prospective husband that must be side-tracked at all costs. Cynthia has a great admirer in Jeff Peters, somewhat of a disreputable character, and to him she confides herself. Jeff learns that Cynthia isn't at all agreeable to the wedding, and also that she wouldn't mind a great deal if he broke up the ceremony. The which, on the arrived day, Jeff proceeds to do in no uncertain way—at the point of a gun.

Then he rides off with Cynthia, but she evades him and takes refuge in a mountain cave where she spends the night. As luck would have it her father finds her there the next morning just after Jeff has found her. The old gentleman suspects the worst and angrily declares that Cynthia shall marry the first man they meet on their way home. And the first man is Arthur Calloway, an aviator from St. Louis. The amazed gentleman is forced into the marriage and then left with Cynthia. After three days serving her wishes he escapes and returns to his home. But home is a void, and after a time he wakes up to the fact that she loves him. And Cynthia has come to the conclusion that she loves her husband, and it isn't long before she arrives in St. Louis and finds "her man." The happy ending sighted, they are left to a life of wedded bliss, we hope.

CATCH LINES

Arthur Calloway was forced to come out of the air to repair his engine. He was somewhere in the Ozark mountains and made his way toward a store to get a certain tool. He was overtaken by old Grandpa Quimby and a rebellious charge—Cynthy. And Grandpa insisted, at the point of a gun, that Arthur marry the girl. He had never seen her before but he couldn't dodge that gun—and so they were married! What their married life turned out to be is unusually pictured in "The Rebellious Bride". It's filled with humor and charming romance. See it at the ——— theatre.

Out of the sky and into sudden and unpremeditated matrimony! See "The Rebellious Bride."

A beautiful, unusual and humorous picture of people in the Ozark mountains directed by Lynn Reynolds, known for his many successful pictures laid in this locale.

We hesitate in asking our feminine patrons how they would act if forced into a marriage with the first man who came along the road. Nevertheless this is the fact that meets the heroine of "The Rebellious Bride." It's a difficult predicament she was in but she changed it into—see "The Rebellious Bride" and find out what.

SUGGESTIONS

Here the exhibitor has an unusual situation around which to write his advertising copy, and if he follows the right course he will be sure to stimulate more than a modicum of interest in the production. This situation is the one which comes at the beginning of the story in which the old man forces the young aviator to marry his daughter, the very minute after he has laid eyes on her. The unusualness of this situation is apparent from the mere statement of it and some clever copy could be written around it. Let this be the key to your advertising then.

If your patronage contains an average number of real fans, remind them that the director of this production is Lynn Reynolds. Many will remember him for the many fine outdoor comedies he did for Bluebird in the first days of that concern. As this is one of the same type, mention of this fact will certainly not come amiss.

"ALIAS MIKE MORAN"

picture. This, of course, lies in the exchange of identities of the two men because the coward desires to escape service in the army. You will stimulate considerable interest in the picture by relating this section of the plot, of course stopping when you have made clear this exchange of identities. "Alias Mike Moran" is an ideal picture on which to employ this form of advertising, for the stopping point is one of unusual interest.

Nor should you forget the source of the story. It was first published in the Saturday Evening Post under the title of "Open Sesame," and it was considered one of the most successful pieces of fiction ever published in that magazine. Make this fact clear. Saturday Evening Post stories are common on the screen. Let them know that this one is something unusual. But then you will be doing this if you follow out the suggestions in the first paragraph.

"THE AMAZING WIFE"—UNIVERSAL

Here's One on Which You Can Go the Limit

DON'T be afraid to go to the limit with this picture when it comes around; it is bound to give good satisfaction, because of the story as well as the acting and directing. It is a picture that possesses all the necessary features that help entertain pleasure seekers. Its chief asset, however, is the intelligently constructed story, which not only keeps the spectator in continual suspense, but also influences his pleasurable emotions; and that is the thing that mostly counts.

As all Universal contributions, this one also is marked with the same degree of artistry in the production end. Although artistry hardly ever saves a poor story, it always helps a good one; and it does in this instance.

The picture is clean. An extensive review of it was published in issue of March 15, on page 1701. —Released April 7.—Length, 6 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

AD TALK

Mary MacLaren, the well known Universal star will be the attraction at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest photoplay entitled "The Amazing Wife." This is most assuredly the finest drama in which she has appeared, for besides offering her a role in which her varied capabilities are allowed full play, the story provided by Elinor Chipp is one of many unusual twists and of situations extremely powerful both in conception and development. Miss MacLaren is awarded the part of Cicely, a young woman in dire financial difficulties because her mother lies ill with no funds to afford her the medical attention she must have.

She marries John Ashton, who turns out to be a brute, and soon after the wedding he is killed in a drunken brawl. Still without funds Cicely is at a loss as to what to do when she discovers that a Lieutenant John Ashton has been killed in France. She goes to his parents and presents herself as their son's secret bride! All this to obtain the money her mother needs. Then, of course, the never-to-be-expected happens. Lieutenant John Ashton is not dead. He returns to his home—and to his "wife."

The succeeding scenes of this photoplay are of the utmost power, and the author has developed her story with a fine eye to its dramatic possibilities and sustained interest. Supporting Miss MacLaren are Frank Mayo as the war hero, Seymour Zeliff as the other John Ashton, and Ethel Lynee and Stanhope Wheatcroft in other parts of prominence. The picture was produced under the direction of Ida May Park.

THE STORY

Cicely Osborne, her mother lying sick and without proper medical aid, marries John Ashton in order that she may procure these necessities. On the night of the wedding Ashton takes his bride to a fast cafe and there, plying himself with wine, attempts to force her into having a good time. But his advances disgust her and at length he turns to another table where sits, Claire Winston, a painted woman. Here he finds entertainment enough but soon the other woman's escort interferes and a fight starts. It's a brutal, horrible fight and when it's over John Ashton lies on the floor—dead.

What to do now is a severe problem to Cicely. Her mother is still ill. She must have care. In the newspapers she reads of the death of another John Ashton—a lieutenant in the army—in France, and so she presents herself to his family, claiming that she and their son were secertely married on the eve of his departure for France. And his parents readily accept her for her refinement and breeding appealed to them.

Then comes the shock. Lieutenant John Ashton is not dead. And he returns from France to discover his "wife," Not wishing to shame his mother by telling her the truth he accepts the situation—and Cicely. Philip Ashton, his scoundrelly cousin, guesses the secret and threatens Cicely with exposure unless she comply with his demands. She resists him and Ashton comes to her rescue, fighting for her and winning for her. It is a result of this melee that Ashton discovers he loves Cicely and this time a real secret marriage brings the fortunes of the pair to a happy conclusion.

ADVERTISING CUTS AND MATS:—These also furnished in one, two and three-column size, being dressed in the usual Universal star, containing good pictures and convincing arguments.

SUGGESTIONS

Herewith Universal offers what is one of the best selling situations in the way of a story that the writer has noticed in many a day. Though it has been employed before—over a year ago —for farcical purposes, it remains as freshing and original today as ever and if it is handled correctly there just will be a line at the box office throughout the showing of the picture. This situation will readily be noted after a reading of the synopsis printed herewith. It lies in the fact that the heroine, believing Lieutenant John Ashton dead, announces to his parents that she married him secretly before his departure for France. Of course it is to be expected on this announcement that the lieutenant is not really dead and such proves to be correct.

But anyone with half an eye for a good story will readily realize that in this situation lie great possibilities. It is a situation that would sell a manuscript even if the rest of the plot were poor. And it is this situation that will sell "The Amazing Wife" as a piece of entertainment. Build around this situation. Suggest what happens on the lieutenant's return, but never tell. Herein, it would seem, lies the trick in presenting this offering to your public.

"THE WAY OF THE STRONG"—METRO

Eternal Triangle Picture That Ranks Well Up to the Metro Average

"THE WAY OF THE STRONG" is a story of Alaska, of two men and a woman, one man's perfidy, the woman's death—then of an eastern civilization, of the second romance of the real man, and again the other man's perfidy this time striking back at himself. The story presents the eternal triangle in powerful lines; it is possessed of a sustaining interest that makes it an entertainment well worthy of ranking with the high type of picture that Metro has been regularly producing of late.

The featured player is Anna Q. Nilsson and her performance in both the roles she essays is marked by sincerity and a depth of emotionalism that is always effective. Joe King as hero and Harry Northrup as the heavy contribute a brace of characterizations that help the strength of the story considerably.

"The Way of the Strong" offers a variety of scene, is effectively told from every angle and should be classed as a feature that will demand attention from the majority of audience before which it is shown.—Length, 5 reels.—Released March 17.—Peter Milne.

AD TALK

Metro Picture Corporation, maintaining the high standard visible in all their recent releases, will present another feature on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, in "The Way of the Strong." This picture, adapted from the novel by Ridgewell Cullam, has the beautiful Anna Q. Nilsson as its star and tells an unusual story of the eternal triangle. To say the least, the lines of this triangle are drawn in bold and fearsome strokes, there are situations of a refreshing character, while the acting of the star and her associates is of the very best.

The story tells of Alexander Hendrie and James Leyburn, partners in an Alaskan gold mine. Hendrie's wife deserts him when Leyburn promises to take her back to civilization. But in a terrible blizzard Leyburn proves the coward and, obeying the law of self-preservation, leaves the woman to perish. Her boy, however, escapes death in the storm, and is taken by a friendly miner to his mother's half-sister in the south.

The story then skips several years, during which time Hendrie has become a power in the financial world, while Leyburn has also worked himself to a position of importance under an assumed name. The action now centers about the two men and the second woman, Mrs. Hendrie's half-sister, a beautiful young woman who earns her living as special writer for one of the great daily newspapers. The drama is worked to a climax of tremendous effect, justice is meted out to Leyburn and Hendrie finds real happiness at last with a woman who places her faith in him.

Joe King and Harry Northrup are the most prominent in the star's support.

THE STORY

Alexander Hendrie and James Leyburn are partners in an Alaskan gold mine which is paying, surely but slowly. Hendrie's wife is dissatisfied with her existence in the far north and turns a willing ear to Leyburn's entreaties that they go away together. Eventually she consents to the flight and, taking her boy, sets off with the betrayer. In a terrible blizzard he proves the coward and deserts the mother and her boy. It is all they can do to struggle to a lonely hut, where the dying woman implores the miner to take her boy to her half-sister, Monica Norton.

Hendrie, broken-hearted, turns to the business of amassing wealth, and several years later looms up as a power in the financial world of the east. He is interviewed by Monica Norton and is struck by her resemblance to his wife. Her interview for her paper he admires greatly, as it shows she has read his character well. A strong attrachment springs up between the two and finally he proposes to her. She accepts him. Hendrie is great friends with her nephew, Frank, unaware of the fact that he is his son.

Leyburn has also become a financial power but under an assumed name. Hendrie breaks him through the market, and Leyburn goes to Monica and lies to her about Hendrie deserting his wife and child. Monica realizes that the former Mrs. Hendrie was her half-sister. But the villain is hoist by his own petard, as Hendrie hears of his lies and visits him in his office, administering a sound thrashing. Monica is a silent witness and afterwards is happy to return to the man she loves.

SUGGESTIONS

This picture marks the return of Anna Q. Nilsson as a Metro star. It might be a good idea to make something of an event out of this fact. At least you could announce in your stories and newspaper advertisements that in "The Way of the Strong" she makes her return. In advertising the picture itself describe it as a strong story of Alaska and Chicago, of a Fate which meted out justice after many years; the external triangle done again in heavier, stronger, bolder strokes than ever before.

You can safely say all this regarding the picture for without doubt it is one of the strongest dramas of this sort. Superlatives are justified and it is hardly likely that they will "come back" to the exhibitor in any other way than increased returns.

"TOTON"

circulation among film fans the title should be a drawing card also and should be featured as much as possible. Newpapers may be induced to print stories and cuts of Miss Thomas as the Harrison Fisher Girl, especially if your leading newspapers run regular weekly art departments.

This is in no sense a war play, although the first shell reaching Paris from the long range German gun forms the climax for the culmination of a remarkable international romance.

As the Triangle exchanges can supply you with many cuts showing Miss Thomas in the boy character you must not be tempted to use all these character cuts in your advertising. The handsome straight pictures of Miss Thomas should always be made the prominent feature of all your advertising. Simply point to the fact that she appears first as the handsome artist model and afterwards will thrill in the dual role of an underworld Parisian girl brought up as a trained pickpocket by the Apaches of Paris.

"PUPPY LOVE"—PARAMOUNT

Youthful Romance Scores with Lila Lee as Star

PUPPY love—sixteen-year-old romance, is the theme of this picture which Monte Katterjohn conceived to exploit the particular talents of Lila Lee. Measuring Mr. Katterjohn's work by the side of the other features in which the new Paramount star has been the central figure, it swells to most meritorious proportions. Here in the role of Gloria O'Connell, Irish and therefore romantic, the star's freshness and spirit of youth are permitted to play in their natural sphere.

While the bare mechanics of Mr. Katterjohn's plot show a curious mixture of calf love and "grown-up" melodrama, its volume of realistic incident that so cleverly embraces the little romances and petty jealousies of those youngsters before whom love looms as a great, unexplored adventure, counts largely and effectively in the picture's favor. Something of a warm glow possesses the spectator's heart as he watches the drawing of the eternal triangle in the wavering lines of juvenile romance.

For this reason it is the opinion of the writer that "Puppy Love" will find an extensive appeal before the young and the old—before all. Too much can not be said of the honest interpretation of the boy rendered by Harold Goodwin. His work is unaffected and realistic to the letter. Lincoln Stedman as the inevitable fat boy and Charles Murray, borrowed from the Mack Sennett studio, as the Irish father, contribute no small measure of fine comedy.—Length, 5 reels.—Released March 2.—Peter Milne.

AD TALK

Who is there in all the wide world who can't recall visions of his or her first romance? Youthful romance, puppy love, petty jealousies, wonderful moments of happiness snatched with "the only girl" or "the only boy." Those were the happy days! And who is there that will not relish just a peep into this past? Maybe its only yesterday with some of you folks. Maybe it was quite a while ago—in reality that is, but it seems just like yesterday to all of us. In appreciation of those golden days of the first romance the management of the ——— theatre has arranged for the first showing in this city of "Puppy Love," a picture-story of just this sort—a picture that takes you back to the golden days of youthful romance, puppy love, calf love or whatever you choose to call it.

Lila Lee, the youthful Paramount star, is seen in the central character of this charming picture, and she receives delightful support from Harold Goodwin, who appears in the part of the boy. These players make a delightful team. They give us choice characterizations of the real girl and boy. Others who appear in the picture and contribute to its general worth are Lincoln Stedman, the inevitable "fat" boy of all romances; Charlie Murray, loaned by Mack Sennett to assume the role of the father, and Helen Dunbar, Josephine Crowell, Emma Gerdes and Alice Knowland.

Monte Katterjohn is the author of "Puppy Love," and he has made his work real in every scene. It was produced under the direction of R. William Neill. "Puppy Love" will come to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. The date is to be remembered as a chance to receive a real treat.

THE STORY

Gloria is the daughter of Shamus O'Connell, a newly rich hod-carrier, who, with the coming of affluence, has moved to the millionaires' row of his particular town. Gloria is just at the age when romance means a good deal to her but, it must be confessed, "Hippo" Harger, though ample enough before all others, hardly fills her romantic bill. It is the boy next door, James Gordon Oliver, who eventually finds that Gloria and he were meant for each other, and before long the two children are reveling in the midst of a beautiful first romance. But Gloria's aunt doesn't like the idea and, despite the girl's objections and the mild protects of her father, ships her off to other aunts and cousins in a town noted for its old maids, and therefore its sparse matrimonial opportunities.

There is a tearful parting between Gloria and her James Gordon. They promise to write to each other every day—exchange photographs and kiss farewell. But here the beautiful romance is rudely interrupted. After a few letters James Gordon sees his opportunity to visit Gloria. He has gone to work on a newspaper in the meantime and persuades the Sunday editor to let him visit the town for a feature story regarding the old maids. And it must so happen that the boy arrives when Gloria is out motoring with the ample Hippo. Jealousy gets in its work and, after stealing a family album, full of old ladies' pictures, James Gordon departs without a word for Gloria, to write his story.

There are more tears and the girl threatens to marry Hippo. James Gordon threatens to kill him and departs to do the trick. Just before the arranged wedding ceremony James Gordon arrives. The youthful lovers are pacified and decide that they love each other as much as ever. As for marrying—that's another story.

CATCH LINES

It's a bad habit to backslide, but it's very pleasant sometimes to look back. If you want to take a delightful peep into bygone days—days when the boys first went into long trousers and when the girls first put up their hair—see "Puppy Love," a picture containing all the charm and humor of youth.

"Puppy Love" is a trip through the looking glass from the present to the glorious past of youth. It's something of a tragedy that the young ever want to be old—that the old ever want to be young—"Puppy Love" affords you a delightful peep into those old days when you wanted to be what you are today!

In which Monte M. Katterjohn writes a story of the first romance of a boy and a girl. The author tells his romance with all the color and reality of a Mark Twain or a Booth Tarkington. It's one of the most charming of all pictures the management of the ——— theatre has presented. See it and catch a train back to the supremely happy land of childhood.

SUGGESTIONS

All advertising on this production should center about the youthful romance offered in the story. Read over the catchlines and see if these, or some of your own writing similar to them, would not look well in an advertisement. This seems to be the most appealing way in which you can present the picture to your patrons. Dwell on the young romance and argue to the effect that the readers should come to the theatre and see themselves again on the screen—as others saw them long ago.

Mention the suitability of the role to Lila Lee, the star, and also include the wonderfully realistic performances given by her and the other lead, Harold Goodwin. Monte Katterjohn is the author of the picture, and as he is a much advertised writer and has had his name attached to some very successful pictures, mention him in the advertising. Also use Charles Murray's name with a line to the effect that he was borrowed from the Mack Sennett studios specially for this picture.

This One Should Make Patrons Happy; Will Cause Talk

YOUR patrons will laugh a little and will cry a little more out of compassion for the ill luck of the characters, with whom they will be in sympathy; and when towards the end of the picture things take a turn for the better, just as they kept wishing, bringing happiness to the much tried characters, whom they love, they will let out a sigh of relief and feel happy themselves. That is the way the picture will affect them.

The plot is rather sad at times; but most people like sad stories, when they don't leave a bitter taste; and as "The Turn in the Road" affects only the pleasurable emotions, it should give good satisfaction. It is a sure bet that those who will see this picture will talk about it to their friends.

AD TALK

Little Ben Alexander is one of a big special cast to be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in that powerful screen production, "The Turn In The Road."

This little six-year old chap only enters the production along about the third reel but he actually "steals" the leading role. He creeps into the hearts of the audience even more strongly than he did in D. W. Griffith's production, "Hearts of the World."

When this little boy's mother died in giving birth to him, the young father became distracted and ran from the town of Perryville, cursing his wealthy father, the founder of the town. He also became an agnostic and bitterly arraigned the gospel as preached by his father-in-law the Reverend Matthew Barker.

The young father in his bereavement could not believe that God visited his people with these afflictions as preached by the minister.

He felt that his own father also was too grasping and merciless in business to be a sincere Christian. The young father finally lands in Chicago's underworld and the minister's other daughter, June, who has always secretly loved the young husband of her sister, took care of his child.

And little "Bob," with his great love of nature and possessed of a mighty heart and wonderful knowledge, almost too big for his little five years old body, brings order out of all this chaos.

He brings his own wondering young father to the "Turn in the Road," and reconciles his wealthy grandfather to grant his employes a wage increase.

And last, but not least, he brings June, his foster mother, and Paul, his wayward young father, into the arms of love and happiness.

George Nichols appears in the role of Hamilton Perry, the wealthy and dominent iron master, while Lloyd Hughes portrays the son, Paul. June Barker is said to be wonderfully pictured by Helen Eddy, and Winter Hall is the Rev. Matthew Barker.

As little Bob, Ben Alexander shows that he is a veritable prodigy.

THE STORY

The dominating power in Perryville, a prosperous American manufacturing town, is Hamilton Perry, president of the Iron Works and the controlling hand in various other enterprises. His talent for money making rapidly developed into a regular mania of money madness. While he was ruthless, his only son, Paul, was just the opposite, although he possessed the father's head-strong nature.

He marries Evelyn Barker, a daughter of the pastor of a large local church. Evelyn's sister June is the quiet and serious one of the family and in typewriting her father's sermons she declared to him that she could not convince herself that God sent afflictions and sorrow.

Her father, Rev. Matthew Barker, had preached in the old orthodox style for thirty-five years and declared that it was the duty of mankind to bow humbly to the Will of God, and that afflictions as well as blessings came from Him.

After a year of happiness Evelyn dies giving birth to a baby boy; Paul, the young father grows distracted and after cursing his own father and his grasping ways, and the world in general, he puts the question to the father-in-law, the Rev. Barker, as to whether he thought that God brought the affliction upon him by taking his wife away.

The old minister's faith was so shaken that his wealthy congregation soon demanded his resignation because his later sermons dwelt so much on the fact that God was love. The young husband leaves and is later seen in a low dance hall in Chicago.

The minister's other daughter June, who has always secretly loved Paul, takes care of his little child and accepts a position as stenographer in Chicago.

When she refuses to respond to the advances of her employer she is discharged and returns to Perryville with little Bob, the active little son of the missing Paul. The little boy is a great lover of nature and his cheerful disposition make his foster mother and Reverend grandfather very happy.

When the other grandfather refuses to increase the wages of his men at the Perryville iron works he is seized in his own home and bound to a chair, but as the three employes are about to shoot him, little Bob enters the room for a visit to his grandfather unbeknown to anybody.

His simple lovable way soon melted the angered men and also won over his grandfather. The men received the increase and the strike was averted.

A few days later little Bob discovers a tramp in the stable loft. He feeds him and June discovers them together. She recognizes Paul in the tramp and tells him that Bob in his son.

And so Paul, touched by the love and faith of his child reached "The Turn in the Road" which led to happiness with June and Bob.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have booked this picture you can exploit it from many different angles, each one particularly effective for its respective locality. The labor angle can be used if you are in a working class neighborhood of a large city. Cite as follows: "The ever present problem of Capital and Labor is readily solved on the screen in 'The Turn In The Road' at the ——— theatre. The tactics could be as readily employed in real life if all were imbued with the spirit that swayed little Bob."

The church angle is more suitable for a small town and you can quote thus: "And a little child shall lead them. An agnostic is saved by the love of a child. And the greatest of these is love."

Or else you can boldly head one of your displays as follows: "First Corinthians, Thirteenth Chapter. Henry Drummond wrote a book based upon this chapter in the book of books. Read it. But substitute the word 'Love' for 'Charity' wherever it is mentioned, according to the very latest versions of how this word should be accepted in our present-day language. You will feel better after dusting off the old book and reading that chapter. Then you are primed to visit the ——— theatre and see little Ben Alexander exemplify that 'The Greatest of these is Love' in the powerful screen drama, 'The Turn in the Road.'"

When naturalists coax the tired business man to get "close to nature" they do not mean it so literally as little Ben Alexander evidently took it. He not only adopts a large family of dogs but allows wasps to crawl all over his little hands His unique idea is that no one will hurt you if you do not hurt them first. And he

"FIGHTING DESTINY"—VITAGRAPH

Harry Morey in Another Fine Fighting Picture with Mystery Touch

VITAGRAPH has been proving Harry Morey synonymous with the virile, fighting picture in all their recent releases with this star. "Fighting Destiny" offers further and substantial proof and incidentally it offers capital entertainment. Action—fighting action—is its basic note but several others in the scale of picture production are sounded. Notably among them is the note of mystery. The story starts off with an excellent portion of this element and it is well sustained throughout the action. And it is good, absorbing mystery—well builded and carried expertly to its finish.

Thus "Fighting Destiny" presents an action-mystery story of the best type. Its appeal can not but encompass all varieties of audiences. Mr. Morey's characterization is marked by strength, sincerity and, when necessary a deep show of emotion that registers effectively. Betty Blythe in the opposite part is beautiful to look upon while the remaining members of the cast, headed by George Majeroni, render adequate performances.—Length, 5 reels.—Released March 31.—Peter Milne.

AD TALK

Smashing a corrupt political machine to procure his sweetheart's freedom is what Harry T. Morey successfully accomplishes in his role of Larry Cavendish, political reformer, in "Fighting Destiny," the Vitagraph screen production to be seen at ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Big dramatic scenes are said to abound in a rapid array of stirring events as the hero braves all dangers alone when the police refuse to help him find his fiancee.

His bride-to-be, Caryl Rundlege, is portrayed by Betty Blythe, and while Larry is attending a bachelor dinner on the night before his wedding day he finds that his sweetheart has vanished.

Her father was a leading politician and a former governor, but Larry could not persuade him to aid in the search. In fact the old gentleman tried to induce the young man to give her up for lost.

The police and all political friends turned deaf ears to his pleadings for aid in instituting a thorough search for his missing fiancee and how he still wins out after all these handicaps forms one of the most thrilling screen offerings for some time.

He uncovers the mysterious influences that have been working against him and the climax comes when the police finally raid an opium den in the underworld where Larry has been brought to bay while carrying the dead body of a woman whom he supposed was his missing sweetheart.

It was her twin sister. And as Caryl led the raid herself to rescue her lover, the hero and heroine are reunited. The picture is heralded as being an intensely absorbing story, replete with thrills, and taken from Stanley Shaw's Blue Book Magazine story, "Jungle Heart."

Harry T. Morey and Betty Blythe are said to be supported by an exceptionally strong Vitagraph cast.

THE STORY

A young political reformer of wealth is Larry Cavendish, engaged to Caryl Rundlege, daughter of a former governor.

While attending a bachelor dinner given in his honor, the night before the wedding, Larry is handed a note by the waiter, with instructions not to open it until he reaches home.

It was from his fiancee, and she had vanished. Larry's frenzied search for Caryl is replete with thrills and leads him through many adventures in the underworld. He is refused aid by the police and all his political friends, and even his prospective father-in-law, the former governor, tries to prevail upon Larry to give up the search.

But undaunted, he continues the hunt alone, braving the dangers that spring up. He feels that there is some strong political and mysterious influence working against him.

After a fight with Levarro, a beggar padrone who furnishes blackmail information to an unscrupulous political boss, Larry sees his sweetheart shot dead by one of the stray bullets.

Heartbroken, he carries the body through the underworld until he is brought to bay in a notorious opium den. The Police Commissioner, finally aroused, selects that particular moment for a raid on the den, led by no other than Caryl herself.

The dead girl was her twin sister, and Caryl had been lured away on the eve of her wedding by a note from Levarro which stated that she had a twin sister and that she was dying.

Her father, the former governor, had appealed to her to keep the matter of her having a twin sister in the underworld a secret to avoid disgrace for all of them.

Larry and Caryl are thus reunited and the corrupt political ring is smashed.

CATCH LINES

Rich reformer descends to underworld to find his society fiancee.

A runaway bride-to-be disappears as if by magic.

The father of the missing girl told her sweetheart that he didn't care.

Determined lover relentlessly continues when the police quit.

Corrupt political machine smashed by romance.

SUGGESTIONS

Harry T. Morey is a big, rugged and virile star, and as he is cast in a tremendously dramatic role in "Fighting Destiny," you can play him up at every opportunity. However, you should not forget to play up Betty Blythe also, as she is credited with having a considerable following.

Don't forget to mention in all your advertising that this Vitagraph feature is adapted from Stanley Shaw's story, "Jungle Heart," which appeared in the Blue Book Magazine.

It is suggested that you run a few "teaser" lines through your previous week's program as follows: "If your fiancee vanished on her wedding day, would you go down in the underworld searching for her single-handed after the police refused you assistance?—see 'Fighting Destiny.'"

And another: "If your missing sweetheart's father, a leading politician of the old type, urged you to give up the search for his daughter, would you have the courage and strength to smash an unscrupulous political machine to regain your fiancee?—see 'Fighting Destiny.'"

If you book this picture and your theatre is in a big city, you might work a special stunt that should be productive of much publicity in the daily papers. Invite the judges and prosecuting

"THE LOVE DEFENDER"—WORLD

Eternal Triangle Told in Simplest Form

HEREWITH we have the story of a man whose gaze is befogged. His wife is beautiful, sympathetic—he really loves her. But because he has had a foolish love affair with a woman of the world he becomes excited and addle-brained when she sends for him. He neglects his wife. She fights for him but finally lets him go. At the last minute he begins to draw comparisons and it suddenly dawns on him that his wife is a wonderful woman. He goes back to her, just in time to prevent her from taking her life.

With June Elvidge in the principal part and with Frank Mayo playing the husband, the various scenes between man and wife are well done and provide a good entertainment. On the other hand, the husband's adventures with the adventuress are rather ineffective inasmuch as the audience is permitted to see his foolishness long before he himself arrives at the same conclusion. In other words, Eloise Clement's vampire is by no means able to cope with Miss Elvidge's wife—either in looks or bearing.

Madge Evans has a role in the picture and plays it attractively—Length, 5 reels.—Released March 31.—Peter Milne.

AD TALK

June Elvidge will be seen again at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest World photoplay entitled 'The Love Defender." This story was written specially for her by Maravene Thompson, an author who has contributed many a good scenario to the World studio and who recently blossomed forth in New York as a playwright, her first effort in this line being a three-act melodrama entitled "The Net." That Mrs. Thompson is efficient in the art of scenario construction has been proven many times before, and with this added fame and learning that accrues from her spoken play, our patrons may look forward to many a good screen story from her in the future.

"The Love Defender" tells the story of a wife who decided to fight to retain her husband. Another woman comes into his life and, in his foolish impulse he forgets the loveliness and beauty of his wife, and answers her demands. The wife wages a successful fight at first but gradually she sees the man she loves drawn into the other's toils, and she finally gives him her permission to go with her, saying that she will disappear that he may not be bothered.

It is not until this moment that the husband discovers the true worth of his wife and, of course, he returns to her, meek and apologetic. Miss Elvidge is afforded splendid support from Frank Mayo as the husband and Little Madge Evans in a part of some prominence. The picture was done into scenario form by George D. Proctor and produced under the direction of Tefft Johnson.

THE STORY

Frank Rodney, a young physician, is jilted by Anita Day, who prefers a man with millions. Rodney doesn't swallow his defeat gracefully but there comes a time when he sees it his duty to marry Hope Meredith. Hope is the daughter of Dr. Meredith, with whom Frank is employed. Dr. Meredith and his wife are killed in an automobile accident and there is little money left to Hope. Frank, now in possession of his successor's practice marries Hope and settles down to the routine of a country doctor's life—or rather tries to settle down.

Anita discovers that her husband has nothing else but money—no charm. She writes to Frank asking him to come to her and he, saying something about a business trip to the city to his wife, answers her summons. Under the spell of Anita he forgets his beautiful and loving wife. She, however, realizes that there is someone between them and, going to Anita threatens her with disclosure of her activities before her husband unless she cease.

Then for a time all goes well, but shortly afterwards Anita's husband dies. She determines now to have Frank for herself and proposes a trip around the world. This Frank finally agrees on, after telling his wife that their marriage has been a failure. She lets him depart in silence and then addresses him a note in care of Anita saying that she will let him depart without any ties to her—she plans taking her life. Not until then does Frank realize the true worth of his wife and the selfishness and vanity of Anita. He returns just in time to prevent Hope from carrying out her threat.

"THE MARRIAGE PRICE"—ARTCRAFT

True to Life and Touches the Heart Strings

IF your patrons have enjoyed "His Parisian Wife," Miss Ferguson's latest contribution, they will enjoy "The Marriage Price" still better, because the story is truer to life; it touches the heart-strings more often. Besides, it has been produced more lavishly, the interior settings being unquestionably the last word in artistic representation.

The story offers Miss Ferguson the best opportunity of displaying her emotional abilities. In this picture more than in any of those in which she has ever appeared, the star, as the heroine of the story, is able to win the sympathy of the spectator.

The story, in a few words, is that of a millionaire's daughter, who spends money like water. All of her friends except one abandon her when, at the death of her father, it develops that she is left penniless, her father having involved himself in unprofitable financial transactions. In the end she marries that true friend, who loved her all the while.

The picture is clean and appeals to the better emotions; it should give satisfaction to a very large circle of picture goers.—Released March 9.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

AD TALK

Elsie Ferguson, the beautiful and talented Aircraft star, will be the featured attraction at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest photoplay entitled "The Marriage Price." Some critics have acclaimed this the greatest of all Miss Ferguson's pictures—all agree that it is one of the best that she has done. Adapted from Griswold Wheeler's story of the same name it tells of the career of Helen Tremaine, a beautiful society girl, suddenly reduced from the greatest wealth to the most abject poverty. Her suitors are many and the propositions that come to her ears from all sides make her head turn.

The path that Helen chooses is far from the right one at first. Among her suitors she is unable to distinguish the dross from the gold and she only has it revealed to her after a sequence of highly entertaining episodes have been developed. The climax is one of those rare occasions that offers the spectator a real thrill. "The Marriage Price" was adapted to the screen by Eve Unsell, one of the most accomplished of scenario writers, who, by the way, was the author of Miss Ferguson's last picture while the direction of the work was again in charge of Emile Chautard.

The picture has been given a lavish production and its varied scenery unfolds as a series of delights to the eye. Her support, too, is of the highest type, being headed by Wyndham Standing, an accomplished leading man, and Lionel Atwill, one of the most sought after actors on Broadway, who is now playing in the Balasco stage success, "Tiger! Tiger!"

THE STORY

Helen Tremaine, a society girl moving in the richest of all sets, considers herself engaged to Kenneth Gordon, an idler. A westerner, Frederick Lawton, rich Wall Street man, admires her but she does not return his admiration. On a morning following a particularly lavish party Helen hears of the death of her father in Chicago and that she has been left penniless. Kenneth, without substantial funds himself, suggests that she marry Lawton but she refuses. Van Orden, a wealthy married man, calls later supposedly to offer condolences. Instead he attacks her, Lawton arrives at the moment and throws the intruder down the stairs. Van Orden vows to ruin Lawton through the market.

Helen finds it an almost futile proposition to earn her own living. Gordon obtains employment with Lawton as his western manager but is, in reality, playing against him hand in hand with Van Orden. In New York again Gordon plans to take Helen to lunch. Lawton discovers the scheme and sends Gordon out of town, meeting Helen himself and acting the host. He again asks her to marry him and this time she consents. He takes her to his aunt's home where he gives her a block of stock saying it was saved from the wreck of her father's estate.

Later Gordon hears the news and discovers Helen in Lawton's office. She learns that her husband forestalled her appointment with Gordon and resents it. She gives her stock that Gordon may hammer Lawton in the market. Gordon returns to her in triumph saying that Lawton is ruined. She then learns the truth about her stock—that it was really Lawton's. Her love goes out to her husband and she offers her jewels that he may recoup. He then tells her that, far from being ruined himself, he has beaten the plotters and Helen goes happily to his arms.

CATCH LINES

It pays to deceive a woman—if it is for her own sake.

She was frivolous but not fickle. When she made a marriage bargain she stuck by it—until she thought that she had been tricked. And just in time she realized that all the trickery was that she herself might be saved.

The night before she had spent thousands on a single banquet—with horses as the novelty of the occasion—on this morning she found herself without a penny! What was she to do? See "The Marriage Price."

The most exquisite and lavish of all Miss Ferguson's Artcraft pictures. See "The Marriage Price."

Her set went gunning for the millionaire westerner, but he turned the tatbles and won her, checkmated the whole bunch of swindlers—all for the girl who understood just in time.

SUGGESTIONS

The exhibitor will find a variety of valuable suggestions on the exploitation of "The Marriage Price" in the special service section published in Motion Picture News, issue of attorneys of the police or criminal branches of your courts, and also the chief, captains, lieutenants and sergeants of your police force, and last but not least, the reporters on the daily papers who "cover" police, to be your guests on the opening night. Then let this fact become known through the newspapers by having several of these guests declare that if a similar situation arose in your town as brought out in "Fighting Destiny," the hero would have the united aid of all of them in finding his sweetheart and unraveling the mystery. That conditions are so good in your home city that it has been purged of all unscrupulous political rings, if it ever possessed any, etc., etc. This stunt can be put over big in a large city especially, and even in a middle-sized town if the exhibitor will only go after it hard. EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the current quarter arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of Motion Picture News which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released previous to December 29, 1918.

Springfield Papers Editorialize on Censorship

THE daily papers of Springfield, Ill., are fighting the Buck censorship bill. The News-Record recently had two articles opposing the measure, and the State Register, Democratic morning paper, printed the following editorial on Friday, March 7:

MOTION PICTURE CENSORSHIP

A bill is now pending in the state legislature providing for state censorship of motion pictures. Under the plan the power for censoring motion pictures would be delegated to a board, that could arbitrarily say what the people could see and what they could't see. This board would be politically appointed and politically controlled. Public approval or public disapproval would have no voice. A group of men, probably prejudiced, probably with their hands out, could dictate to the millions of people of the state of Illinois the films they would be allowed to enjoy.

No matter how many boards or commissions there are, the demand is always being made for the creation of more. The supply of job holders has never yet run out, and as long as there is an oversupply politicians are always looking for a way to appease the hungry.

In the matter of motion picture censorship, if there is any public demand for the proposed board provided for in the bill before the Illinois legislature, the State Register has yet to come in touch with that demand. Motion pictures today are cleaner all the way through than ever before. The film companies realize that the success of their business depends upon the quality of goods presented. If the motion pictures were deteriorating in moral tone, public sentiment would demand their suppression. There are laws enough on the statute books to prevent the showing of libelous, obscene, indecent, immoral or impure motion pictures. Police powers are sufficient to cope with any situation that might arise.

Does anyone think for a moment that the motion picture companies are going to court public disapproval by turning their business into a demoralizing influence. The fact is the creation of state censorship could do nothing but what can be done today, except to give arbitrary powers to a board, which could be prostituted for personal aggrandizement, and place an additional financial burden on the motion picture theatres.

The agitation for a state board of motion picture censorship is not backed by public sentiment, and the bill now pending in the Illinois state legislature should be decisively defeated.

It is understood that The State Journal, another morning paper, will also devote space to defeat the bill.

War Picture Makes Hit in Springfield

THE GAIETY in Springfield, Ill., opened Sunday, March 9 for a week's run with "The Heart of Humanity," and "Fatty" Arbuckle in "Love." A special augmented orchestra was used with "The Heart of Humanity," and the picture was put on in elaborate manner. Altogether the program was one of the biggest and best in the history of the theatre and the opening day's business was all that could be desired. The heavy advertising campaign put on by the house was the talk of the town, and produced the necessary results. Patrons of the Gaiety were most lavish in their compliments to the management.

JUST when the public was supposed to be sick and tired of war pictures, and when every exhibitor was saying to himself, "No more battle stuff for me," "The Heart of Humanity" comes along and puts all theories, ideas and conjectures on the blink. "The Heart of Humanity" is a war picture, pure and simple, from first to last, with numerous killings, and all the things that go to make a thrilling epic of Mars, yet it got the business in Springfield.

Wisconsin Faces Drastic Censorship Bill

THAT films exhibited by charitable, religious and fraternal organizations or public schools, libraries and similar institutions do not need to be censored but that every means should be taken to dictate to theatres showing photoplays is the gist of one of the most drastic censorship bills yet proposed, which was introduced in the Wisconsin state assembly by Assemblyman George Oakes, of St. Croix, Wis.

The bill provides, according to advices from Milwaukee, that every slide, film, poster, photograph or lobby display must be passed upon by a board of three censors in the state capital at Madison. Any of the above mentioned organizations or institutions may exhibit identical films without any application of the law, according to one of its sections.

"Forbidden Room" Scores in Springfield

GLADYS BROCKWELL delighted Lyric patrons in Springfield, Ill., with "The Forbidden Room," a fine Fox drama, on Sunday and Monday, March 9 and 10. Barney Sherry and a star cast helped the picture tremendously.

May Allison was the next attraction, appearing in Metro's "Peggy Does Her Darndest," a breezy comedy. Norma Talmadge was due on March 13, 14 and 15 in "The Forbidden City," which was to be her first appearance in this city in six months.

Opposition Dates Do Well in Flint

THE worst snowstorm of the winter which visited Flint, March 9, failed to interfere with the openings of two of the most heavily advertised productions ever played in local motion picture theatres.

"The Heart of Humanity" opened at the Orpheum for a a run of one week and "Mickey" started a four-day run at the Garden. Capacity houses were the rule at both of these theatres from the opening shows at 12:30 and 1 p. m., respectively on Sunday, and most of the time after that there were lines extending outside of the lobbies of the theatres into the heavy snowstorm which was raging and which had all but blocked traffic.

Managers Charles Garfield of the Orpheum and C. Edgar Momand of the Garden, playing the strongest opposition which any two motion picture theatres have ever planned against each other in Flint, expressed themselves as highly pleased with the patronage their rival attractions had drawn, in view of the very bad weather.

Both theatres had literally plastered the billboards, available windows and newspapers with advertising for days in advance of their openings and they got away to a neck-and-neck start as far as business was concerned.

Manager Garfield's trump card in the rivalry was the publication of a letter from J. Dallas Dort, millionaire motor car manufacturer, who had seen "The Heart of Humanity" in New York and recommended it highly. Manager Momand's best advertising stunt was the securing of an entire display window in a large five and ten-cent store which coupled advertising of "Mickey" at the Garden with the advertising of "Mickey," the song for sale in the store.

"Damaged Goods" for State Right Buyers

THERE has been considerable rumor in film circles that "Damaged Goods"—the American Film Company's success featuring Richard Bennett and the original cast—would shortly be released to state rights buyers. This statement is now confirmed by a definite statement from John R. Freuler, secretary-treasurer of the American Film Co., Inc.

In discussing the matter, Mr. Freuler said: "Yes it is true that we are going to offer 'Damaged Goods' to state rights buyers. Insistent demands from exhibitors who wanted to run it, and letter after letter from state rights buyers eager to secure a certain territory, have finally induced us to yield to the demand. As you doubtless know all prints of 'Damaged Goods' in the United States and Canada were withdrawn some months ago. The subject hasn't been put on a screen in this country or in Canada for a considerable time. Just about the time the 'flu' ban was lifted from the theatres we began receiving letters from exhibitors inquiring where a print of 'Damaged Goods' could be secured. Soon afterwards a nationally famous state rights buyer sent us a wire asking if we would consider a bid for a certain exclusive territory on 'Damaged Goods.' The demand kept up and now we have yielded to it and are considering offers and territory by state rights buyers. We shall allot all the territory in the United States and Canada under terms by which we will guarantee exclusive territory."

Continuing, Mr. Freuler explained: "The subject, as the whole trade knows, is one that scored a wonderful success wherever it was exhibited. It stars Richard Bennett and the original speaking stage company which appeared in all the big cities in America. It is a picture that has been endorsed in the highest terms by medical men, civic welfare bodies, women's clubs and reform associations. It played to capacity business for runs of unusual length in many of the leading theatres of the United States and Canada. It always was played at advance prices and many of the requests we have received for bookings of the picture are from exhibitors who have already shown it one or more times, yet who are now again wanting to present it, so convinced are they of its money-making powers. The mere announcement that it is available will unquestionably result in the state rights offices being flooded with requests for bookings. In my own opinion, now is a psychological time for offering it, and we believe it will establish new records for big business in cases where it is advertised in the same big fashion as was done when it was first presented at advanced prices."

Here and There in Fond du Lac

THE Bijou did a big business three days—Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, March 10, 11 and 12, on Zane Grey's smashing big story, "The Light of Western Stars," featuring Dustin Farnum. Few pictures have given better satisfaction.

"SPORTING LIFE," scheduled for presentation at the Bijou March 24, 25 and 26, gives promise of pulling well. Manager Smith has made an extra heavy billing and is making liberal reservations for newspaper copy.

"COMMON CLAY," with Fannie Ward, was the attraction at the Henry Boyle for the five days beginning Monday, March 17.

"THE BIRTH OF A RACE" will be shown four days at the Henry Boyle, beginning Sunday, March 23.

THE universal experience of the managers of Fond du Lac moving picture houses is that business is holding up well during Lent. With the exception of Wednesdays business has been heavier than before Lent, when there wer so many counter attractions.

DOROTHY GISH in "The Hope Chest," was the attraction at the Orpheum Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, March 17, 18 and 19. This program was followed the last three days of the week by Wm. S. Hart in "Border Wilds."

CAPACITY houses are scarce in Lent, but Manager Ainsworth contrives to get them just the same. Tom Mix in "Treat 'Em Rough" is to blame. They simply packed them in at the Orpheum on Saturday and Sunday, March 8 and 9 for this picture.

FOND DU LAC moving picture house managers have received notices from the producers to the effect that if the Wisconsin legislature passes the Oakes censorship bill they will refuse to send films into the state.

In order that the little folks might see their favorite story, Louise M. Alcott's "Little Women," in picture form, Manager Ainsworth provided six cent matinees on Monday and Tuesday, March 24 and 25. "Little Women" was the attraction for three days, being followed on March 27, 28 and 29 by Geraldine Farrar in "The Hell Cat."

MANAGER AINSWORTH will soon make a strong play for after Easter business by opening on Easter Monday with D. W. Griffith's "Greatest Thing in Life." The picture will be at the Orpheum four days and will be shown at advanced prices, the price being up to 25 cents.

In Indianapolis and Indiana

THE fight of the Hoosier motion picture interests for legalized Sunday shows died with the adjournment of the Indiana Legislature. The McCray bill, introduced by the Indianapolis Senator, which would make pictures lawful during the afternoon and evening on Sunday died when sine die was pronounced during the early hours Tuesday morning. It had been hoped that at the last moment the bill would be revived and forced through with the usual rush of bills when the log-rolling process is in full blast. Senator McCray made several valient attempts to get the bill over, but each time it failed because of a lack of a constitutional majority. The opposition could not, however, muster enought votes to kill the measure. Each time the bill was called for a vote twenty-five of the fifty members of the body voted for it. The twenty-sixth vote necessary could not be found.

FRICTION has developed between the motion picture houses and the Indiana industrial board. Recently that board sent out an order forbidding any theatre from permitting crowds to gather in the rear of the houses. The order went so far as to forbid the standing of signs in the corridors. Attorneys for the motion picture houses appeared before the board and argued that the the theatres, especially the larger ones, had been constructed with large spaces in the rear for the purpose of taking care of the overflow crowds. As a result of the front put up by the theatres the Industrial Board has not pressed its order, which was issued at the urging of a disgruntled few who seem to have had it "in for" the play houses.

THE overflow crowd problem is going to be met in a way that no public official can raise objection at the new Lyric theatre which will soon be under construction. A large room is to be provided in the basement to take care of the waiting crowd, and stairways are to be arranged so that the patrons can pass up into the auditorium as those who have seen the show pass out through other exits.

Seeing Shows Around Dubuque

"HEARTS OF THE WORLD," David W. Griffith's master film, played at the Star theatre, at Decorah, Ia., on Thursday and Friday, March 13 and 14. A special matinee was given on Friday.

THE Gem theatre at Platteville, Wis., presented "Virtuous Wives" with Anita Stewart on Thursday and Friday, March 13 and 14. The picture was shown at advanced prices.

ON Thursday, March 6, Norma Talmadge, "the 100 per cent star," was featured at the Star theatre at Decorah, Ia., in "Ghosts of Yesterday," an old but wonderfully interesting photoplay. On Friday and Saturday that popular Goldwyn star, Tom Moore, was presented in "Thirty a Week." Monday's feature was "The Frozen Warning," with Charlotte, the noted fancy ice skater.

THE Gem theatre at Oelwein, Ia., has a splendid program on Sunday and Monday, March 9 and 10. It was "Riddle Gawne," that much-talked of William Hart feature. The picture brought good business both days.

"SHADOWS," a Geraldine Farrar production, is scheduled for showing at the Orpheum theatre at Oelwein, Ia., during the week of March 23.

LOUISE GLAUM, known as the "Peacock Woman," was the star at the Orpheum theatre at Oelwein, Ia., on Friday and Saturday, March 7 and 8. Her picture, "An Alien Enemy," was well liked by the large audiences who turned out to see it.

FATTY ARBUCKLE in "The Sheriff" and Charles Ray in "His Own Home Town" brought big business at the Grand theatre at Anamosa, Ia., on Saturday, March 8.

ALICE BRADY in "The Indestructible Wife" delighted the audiences at the Dreamland theatre at Galena on March 7. The picture was indeed a pleasure to witness—it presented Miss Brady in a most charming role.

"THE SHEPHERD OF THE HILLS" played to big houses at the Cascade theatre at Cascade, Ia., on Saturday, March 8. The attendance in the afternoon was very good, while in the evening the house was packed. The picture played to capacity houses at the Majestic, at Dubuque, a few weeks before.

Elgin Temple Plays Up "Heart of Humanity"

ONE of the features of advance advertising which Manager Fay of the Temple theatre in Elgin, Ill., expected to aid valuably in putting "The Heart of Humanity" over big at his playhouse the second week in March, was a private and complimentary showing of the film the week before.

Obtaining the film for the morning of Thursday, March 6, Manager Fay invited the Mayor and Commissioners, prominent club women, press representatives and professional men to view the showing as his guests. They were enthusiastic in their acclaim of the film's worth in interest and entertainment, and are spreading the gospel among their friends to an extent that must profit it considerably when brought for public showing.

Every possible medium of advertising was employed by Manager Fay previous to the coming of the picture. Bill boards, screen ads, newspaper display and text ads and other ways were used. Local papers were generous with announcements, and a record patronage in his managerial career was prepared for Mr. Fay.

They Say in Chicago That—

O. F. SPAHR, general manager of the Enterprise Optical Co., manufacturers of the Motiograph projecting machine, is one of Chicago's hardest working citizens. Business is booming—motiographs sell faster than ever.

ACCORDING to reports, S. A. Lewis, president of the Rialto Supply Co., Minneapolis, made a cleanup at the recent exhibition in Minneapolis.

PENNY ROSS, the well-known cartoonist and originator of Mother's Angel Child, feature of the Chicago "Tribune," and which is syndicated to fourteen of the leading dailies of the country, is more enthusiastic than ever over the outlook of his forthcoming picture production of Mother's Angel Child, the company for the producing of which is now being organized.

ELMO CAMERON LOWE, who is in charge of the entire Y. M. C. A. Motion Picture Activities in Europe, is home. Mr. Lowe is an architect by profession. In addition to supervising the "Y" Cinema Department he also published the "Overseas Weekly," a joint enterprise of the Y. M. C. A. and the Signal Corps of the U. S. Army.

ALL of Richard C. Travers Chicago friends, and he has many, are wondering what next Dick will be driving at. The army was the last, now it's back to pictures; in a big special, understood to be financed by Cleveland capital. All the exhibitors who remember him personally from the Essanay days are wishing him good luck.

HARRY WEISS of the Central Film Co. has just hit the trail again, and swears his pockets will bulge with contracts on his return.

R. C. CROPPER of the Beehave Exchange, Chicago, Milwaukee, and Indiana, made one of his world renowned quick getaways in thorough keeping with "The Silent Mystery."

MEARLE EASTBORN of the Star theater, Watseka, Illinois, has been a Chicago visitor.

R. C. SEERY of the First National Chicago office has about made up his mind to grace the White Way in little old New York in April—who will get the worst of this, New York or Seery?

A FEW signs of spring are: Sig Faller of the Bijou Dream in a new overcoat; George Moore of the Orpheum taking down the storm doors; Roy Seery practicing golf, and Louis Marks of the Marshall Square has taken his fur collar off. Harry Beaumont of the Calo has started to carry his fur-lined coat, and Bruce Gottschalk of the Adelphi still wears his, for reasons which would only be disclosed if he took it off. Harry Ascher has turned himself loose on a long trip; "Billy" Lamoreaux of the Chateau is dolling up his house and Roy MacMillan of the Kenwood started March 13th wearing canary colored silk gloves.

PETE SARANTOS of the Family theatre, Elkhart, Indiana, was in Chicago recently giving them all the once over, evidently looking for some good features.

J. E. WILLIS of Willis & Eckels has found it necessary to give up all connections with the Capital Film Co. and devote his entire time to his Filmcraft business, coming attraction and general announcement trailers, which are being used by the leading picture palaces of the country.

CHICAGO exhibitors are considerably wrought up over the running of motion pictures in the Terrace Garden Cafe and seem to be inclined to make it interesting for the management of the Hotel Morrison. The chief of Chicago's fire prevention bureau is quoted as being against the issuing of a theatre license to the Terrace Gardens that will permit them to exhibit films. In addition to the hotel, Harry Moir operates the Boston, Alcazar and Rose theatres, which are in the heart of Chicago's loop and three of the best paying properties in the city.

MANY farmers attending the recent industrial exhibition in Minneapolis bought projecting machines to be used in their various community clubs—what next for the poor downtrodden farmer.

ARTHUR FEIHERY of the Wharton Releasing Co. has been giving Chicago the once-over for a few days.

MANAGER PANTY of the Garden theatre, Michigan City, Indiana, has been in Chicago looking over the market, evidently Michigan City will presently enjoy some large features.

NOW that the Illinois State Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America has put on a new dress called the Illinois Exhibitors Alliance, it proposes to extend its activities to embrace the whole state. The new League headquarters will be in the Century Building and will be governed by a commission of twelve exhibitors. Samuel Atkinson, manager of the Hoyburn theatre, may be called the father of the organization, inasmuch as it was his suggestion a long time ago that the Exhibitors League should be conducted by a commission.

I. L. LESSERMAN, manager of the Universal Chicago office, has just closed a contract with Ascher Bros., who will use his star specials in all their theatres. The contract will amount to many thousands of dollars, attesting the popularity of Universal stars and justifies Mr. Lesserman's elation over his success in procuring the contract.

Heard in Detroit

JOHN H. KUNSKY has raised to evening, Sunday and holiday prices, at the Madison and Adams theatre with the following schedule: main floor, 40 cents; main floor loges, 75 cents; and balcony loges, 55 cents. The daily matinee prices will be 20 and 30 cents as usual.

MACK SENNETT'S "MICKEY," is still breaking records in Detroit. Last week it played the Ferry Field, Rialto, Lakewood, Drury Lane, and Colonial theatres and for actual attendance broke records in all of those playhouses.

"SIS HOPKINS," Mabel Normand's new picture is booked for the Majestic and Regent theatres respectively. The Majestic gets it for the week of March 16.

HARRY GARSON, owner and producer of "The Unpardonable Sin," has been investigating the drawing power of film stars all over the country and declares that the result of his investigation shows Priscilla Dean to be one of the best money-getters.

LAST week was "University of Michigan week" at the Majestice, Detroit.' The Society of University of Michigan Women entered into a deal with Manager Charles G. Branham whereby they got a share of the receipts providing they sold the tickets. The attraction was Madge Kennedy in "Day Dreams."

MRS. CHARLES S. SEAMAN, of Grand Rapids, Mich., wife of Charles H. Seaman, general manager of the Consolidated Theatres Inc., died last week of pneumonia at Blodgett Memorial Hospital. She was an active charity and war worker and devoted most of her time to the Red Cross. She was 26 years old and well known in Grand Rapids society circles.

THE lobby of John H. Kunsky's Adams theatre, Detroit, has been handsomely redecorated in lavender and old rose tapestry. A picture gallery at the end of the lobby is after Louis XIV in pale antique gold with a panoramic frieze representing a fox hunt. Vine foliage covers the ceiling and the relief work is treated in Venetian gold. Arrangements have been made for an ornate and expensive new stage setting by Charles Darrell the manager.

"THE HEART OF HUMANITY," will have its first public showing in Detroit at the Broadway Strand theatre beginning Sunday, March 30. Judging from the reception given the picture elsewhere, it is anticipated that it will have a long run at the Broadway Strand. Charles Garfield, of Flint, showed the picture for a week and reports a high attendance record shattered in his house. An unusual advertising campaign is being planned by W. D. Ward, Jewell manager, who reports that practically every city in the state has booked the feature.

SIDNEY L. ALEXANDER, 1550 Penobscot building, Detroit, is promoting a new theatre on Oakman boulevard, an exclusive residential district. Plans are that the theatre will seat 800.

Happenings in Madison

THE distinctively modern way of giving a big feature a good publicity boost was used by the Fuller Opera House, Tuesday, to advertise "The Heart of Humanity." A private exhibition of this well known war picture was given and the murmur of approval through the select audience was gratifying to Manager Flannery and promises a big run on the picture, which will be given all next week at advanced prices. The invitation list embraced the names of prominent people in the Legislature, a number of Madison best-known families, and a few exhibitors from different parts of the state. Joe Roderick, manager of Universal Film Exchange, asked the audience to advertise the picture among their friends and to notify the manager of the Fuller if they were pleased with the picture. Manager Flannery has now on his desk a neat pile of these expressions of pleasure, with the attached signatures of some of Madison's most influential people. In spite of the absence of the symphony orchestra, which accompanies the big picture, it went over in great style. Every bill board in the city has the catchy poster reading, "The eyes of the world are on 'The Heart of Humanity.'" The university students have taken it up for a slogan. It has been one of the most efficiently advertised pictures ever shown in this city. The last touch will be the small red pasteboard heart hung on the doorknob of every house.

FULLER also announces that one performance of "The Greatest Thing in Life" will be a benefit for the French hospitals. Some public-spirited women have asked Mr. Flannery to allow them to sell additional tickets for this cause, and he gladly consented.

AN unusual picture of an educational nature was given at the Grand theatre this week. Miss Vashta Dalton lectured in connection with the screening of an Eskimo picture. Miss Dalton, who has spent several years in the snows of Alaska, told a strikingly realistic story of this country. She was attired in typical costume common to the district of Service's Yukon.

MARION DAVIES in "Cecilia of Pink Roses" drew a good attendance. The Grand made an auspicious start with the "Lion and the Mouse." For four days next week the Grand will show Nazimova in "Out of the Fog."

THIS picture had a big run in Milwaukee for an entire week and there is little question but what the picture will have the same reception in Madison.

MANAGER MAC WILLIAMS of the Grand has been honored with the appointment as state chairman of the Censorship board. He is already communicating with the men he has appointed on his sub-committees to be placed in every Congressional district in the state.

FATTY ARBUCKLE in "Camping Out" in a matinee performance "knocked them cold," says Manager Desormeaux of the New Strand theatre. Three days this coming week the Strand will show "False Faces," and closely following that is "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch."

THE program at the Majestic theatre included: Mary Mac Laren in "Secret Marriage," Peggy Hyland in "Bonnie Annie Laurie," Harry Carey in "Roped" and Carmel Myers in the "Little White Savage."

SERIALS are apparently becoming popular in Madison. There is one running at the Grand, at the New Strand, at the Gem, and the Orton has three.

F. L. KOPPELBERGER is negotiating for a new theatre for La Cosse.

MR. RICE of the State theatre of Milwaukee is building a new theatre in Oshkosh.

CHARLES PACNI, owner of the Majestic and the Butterfly theatres in Kenosha, is negotiating for the construction of a third house in the same city.

Caruso Makes Hit in Dubuque

ENRICO CARUSO made his debut in pictures in Dubuque on Wednesday, March 5, in his initial Artcraft picture, "My Cousin." As the picture's first run was on Ash Wednesday there was not such a big attendance, but on Thursday and Friday the business was satisfactory. Caruso seemed to please Dubuque fans, so a good attendance at his second picture is assured.

News and Gossip of Springfield Theatres

THE GAIETY has installed a new mirror screen.

THE ROYAL has signed for Exhibitors Mutual Service.

THE EMPRESS, southside neighborhood theatre, has also contracted for Paramount and Artcraft pictures.

AL ATTORA, chief operator of the Princess, but now in France with the A.E.F., is reported on his way home, and will again be back at the Kunz playhouse.

GUS KERASOTES advertised "Under Four Flags" for two days' showing, Monday and Tuesday, March 10 and 11, but the picture did not come. So Gus was forced to use a makeshift bill. A great many people were disappointed, as the picture was quite heavily advertised. Other pictures booked at the Royal for the week of March 9-15 were: "The Lure of the Circus," chapter 14, and "The Silent Sentinel"; "The Appearance of Evil," with June Elvidge; "The Girl of Today," George Walsh in "I'll Say So," and Billie Rhodes in "Hoop-La."

THE CAPITOL theatre has contracted for the Paramount-Artcraft Star series, and will show the first one—a Charles Ray production—about the latter part of March. Manager Maisel has also contracted for the Olive Thomas and Taylor Holmes Triangle plays, and these together with the Paramount-Artcraft Star series and Paramount Success series will give the Capitol one of the best programs of any theatre in Springfield. The Capitol is doing nicely, and with the new program coming in should find patronage the best in the history of the house.

THE GAIETY has signed for the new Drew-Paramount comedies. The first of these is "Romance and Rings."

THE SAVOY started the new Vitagraph serial, "The Man of Might," on Sunday, March 9. Helen Gibson in "Riding Wild" was on the same bill. Other pictures at the Savoy for the week of March 10-15 were as follows: Monday, Margarita Fischer in "The Mantle of Charity"; Tuesday, Grace Darmond in "The Crucible of Life"; Wednesday, "Five Nights," with all-star cast; Thursday, Violet Mersereau in "The Nature Girl"; Friday, Ann Luther in "Her Moment"; Saturday, Frank Keenan in "The Midnight Stage."

THE PRINCESS was disappointed in not getting "Her Code of Honor" for March 9, 19 and 11. The picture was put back a week on the release sheet, so Corinne Griffith in Vitagraph's "The Girl Problem" was substituted for two days. Bessie Love was then brought in for one day in "The Wishing Ring Man." For March 12 and 13 the Princess had "The Great Victory," or "Wilson or the Kaiser." For March 14 and 15, Bessie Barriscale was booked in "A Trick of Fate." Nazimova then follows for three days in "Out of the Fog," her latest Screen Classics production.

DOROTHY DALTON had a great opening with "Extravagance" at the Vaudette on Sunday, March 9. The picture was one that appealed especially to women, the fine clothes and jewels having a strong drawing power. "Fatty" Arbuckle in "Fatty Chases Crickens" and a Burton Holmes Travelogue were also on the bill, which ran for four days. Bryant Washburn followed for three days in "Poor Boob." Washburn is a great favorite here, having many personal friends from his days at the Essanay studio, Chicago.

THE BILL at the Capitol for the week of March 9-15 was as follows: Sunday, "The Lightning Raiders," chapter 10, and Sennett comedy, "Whose Little Wife Are You?" Monday, William Desmond in "Deuce Duncan, and a two reel Fox comedy, "His Bomb Policy"; Wednesday, Harold Lockwood in "Pals First," and Ford Sterling in "His Wild Oats"; Thursday, Jack Pickford and Louise Huff in "Seventeen," and Lloyd comedy, "Going, Going, Gone"; Friday, William Desmond in "Life's a Funny Proposition," and "Accidental Heroes," Strand comedy; Saturday, "Terror of the Range," number 6, and Shorty Hamilton in "The Champ."

THE GAIETY had four fine days with "The False Faces." This is the first picture with Walthall that Springfield has turned out to see since "The Birth of a Nation." East Lynne With Variations," Sennett comedy, was also on the bill and made a terrific hit. For the last three days of the same week the Gaiety had Pauline Frederick in "The Woman on the Index," and "Smiling Bill" Parsons in "Bill Camps Out."

THE LYRIC had a fine week, March 2-8, with the Lee kids in "Smiles" for two days, Hale Hamilton in "Johnny-on-the-spot" for two more, and William Farnum in "The Man Hunter" for the last three days of the week.

PAULINE FREDERICK had in "Paid in Full" the best picture since Watts signed for Paramount service. "Paid in Full" was the attraction at the Vaudette on March 2, 3, 4 and 5. Lila Lee followed for three days in "Puppy Love" and did only fair business, due in some respects to the bad weather. "Safety First Ambrose," a Sennett comedy reissue, was on the same program.

FRANK KEENAN pleased for three days at the Princess in "Todd of the Times," one of his best pictures. Grace Darmond followed him in "What Every Woman Wants" and this was succeeded by Henry Walthall in "The Long Lane's Turning."

THE GAIETY had W. S. Hart in "The Poppy Girl's Husband" for four days, starting March 16. "The Village Smithy," Sennett comedy, was on the same bill. Other pictures coming to the Gaiety soon are Elsie Ferguson in "The Marriage Price," Fred Stone in "Johnny Get Your Gun," and "The Brand," Rex Beach-Goldwyn production.

MARGUERITE CLARK came to the Vaudette March 16 for four days in "Three Men and a Girl," her newest Paramount play. Dorothy Gish followed for three more in "Boots."

PICTURES at the Lyric were Madlaine Traverse in "Gambling in Souls," here on Sunday and Monday, March 16-17. On the 18 and 19, Manager Loper had Viola Dana in "Satan, Junior." And on the 20, 21 and 22, Alice Brady was seen in "The Better Half."

BEN ROVIN continues to bat around .300 with his Amuse-U. There isn't a day in or out that Ben doesn't do a whale of a business, and it's all on Fox pictures mostly. Ben is a 100 per cent Fox exhibitor, and is proud of the fact. The last cleanup Ben had was on "Les Miserables," shown on March 9. Dustin Farnum in "The Spy" was due at the Amuse-U on March 12.

THERE will be several shifts among the operators here in the near future, as some of the soldier boys are returning and are going back to their old places.

OUTLYING houses—Empress, North End Circle, Pekin and Palace—report that things are good with them, with no cause for complaint.

Warn Against Spread of Influenza in Milwaukee, Wisconsin

MILWAUKEE, Wis, theatres here are running slides warning against the spread of influenza as a result of a third outbreak of the disease. The health department has started another campaign against the evil and reports 100 cases with 22 new ones in a single day.

Film Flickers from Flint

MARTIN JOHNSON'S "Cannibals of the South Seas" was the featured attraction at the Palace vaudeville theatre in Flint for the first four days of the week beginning March 16. Manager Frank Butterfield gave the picture preference over five acts of vaudeville in his newspaper advertising

THE feature picture for the week of March 16 at the Garden theatre was Cecil B. De Mille's "Don't Change Your Husband." The picture was booked for three days, March 18, 19 and 20. For March 16 and 17 "The Way of a Man with a Maid," with Bryant Washburn, was the offering.

THE second showing of "Hearts of the World" at popular prices (25 cents for all seats), at the Strand, was given March 17 and 18. This is the second run within a month of the same picture at the Strand. Besides this the picture played at the Palace at $1.50 top, and at the Garden at popular prices for a week and four days, respectively, previous to the two Strand showings.

MANAGER LESTER MATT of the Strand is accomplishing the largest part of the remodeling of his theatre building with business going on as usual. While he has been playing to large audiences workmen have been building the side walls up 15 feet more and putting on a new roof over the old one. When this work is done the theatre will be closed long enough to allow the removal of the old roof and the construction of a balcony of 600 seats, giving a total capacity of more than 1,200. The building will also have an elaborate new front.

W. S. BUTTERFIELD of Battle Creek, head of the Bijou Theatrical Enterprise Co., which controls theatres in practically every large city in Michigan, and already is operating three in Flint, has taken over a fourth, the Royal. This is located on Saginaw street, the main business thoroughfare, and is to be remodeled into a large picture house, it is understood. The complete plans of Mr. Butterfield regarding his new property have not been announced. Mr. Butterfield now operates the Garden, playing pictures; the Palace, pictures and vaudeville, and the Majestic, stock and road attractions, in this city.

On the Screens of Dubuque

ANOTHER Gilbert Anderson film, "Red Blood and Yellow," was shown at the Star theatre on Sunday, March 9. Dubuquers, especially the boys, haven't forgotten Broncho Billy, and hundreds of his old admirers were there to see him.

A PHOTOPLAY highly tinged with comedy, romance and adventure was "Up the Road with Sally," the Sunday feature at the Family theatre. The star, Constance Talmadge, is one of the most delightful comedians on the screen. The picture was a second runner, but it drew the crowds, especially at the four o'clock and the evening performances.

VITAGRAPH features continue to be shown at the Princess theatre every Sunday. On March 9, "The Beloved Impostor" with Gladys Leslie, was exhibited to record houses. Miss Leslie is a dainty little actress with a captivating smile—hence her admirers are many.

COMING so near to the Fifth Liberty Loan drive, "On the Jump," starring George Walsh, was a most timely feature. It was shown at the Liberty theatre on Sunday, March 9, and it must have made a satisfactory impression on Liberty patrons, for there were no "kicks" coming. The agile George leaped and jumped and hopped from one adventure into the other—all in the interests of the government and the Liberty Bond campaign.

CECIL DE MILLE truly made of his second filming of "The Squaw Man" a screen masterpiece. The picture was splendid—it followed the book more than the majority of adaptations, the settings were correct in every way; the direction exceptionally good. The cast, headed by Elliott Dexter and Ann Little, was admirable. Elliott Dexter's portrayal of Jim Wynnegate can easily be counted as the best thing he has done to date. Ann Little was equally as good as Naturich, while Katherine MacDonald, Theodore Roberts, Jack Holt and Monte Blue were well liked in their respective roles.

"HER ONLY WAY," with Norma Talmadge, ran a successful two days engagement at the Princess theatre beginning March 10. The beautiful Norma was better than ever in this picture—she portrayed her role as only a finished actress could.

BARBARA CASTLETON, assisted by John Bowers and little Madge Evans, played at the Liberty theatre Monday, March 10, in "Heredity." Centering around the descendants of a strong, fearless man, who inherited all of his characteristics, the picture boasted of an unusually interesting story. It drew average houses.

MARY MILES MINTER played at the Dreamland theatre Tuesday, March 12, in "The Eyes of Julia Deep." Dainty Mary drew good evening houses.

WORK on the Strand theatre is progressing at a fast rate. A large force of men are at work tearing out the old furnishings, and from all appearances the theatre will be completed during May.

AN old Tom Mix feature, "In the Days of the Thundering Herd," attracted large crowds at the Star theatre, where it was shown on Tuesday, March 11. Mix is a favorite at the Star, as he is at the Dreamland and the Liberty, and whether his features are old or new, they draw the crowds.

"WIFE OR COUNTRY," starring Harry Mestayer and Gloria Swanson, played at the Liberty theatre on Tuesday, March 11. In addition to this feature "The Human Shield," a chapter in "The Man of Might," was presented.

SPEAKING of serials, Dubuque theatres are showing four of them. The Family has "The Wolves of Kultur" and "The Brass Bullet," the Liberty and the Star show "The Man of Might" and the Grand has "The Lightning Raider." Every one is a business getter.

"PRUNELLA" with Marguerite Clark, played at the Family theatre on Tuesday, March 11, to the customary Marguerite Clark houses.

Elgin Items of Interest

BESSIE BARRISCALE'S new picture, "Trick of Fate," led the bill at the Temple in the second March week, showing there Sunday. The double program bill of Monday included the Houdini serial, the Universal Special News Weekly, Eddie Polo in "Lure of the Circus," and the comedy, "Caught in a Trap." The remainder of the week was given to "The Heart of Humanity."

KITTY GORDON in "The Nurse's Story," advertised "not a war picture," "that the war-drama-tired might not be discouraged in attendance, was leader of the bill at the Star the second week in March. A Sidney Drew comedy was shown with it. It led the bill Tuesday.

ON Sunday and Monday of the week the Peggy Hyland picture, "The Girl With No Regrets" was shown, and the Harold Lloyd comedy, "Going, Going, Gone."

HAROLD LOCKWOOD in the society feature, "The Great Romance," featured the bill on Wednesday and Thursday. With this was shown the Unique comedy, "The Cop."

ALICE HOWELL in comedy, Fatty Arbuckle in "At Coney Island" and Pearl White in "The Lightning Raider" made the Friday bill, and Gladys Brockwell in "The Call of the Soul" completed the week's attractions.

GRAND patrons eagerly awaited the coming of Dorothy Gish in her first Paramount picture, "Battling Jane," to the Grand on Monday and Tuesday, March 10 and 11. Dorothy has been received with tremendous enthusiasm in every picture of her appearing at the Grand, and eagerness to see her under Paramount direction promises good patronage for "Battling Jane."

LILA LEE and Harrison Ford, practically new stars to Elgin audiences, were shown in "The Cruise of the Make-Believes" at the Grand, Wednesday and Thursday, March 6 and 7. The Allied War Review was shown in conjunction with it.

WILLIAM S. HART in "The Border Wireless" featured the bill at the Grand on Friday and Saturday, March 14 and 15.

BIG audiences at the Orpheum the week-end of March 7 and 8 expressed enthusiastic pleasure in "The Sea Waif," with Louise Huff and John Bowers." Pictures of the week that followed included Ethel Barrymore in "The Divorcee," Theda Bara in "A Fool There Was" and in "The Light," and Barbara Castleton and Johnny Hines in "What Love Forgives."

FRITZI BRUNNETTE in "The Sealed Envelope" was highly praised by Temple patrons when shown there Saturday, March 9. "As good as many special features," was the verdict of many.

THAT Marguerite Clark is as sweet and dainty and clever as ever, but that "Out of a Clear Sky" is a very weak vehicle for her return after a long absence, to the Grand, was verdict of its patrons on Friday and Saturday, March 8 and 9. The crowds were good, the favoritism of Miss Clark in the Sub-Deb stories, the last Clark pictures to be brought here previously, encouraging the large patronage.

What Racine Is Doing

THE Strand theatre, which for years has been in existence under different names in this city, put on an educational and interesting play last week entitled, "Are You Fit to Marry"? The matinee was given entirely over to the women, and evening for men. The show was well attended. The Strand Theatre's productions are usually along educational lines, which are attracting considerable attention here.

The Orpheum, Racine's only exclusive vaudeville house, which seats about a thousand people, has gone into new hands. Allert Brothers of Chicago, have transferred their lease to another big concern in the Windy City, who have changed the policy of the house, and will immediately put it into effect. This new policy will include several reels of film, and half dozen acts of first class vaudeville, matinee and evening.

THE HEART OF HUMANITY was shown at the Rex Theatre on Monday, March 10. The leading lady in this play is Dorothy Phillips, supported by Wm. Stowell, Walt Whitman, Robert Anderson, Frank Braidwood, George Hackathorn, Gloria Joy, Margaret Mann, Lloyd Hughes and Pat O'Mally.

MANAGER Tom Norman held a special performance at his theatre, midnight, of March 6, to which he invited several local newspaper scribes, who "wrote 'em up right" in the dailies. Every prediction was that the Rex would be filled to capacity when this production is thrown on the screen. CHARLES CHAPLIN will be at the Bijou next week in "The Pawnshop." Charlie is still a great favorite with local movie lovers in this city, especially with the "kiddies."

EDDIE POLO in "The Lure of the Circus," is seen at this theatre weekly in this successful serial, eight parts of which have already been played.

"RESTLESS SOULS," featuring Alma Rubens promises to be a big drawing card at the Palace. Under its new policy, and the management of Mr. Beecher, this theatre, in connection with the Rialto is doing a big business.

THE Ja-Da trio, three Jackies from the Great Lakes, and writers of the song hit Ja-Da, were a "scream" at the Rialto last week. The whole town turning out to see them during their four-day stay there. As a result of this enormous turnout, Manager Blumberg has secured the services of Benny and Confrey, also of the Great Lakes, but performing in civilian clothes.

With Dubuque Exhibitors

"TILL I COME BACK TO YOU," the Cecil De Mille production featuring Bryant Washburn, played at the Princess theatre in Dubuque, March 5 and 6, to full houses. The star is popular in Dubuque—in fact, he is one of the best-liked male players on the screen here.

WILLIAM DESMOND and Louise Lovely explained to Dreamland fans that "Life's a Funny Proposition" on Wednesday and Thursday, March 5 and 6. William Desmond was splendid in the leading role, and his co-star, Louise Lovely, was as lovely as her name. Both players have a large following in this city.

"THE LONE AVENGER," a gripping tale of how a strong man metes out justice to those who have wronged him, played at the Star theatre Thursday and Friday, March 6 and 7, to exceptionally good houses on both days.

A CLEAN, wholesome drama with an interesting plot, a likeable star, an excellent supporting cast, good direction and pleasing settings—that sums up "Faith," the bill at the Dreamland theatre Friday and Saturday, March 7 and 8.

"INFATUATION" must have infatuated Dubuque picture fans for it drew fine houses, afternoon and evening, during tht three days of its engagement at the Majestic, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, March 6, 7 and 8. Gaby Deslys was fascinating in the leading role, but the other characters were only fair. Most of the people who saw the play liked it, however, and encouraged other fans to see it.

BILLIE BURKE and Thomas Meighan—a combination that will pack a theatre, regardless of the weather. These stars appeared at the Family theatre Thursday in "Eve's Daughter," and brought Manager Yount a capacity house. Everyone in the North End is a devotee of Billie Burke, and when she plays with Thomas Meighan, the theatre can't hold their admirers.

THE Friday and Saturday bill at the Princess theatre was "Green Eyes," with that charming player Dorothy Dalton. As usual, Miss Dalton attracted a good house—and then some. The story was interesting, and proved a good hour's amusement.

"Hearts of Men" Shown at California Theatre

THE first photoplay to be produced by its star was given its public premiere March 10 at the California theatre, Los Angeles, when "Hearts of Men" was shown to the public for the first time. The producer and star of this is George Beban.

For more than twelve months Mr. Beban has been working on this film play. Every scene was made under his personal supervision, and it has been re-edited and partially retaken, until it is a close knit drama of suspense building qualities filled with humor and pathos that pleases as few releases do.

The producer-star appears in the role of an Italian florist, who in the hope of improving his mother's health, buys land in high and dry Arizona, spoken of by the real estate shark as "Paradise Valley." The action of the remainder of the play is laid in the western desert country, and portrays the action of rough men in aiding a deserving but unfortunate man. Little four-year-old George, a son of Bedan, appears as the Italian's son; Mabel Van Buren has the role of the Rose of Napoli, and renamed the She Devil by the western men of brawn. Of the supporting cast composed of Clarence Burton, Harry Rattenberry, George Pierson, Sarah Kernan and others, only the highest praise can be given.

The picture is to be distributed by Hiram Abrams, and if it is received by the public and press all over the country as warmly as it has been received in Los Angeles, the film will prove one of the most successful releases of the year.

Incidental music for "Hearts of Men" was prepared by Nicola Donatelli, and an atmosphere creating setting, arranged by Presentation Director Harry Leonhardt of the California Theatre, named "Night Time in Italy," added much to the program. During the showing of this the California trio sang "O Sole Mio" and "Night Time in Italy."

"Pettigrew's Girl" Gets Showing on Coast

A PRE-VIEW of "Pettigrew's Girl," Ethel Clayton's Paramount release of March 23, in which Monte Blue has the leading role, was given to invited guests at the Iris theatre, Hollywood, last week. Practically every star and player of note in the studio colony was present. The ovation given the picture was decidedly out of the ordinary. Seldom has a feature been so praised by experts.

One famous star expressed himself in believing that it was the best human interest picture he had ever seen. Others were just as high in their praises. The audience, sophisticated and picture-tired as it was, laughed and wept and applauded with enthusiasm and frequency. After the picture was over Miss Clayton, Mr. Blue and the director, George Medford, were overwhelmed with congratulations.

Among those present were Cecil B. DeMille, Douglas Fairbanks, Gloria Swanson, Elliott Dexter, Wallace Reid, Lila Lee, Bryant Washburn, Donald Crisp, Shirley Mason, Hugh Ford and others of prominence.

"Pettigrew's Girl," is an adaptation of Dana Burnet's story in the Saturday Evening Post. It was scenarized by Will M. Ritchey. Miss Clayton has the role of a Broadway chorus girl, Daisy Heath.

Universal Family Holds Reunion at the Studios

JOY rides were the rage at Universal City last week when Universal's big family held a re-union at the studios. With the assembling of the big production family came several stars with their new benzine buggies and not one was content until each of the gasoline chariots had been examined by the officials in attendance and pronounced the best ever. After flipping coins with Monroe Salisbury and Dorothy Phillips, Priscilla Dean won the right to take the party on a joy ride in her new McFarlan six. When Miss Dean threw in the clutch and whizzed away from the studios her car was carrying twice its capacity and Allen Holubar followed with those Miss Dean could not accommodate, in his new Stutz.

Just before starting Miss Dean drew her car up before a still camera and the above reproduction resulted. Carl Laemmle, Universal's president; his son, Julius; Monroe Salisbury, Dorothy Phillips, Mary MacLaren, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran and T. D. Cochrane, Universal's oriental representative, were with Miss Dean in the machine. In Holubar's car were, Marie Walcamp, Eddie Polo, Jim Corbett, Rupert Julian, and William Stowell. Following a ten-mile ride the party returned to Universal City for an informal dinner party at which all of Universal's female stars acted as hostesses. P. A. Powers, Joe Brandt, P. D. Cochrane and William Sistrom, studios manager, greeted the two cars upon their return to the studios. This get together party brought together the largest galaxy of Universal stars and executives ever assembled at the studios at one time.

MANAGER ALLENDER had record houses at the Majestic with the Fox production, "Salome," starring Theda Bara, and "Submerged Eye" at the Lyric.

New Idea Discussed at Seattle Luncheon

THE Northwest Film Board of Trade, of Seattle, recently had a luncheon for the managers of both motion picture and theatrical houses of the Northwest. The object of the luncheon was to discuss plans for the complete organization of the various branches of regular amusements under one strong central body. This body will be a co-operative one, although the Board of Trade and the exhibitors will act separately, attending to their own special business as heretofore, but will unite when the necessity arrives.

The idea was originated by George Eden of the Select Exchange in Seattle. The dinner was attended by about seventy-five managers, the majority of whom saw the necessity of sticking together, especially at these times when more taxes are being suggested to be thrown on the industry and when a movement is again being started by some "godly" reformers who wish to have all forms of amusements take a rest on Sundays. A special case was told the managers by Harry Sigmund, secretary and attorney for the Film Board. While the object of the Film Board is not to fight cases for the house managers and owners of motion picture houses of the state, nevertheless they are willing to help whenever necessary. The city council of Yakima, Wash., recently decided to close all motion forms of amusements on Sundays. As Manager Mercer, the owner of the largest ones in Yakima was out of the city, the Film Board of Trade, sent down to Yakima at their own expense, Mr. Sigmund, to show the council where and why they were wrong. He was successful in keeping the Yakima theatres open.

Many of the managers immediately saw the need of such an organization and decided to become associated with the Northwest Board of Trade. They did so not only in words, but paid their initiation fees and dues for one year right on the spot. President Dick Rosebaum, of the Board, introduced Jack Korpell as toastmaster. Other meetings will be held in Spokane, Portland and Butte. The exchange managers are instructing their salesmen to explain the measure to those who could not attend and the necessity of all joining. When the organization is completed, an office in charge of a secretary will be opened.

Coughlin at Showing in Spokane, Washington

WALTER A. COUGHLIN, Montana representative for Pathe Exchanges, Inc., arrived in Spokane last week to be present at the screening of some Pathe current productions, in the projection room of the Pathe Exchange such as "Common Clay," the great American play, given first prize by Harvard University, and which ran one year at the Republic Theatre in New York, and which is booked at the Rialto Theatre at Broadway and 44th Street, New York.

Mr. Coughlin will make a short trip to the larger cities of the inland empire, and then return to the Treasure State of Montana, where he reports business for the exhibitors and Pathe is booming.

Metzger Arrives on the Coast

G. A. METZGER western division manager of Universal Film Exchanges, arrived in Los Angeles March 9 for a stay of a week or more after a trip over all of the other territory in this division.

Short News of San Diego

THEATRE-GOERS with whom Miss Leatrice Joy is a favorite have the privilege at present of seeing her in stock with the Virginia Brissac company at the Strand, and also in the film drama, "The Man Hunter," with William Farnum at the Pickwick.

AT the Plaza for the week Nazimova, in the picture feature, "Out of the Fog," has been a big drawing card, for, added to the popularity of the star, there has been a local interest in that the play is an adaptation of "'Ception Shoals," written by H. Austin Adams, a local playwright.

THE D. W. Griffith feature, "Hearts of the World," has been drawing well at the Isis theatre for a week, showing that interest in war films still continues strong in spite of the "big league" talk on the other side of the pond.

MANAGER R. E. HICKS found that he picked a good thing when he secured "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," featuring Marguerite Clark, for the Cabrillo's bill for the week.

"CHEATING CHEATERS," starring Clara Kimball Young, has been showing for a week at the Superba. Following the recent production of the play by the Brissac company at the Strand, many San Diegans took advantage of the opportunity to compare the film with the spoken drama.

CONSTANCE TALMADGE, in "Who Cares," proved during the week's presentation at the Broadway that she holds a strong place in the hearts of Manager Black's patrons at that film theatre. The newspaper subscription receipt-ticket plan which the Broadway followed so successfully during January and February is being continued during March.

From Seattle Mr. Christie goes to Vancouver, B. C.

BEN H. COLLIER, well known in the Montana territory, has been added to the Fox organization in Seattle as salesman. Mr. Collier will cover that territory.

MANAGER CARL STEARN of the Metro exchange in Seattle, recently returned from a two weeks' jump, covering part of the Northwest. While on his trip he visited Boise, Idaho, Spokane, Wallace, and other cities. He found that there was great demand for the Nazimova and Harry Lockwood productions his company produces and was successful in closing contracts for them.

THE Pantages recently had a very successful "Scotch Night," but Manager "Eddie" Milne admits that Pearl White in the serial, "The Lightning Rod," was one of the features that made it succesful.. "Eddie" now has a house where he can entertain the boys of the hockey teams.. Hockey is one of Eddie's favorite diversions.

Heard in Los Angeles Town

ADVICE has reached the Los Angeles Metro Exchange that W. E. Atkinson, general manager Metro Exchanges, left New York on March 10th for a tour of all the Metro branches, and will arrive in Los Angeles the latter part of March. Mr. Atkinson will spend several days at the studio of the Metro Company while in the west.

Reports from all the thirteen western and intermountain states to District Representative Harry Lustig of Metro are to the effect that the two Screen Classics "Why Germany Must Pay" and "The Great Victory," are having exceptionally good bookings in every section, pointing out that the belief of many that war pictures were not wanted was not based on the desires of the public or the theatre owners, but the opinions of distributors and producers.

BEN FISH, manager of the Los Angeles Goldwyn Exchange, has been handing out cigars to his patrons and acquaintances with the explanation "it's a boy."

JAMES GRAINGER, formerly district manager for the William Fox Exchanges in the central west, is in Los Angeles on a business trip.

MORRIS FENNENBOCK, owner of the Star Theatre, Fellows, California, was a visitor on Los Angeles Film Row the week of March 15th, and while there became a hundred per cent Metro exhibitor by booking all Metro releases.

THE CALIFORNIA THEATRE in Los Angeles has booked the forthcoming Nazimova production "Out of the Fog" for the week of March 31st. During the recent showing of the Nazimova "Eye for an Eye" the California played to exceptional business, and it is predicted that the coming attraction will prove even more popular than the previous production of this star.

WILLIAM ALEXANDER, western division manager for United Picture Theatres Corporation, returned to Los Angeles from a four weeks' tour to Salt Lake, Denver, Spokane, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco, and found business conditions for the theatres in all of these cities and territories above normal.

"THE UNITED THEATRES PRODUCTIONS have first-run contracts with the best theatres in every city in the western division," Mr. Alexander reported, "and statements made by the theatre owners indicate they are well pleased with the outlook for greater box office returns in the coming attractions of the United. The most recent first-run house to be added to our list is that of the Strand, owned and managed by M. L. Markowitz at San Francisco.

LOUIS HYMAN, for the past year manager of the Los Angeles branch of the All Star Feature Distributors, is leaving for San Francisco, where he will become general manager and supervise the Los Angeles, as well as the San Francisco, branches, relieving Sol. L. Lesser of this work, that he may give more attention to the national distribution of "Yankee Doodle in Berlin," and the showing of the D. W. Griffith "Hearts of the World," throughout the seventeen western states. Mr. Hyman has been identified with the All Star organization for the past two years or more, serving as associate manager at the San Francisco branch previous to becoming manager in Los Angeles. In the latter city he has made many friends among the exhibitors and exchangemen, and was one of the prime movers in the formation of the Los Angeles Film Exchangemen's Board of Trade. Elmer Benjamin, who has been affiliated with the San Francisco branch, will be Mr. Hyman's successor in the Los Angeles territory.

MORE EFFICIENCY on the part of Harry Ballance, manager of the Paramount-Artcraft Los Angeles Exchange, is expected by his associates, inasmuch as he has now purchased a home projecting machine which will enable him to see the new releases of this program at his residence in the evening. Mr. Ballance believes the additional time will now permit him to have interviews with exhibitors by this means, for heretofore a portion of each week has been taken up with previewing new pictures upon their arrival.

W. T. NORTON, formerly manager of the General Film Exchange at Portland, who later served the Pathe organization in a similar position at Portland, has been engaged as city salesman for the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Exchange in Los Angeles, and with Manager G. R. Patton, hopes to materially increase the business of the Los Angeles branch.

With Los Angeles Theatres and Exchanges

NORMAN H. BOSLEY, formerly booker of the Triangle, who has been in the service for the past eighteen months, has been engaged by Louis Hyman, manager of the All Star Feature Distributors, as manager of the "Mickey" company which will tour Southern California. Two prints are being used in this territory, one to play in Los Angeles, and the other in the outside territory.

THE Universal Exchange reports four to seven-day bookings for Allen Holubar's "The Heart of Humanity" in all of the principal towns of Southern California. This picture will go to the Florence at Pasadena for five days; Pastime, Bakersfield, five days; Strand, San Bernardino, four days; Plaza, San Diego, one week; Strand at Phoenix, four days, and one print has just completed a week's run at the Laughlin Theatre, Long Beach, California. Four prints will be necessary to meet the requirement of Los Angeles territory booking.

RECORD serial bookings have been made by the Universal Exchange in the Southern California territory with "The Lure of the Circus," produced by J. P. McGowan, and reports to the exchange indicate that this serial is bringing better results for the exhibitor than any previous serial released. This has been booked into many houses that heretofore did not play serials.

J. H. GOLDBERG, formerly identified with Los Angeles and San Francisco Film Exchanges as salesman, has returned from service in the Marines, and accepted the position as manager of the Consolidated Film Corporation branch at 730 South Olive Street, Los Angeles.

J. J. COSTIGAN of the Orpheum Theatre at Flagstaff, Arizona, made his semi-annual pilgrimage to the film shrine, and completed negotiations for services of his theatre.

E. STEWART has sold the Photoplay Theatre No. 1 on West Washington Street, Los Angeles, to George Hosford. The sale was made through Leo Ryan. Another reported sale of the week is that of the Majestic at Santa Monica to George Zimmerman.

A new house is being built at Corona, California, by Mrs. Pembrose, owner of the Star at Elsinore.

JAMES COOK of El Centro and E. O. Emmert, Calexico, who co-operate with theatre owners at Brawley, Imperial and Holtville in booking by circuit, spent several days in Los Angeles the week of March 8th securing services for five theatres in the Imperial Valley.

MANAGER WALSH of the Pickwick Theatre, San Diego, formerly branch manager of the Fox Exchange in Los Angeles, was a visitor on Los Angeles Film Row this week.

HERMAN BOSLEY, manager of the Alhambra Theatre, Los Angeles, gave the members of the Universal Exchange staff a severe shock during the past week when he tore down the barriers that had prevented him from booking Universal subjects, and wrote out a check for the two-reel comedy "Lions and Ladies." C. L. Theuerkaul is accredited with breaking into this heretofore untouched territory.

THE opening of Allen Holubar's "The Heart of Humanity" at the Strand Theatre, San Francisco, was made an event by the presence of President Carl Laemmle, Miss Dorothy Phillips, the star, Director Holubar, and Manager Dave Bershon of the Los Angeles Universal Exchange. Miss Phillips and Mr. Holubar both made personal appearances at the Strand on the opening day, Miss Phillips singing the song recently dedicated to her by two returned American soldiers.

W. J. MULLANEY, Pathe Arizona representative, is back from a trip over his forty-eight towns, and succeeded in booking serials in forty-two. In many instances Mullaney made contracts with exhibitors that provide for the showing of episodes from two or three serials each week. In all of the forty-two towns Mullaney has booked the following serials: "The Lightning Raider," "The Terror of the Range," "Hands Up," "Wolves of Kultur" and "The Tiger's Trail." Manager E. D. Tate of the Pathe Los Angeles Exchange makes the claim that the only thing that prevented Mullaney from making additional bookings was that the Pathe did not have more serials on the market at the present time.

J. G. CONNER has arrived in Los Angeles from New York and taken charge of the management of the distribution of American Film Company subjects in the Southern California territory succeeding G. J. Crawley. En route to the coast Mr. Conner investigated conditions at Philadelphia, Pittsburg, Indianapolis, Chicago and San Francisco. Conner was identified with the Mutual distributing system for four years preceding a year with the Government Division of Films prior to taking up work with the American.

With Los Angeles Producers

THE BRENTWOOD FILM CORPORATION has begun the production of its second film, a comedy drama titled "Better Times," which is being produced under the direction of King W. Vidor, who is the author-director of "The Turn in the Road" and also of the present subject. David Butler, remembered for his work in "The Greatest Thing In Life," Zasu Pitts and George Hackathorn are among the prinicpals. "The Turn in the Road" has been sold by the Brentwood Film Corporation to Robertson-Cole.

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG has this week completed the filming of "The Better Wife." Most all of the exterior scenes were made in the millionaire colony at Montecito near Santa Barbara, where the company spent two weeks. With the finishing of this film, perhaps one of the most important casts ever essembled for one picture disbanded, the personel besides Miss Young including Lillian Walker, Kathleen Williams, Ben Alexander, Barbara Tennant, Nigel Barry and others.

ATTENTION centers on the first H. B. Warner production for Robertson-Cole at the Jesse D. Hampton studios which is titled "The Man Who Turned White," for the reason that William Desmond is on a vacation of one month, and the Jack Kerrigan Company this week completed the filming of "The Best Man." The latter was made under the direction of Thomas Heffron. The new Hampton star, Mr. Warner, has Barbara Castleton as his leading woman, and the play is being made under the personal supervision of Mr. Hampton, with the co-direction of Park Frame.

DIRECTOR AL CHRISTIE of Christie Comedies, has now finished and titled the first two-reel release which is to go to the exhibitors the latter part of March, the name given being "Sally of the Chorus." The making of this film has at the Christie studio been considered the most important work since the plant was opened more than two years ago, and Director Al has given his undivided attention to the making of all scenes. The comedy is the first of a series in which Fay Tincher will be starred with a cast made up of Christie head-liners. Playing opposite Miss Tincher is Harry Depp, and the players of the picture are Molly Malone, Harry Edwards, Patricia Palmer, Roscoe Karns and a chorus of twenty beauties who do the shimmy dance.

"SUNNYSIDE," the third Charles Chaplin release, was promised for delivery to the laboratories by March 22, on which date Sid Chaplin left for Chicago with the negative and first print.

News of the Week in San Francisco

"CHEATING CHEATERS," with Clara Kimball Young, made an exceptional hit at the California theatre. On Sunday night a line of patrons was before the ticket office as late as eleven o'clock at night, and the house has been crowded at every performance. At Los Angeles the picture made such a success at the new Broadway that after the first three days of the run T. A. Tally, the manager, telegraphed an extension of his time from one week to two, and said he might want it for a third week.

"A PROBATION WIFE," with Norma Talmadge as the star is scheduled for the week beginning March 30 at the California in this city. The Select management in this city is so enthusiastic over the picture that it expects a great deal of double time, and predicts that the picture will win as much approval as "Cheating Cheaters."

THE Majestic theatre at Reno, which is owned by Mrs. George Nixon, who so generously entertained Film Row over the Washington Birthday holidays, is constantly making improvements in its equipment. The latest is the installation of a new motor, which was sold by G. A. Metcalfe.

THE "Community Center" at Crockett has installed a motion picture outfit. Crockett is a sugar town.

W. STEWART WEBSTER of the Strand theatre circuit, Sacramento, was a visitor to San Francisco. He came to renew some equipment as well as to make bookings for his circuit.

G. A. METCALFE of San Francisco has received a carload of Speer carbons. This is one of the largest shipments of carbons to the Coast ever made.

DURING the past week it is reported that four former saloonkeepers of Nevada were in San Francisco arranging to go into the motion picture business in the now "dry" State of Nevada. Some of the local trade believe that when prohibition becomes effective in California there will be a boom in new houses, as many of the old-time saloons will be used to display motion pictures. They also assert that the people will have more money to spend on amusements when the State goes "dry."

C. J. CUNNINGHAM, former owner of the St. Francis theatre, opposite the St. Francis Hotel, on Geary street, this city, has taken over the Rex theatre at Sixteenth and Mission streets. He has been running his new house but a short time, but says he is perfectly satisfied with the business that is developing there.

THE Universal Film Exchange, Inc., has had an unusual number of prominent visitors. Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Co. came in on the 8th to see how the "Hearts of Humanity" was going at the Strand theatre. He was very well satisfied by the success of the picture at this theatre.

TOM COCORAN, head of the Universal, at Tokio, was in for a day, and sailed for Japan on the 10th.

ALLEN HOLUBAR was here to arrange a prologue and music for the "Hearts of Humanity" at the Strand. He has just returned to Universal City.

DOROTHY PHILLIPS is appearing in person in connection with "Hearts of the World," every afternoon and evening. When she arrived in San Francisco she was met at the Ferry station by Captain O'Brien of the police force, with a squad of policemen and escorted to the St. Francis Hotel.

GUS METZGER, district manager of the Universal, covering the Northwest is in San Francisco, accompanied by his wife, as is also Sales Manager J. J. Schnitzer. While here they laid out the policy of the San Francisco office for future bookings, etc. They later left for Los Angeles, where Mr. Metzger will spend about three weeks and where later he will make his headquarters.

THE largest recent deals in motion picture trade circles was recently consummated by Sol Lesser, president of the All Star Feature Co. of this city, and president of the State Rights Distributing Corporation, with headquarters in New York, when he bought outright the exclusive rights covering the entire United States to Mack Sennett's feature film, "Yankee Doodle in Berlin," together with the producing rights to the act in which the Sennett Bathing Beauties appear in person. Lesser proposes to cover California and the Pacific Coast with the organization appearing at the Tivoli, the success of which, he says, encourages him to undertake the national enterprise. For Eastern and Middle Western presentation, Lesser says he is privileged to draw further on the Sennett corps of beauties in Los Angeles, so the picture and accompanying act presented by the Sennett girls in person will be uniform in quality all over the United States.

ELMER E. BENJAMIN, formerly with Sol Lesser in this city, has been transferred to the Los Angeles branch.

M. J. COHEN of the All Star has returned from a trip to Stockton and neighborhood, where he went to tell them all about "Mickey." No. 1 Road Show of "Mickey" has started on its travels and has its opening at San Jose on March 12. Joe Carey is the agent ahead of the show, and Sam E. Allen the representative with the show.

THE World Film Corporation announces that exhibitors are anxiously awaiting a chance to book "The Better 'Ole." The literature and advertising matter has arrived, but as yet the date for release in this territory has not been announced, nor has it been settled which theatre will be fortunate enough to secure the first run in San Francisco.

SAMUEL H. LEVIN, manager and owner of the Coliseum theatre, at Ninth and Clement streets, has created on his staff the position of House Hostess. Miss Louise E. Taber has the post. "It is my desire that patrons of the house be treated as guests," says Levin. "The House Hostess will pass most of her time in the mezzanine lounge." The Coliseum is said to be the first house in the city to create such a position.

PLANS for a $40,000 brick theatre at Pittsburgh, Cal., for E. Enea and Brothers are being prepared by Architect A. W. Cornelius, in this city.

FRANK ATKINS of the Atkins theatre, Marysville, spent a few hours in the city this week on his way back from Pasadena and Santa Ana, where he has a musical comedy company.

FRANK VESELY of the Brown's Opera House, Salinas, was a visitor to Film Row this week.

Select Shows "Cavell Case" Privately

A PRE-VIEW of "The Cavell Case," with Julia Arthur as the martyred nurse, was given March 12 at the St. Francis Hotel in San Francisco. The Select Pictures Corporation arranged to give the showing, which was considered one of the important events in motion picture trade circles of the year in San Francisco. Invitations were sent out to 2,000 people and admission was by invitation only.

In Portland Film Circles

WHILE Portland theatres of all kinds are enjoying unusual prosperity the up-state theatres are beginning to show signs of new life. The "flu" scare is safely over—exhibitors knock on wood when they say it, however—soldiers are coming back home, and some of the houses are planning to exhibit more days a week, and plunging on more expensive pictures.

GEORGE E. JACKSON, former Mutual manager in Portland, and more recently with World following his discharge from the army, is now a salesman for Universal, with Portland his headquarters.

THE COLUMBIA THEATRE is to show "Hearts of Humanity" for two weeks. Gus Metzer, Universal Western chief, asserts that Jensen and Von Herberg paid the record price for a picture for Portland when they bought the Alan Holubar special. Paul E. Noble is planning a big publicity campaign in connection with the showing.

MAUDE MUNSON, manager of the Rainbow theatre, at McMinnville, Ore., has leased the Star of the same town and now controls the exhibition situation there.

ISSAC GELLER has re-opened the Peninsula theatre, at Kenton, a Portland suburb. The house was closed for a number of months.

"T. T. O." are the initials Paul E. ("No-Bull") Noble is affixing to his signature these days. They stand for "Tough Traffic Officer." Paul is a traffic cop, a special, delegated to enforce the ordinance which prohibits the parking of cars in front of theatres.

ROSS NELSON and C. W. Hinkle, who own the Isis theatre, Independence, Ore., were recent Portland visitors.

OREGON is on the band wagon when it comes to theatre names, "Liberty" and "Victory" predominating when new houses are opened or changes made in names.

VERNON R. MOORE, new publicity man for Paramount in the Oregon territory, is back from a trip to Eastern Oregon.

A BIG meeting of the Northwest Film Board of Trade is soon to be held in Portland. At the present this organization is composed of film distributors but an effort is to be made to bring exhibitors into the fold, thus inaugurating a regime of closer cooperation in the industry. H. G. Rosebaum, Seattle manager for Famous Players-Lasky, is the president of the board.

SAMUEL FLEISCHMANN, of the Rex theatre, was fined $250 in the federal court for bringing nine quarts of whiskey into Portland in a film can.

THE theatre at Hermiston, Ore., is now being run by the Hermiston High School. Miss Viola Crandall is student manager and Dorothy Ross, another student, operates the projection machine. They say the innovation is proving a huge success.

C. F. HILL, the exchange man who quit the Goldwyn Northwest managership to go into the exhibition game, is rapidly expanding his theatre holdings. He has the Globe and Rolfe at Albany, Ore., and has just added the Rialto, at Medford, and the Antlers, at Rosenburg, to his chain of houses.

EXHIBITORS wail that the persistent showing of Hart, Fairbanks and Chaplin pictures in Portland is killing these stars as drawing cards. The week of March 8 showed a sudden shift in the star situation, with five William Farnum pictures shown in the downtown theatres.

The Peoples offered Farnum for a week in his new Fox production, "The Man Hunter"; the Globe had the new edition of "The Spoilers" for the same period; the Sunset showed two popular ones, "Riders of the Purple Sage" and "The Rainbow Trail," the first for four days and the second for three, while the Circle intruded on Tuesday with "Rough and Ready."

Flickers on the Screens of Butte

B. H. COLLIER, who has been making Montana for various picture companies, is again in the state, this time for the Fox exchange out of Seattle.

B. H. ROSENBERG, Metro Picture corporation man, from Salt Lake, spent several days in Butte the past week.

FIRST run World and Metro productions have been booked by Manager Welling for the Liberty, a house which continues to play to increasing business. March 15 the Liberty will have Kitty Gordon in "The Unveiling Hand." The house has also booked first run Triangle-Keystone reissues, starting March 3 with "My Valet."

J. D. SOLOMON, with the World Picture corporation exchange at Salt Lake, spent a few days in Butte the past week and then departed for a tour of northern Montana. He booked Kinograms, said to be the highest priced news service, at the Liberty. Solomon is well known to Montana exhibitors and is a live wire.

THE AMERICAN has just added a sweet voiced soprano to its evening's entertainment, Miss La Cross opening with solos there the past week.

"THE HEART OF THE WORLD" played to record business for five days at the American, opening Feb. 25. "We broke all records despite the knocks we had to endure," said Publicity Manager Raleigh. Chief "knocking," which however proved the usual "boomerang" and resulted in doing more good than harm, was done by a local Bolshevist daily which claimed that a charge of 50 cents to see this big feature was exorbitant. The theatregoer refuted the claim by cheerfully paying that for the pasteboards.

LOUIS BENNISON is now claimed as a Great Falls star. A short while ago he was Butte home boy. Anyhow he is popular throughout Montana where he once lived.

H. B. DOBBS, former manager of the Select exchange in Seattle, was in Montana this week. He is now sales manager for the Film clearing house and is booking the big feature, "Wanted for Murder." He is also signing up for "Romance of the Air."

WILD women and wild men were shown at the Rialto engagement beginning March 1 of Martin Johnson's Cannibals of the South Seas.

THE showing of "Cheating Cheaters" with Clara Kimball Young in the star role again met with hearty response in Butte. The picture was offered by Manager Taylor of the Ansonia and it stood 'em out into the street.

MEL WILSON, representing Famous Players-Lasky, in Montana has just returned to Butte after a visit to eastern Montana. He says that he had to wade through deep snow which recently fell in that section, and that showmen are doing good business.

W. H. RANKIN of Seattle, representing the W. S. Brewster attractions and Great Features Company, was in Butte the past week on business.

"THE WARRIOR." played to big business at the Ansonia, opening March 10. Manager Taylor used a street car, placarded with large lettering, to advertise the big Maciste attraction.

GEORGE BOURKE, popular manager of the Universal exchange, returned the past week from Denver where he attended a meeting of the Western managers. He reports the show shops in the Colorado city and Salt Lake doing great business. Butte is also playing to unusual business. Mr. Bourke is now on the road for a short while looking after the interests of "The Heart of Humanity." The super-feature played to heavy business in Great Falls and Lewiston this week.

HARRY CAREY in "A Fight for Love" was given an advance showing at the American this week.. The opinion of the exhibitors and newspapermen who saw it was that it will rank as one of Carey's best.

A STRING sextette is an added feature of the American orchestra.

A. C. RALEIGH of the American theatre gave a talk to the Butte advertising club the past week on advertising. He is publicity manager for the local Bailey house.

AL FINKLESTEIN, De Luxe representative for the past four years, is back in Montana, looking after bookings for his firm. His headquarters are in Seattle.

WILLIAM BOEDECKER of the Lyric, Bozeman, was in Butte the past week. He reports good show business in the Gallatin city.

MANAGER RUFFNER did great business with a double bill opening March 9, when he showed the second installment of Martin Johnson's cannibals, together with Dorothy Gish in "Boots." Patrons were highly pleased.

IT has been some time since a more pleasing feature was shown at the Rialto than "False Faces." Walthall's acting was characteristic and deeply impressive.

CHARLIE CHAPLIN proved his popularity in Butte when he came here for the second time in his second "million dollar production," "Shoulder Arms." This was shown at the Orpheum and it packed 'em.

CHARLES RAY drew the patrons to the Liberty the past week in a re-showing of "The Millionaire Vagrant." It pleased the usual Ray way.

THE PEOPLE'S HIP, E. W. Keeler, manager, started the serial, "The Red Glove," March 8. This house shows Hippodrome vaudeville.

Christie Places Specials in Many Territories

AMONG the important deals made by C. H. Christie on his tour of the Pacific Coast states just closed, were the signing of the new Christie Specials in two reels for the entire territory of the Pacific Coast states and New York.

In San Francisco, contracts were signed by Fred Dahnkem, representing the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, for the release of Christie two-reel subjects, production of which was undertaken last month, for New York and northern New Jersey. The First National of New York, which has already been handling the Christie one-reel comedies, will distribute the new specials in that territory.

E. H. Emmick, of the Peerless Film Service at San Francisco, contracted for the two-reel specials for his firm, to be handled for all of California, Arizona and Nevada. The Peerless has marketed Christie comedies over a long period of time, practically since the inception of the Christie Company as an independent producing organization, and subjects before the filming of the first release was completed.

While in Seattle, Mr. Christie completed a deal for all of the Northwest territory in the United States, including Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana. In this territory the special comedies will be handled by the Greater Features Company, through Mr. Jack Lannon, general manager. This was Mr. Christie's first visit to Seattle, although the Christie one-reel comedies have been handled in that territory for a long time by Greater Features.

TEN YEARS AHEAD OF ANY OTHER PROJECTOR

WHEN THE NOW-FAMOUS SIMPLEX PROJECTOR WAS FIRST INTRODUCED IN 1912, THIS REMARK WAS GENERAL CONCERNING ITS PRINCIPLE AND ITS QUALITY  SINCE THEN THE SIMPLEX HAS FIGURED IN THOUSANDS OF FIRST-CLASS THEATRE INSTALLATIONS  TODAY—IN 1919, WE STILL HAVE TIME BY THE FORELOCK—KEEPING YEARS AHEAD OF OTHERS—NEVER WAITING TO BE URGED FOR IMPROVEMENTS THAT OUR CONSTANTLY PROGRESSIVE INDUSTRY DEMANDS—BUT ACTUALLY ANTICIPATING BY YEARS WHAT IS REQUIRED ***

FROM THE FIRST PLAN DRAWN TO THE FINISHED PRODUCT THE IDEAL THAT PREDOMINATED ALL ELSE WAS—STABILITY PLUS PRECISION—

THE INSTANT RECOGNITION BY THE INDUSTRY OF THE WORKMANSHIP AND FEATURES INCORPORATED IN THE SIMPLEX PROJECTOR AND THE DETERMINATION TO ALLOW NOTHING TO INTERFERE WITH ITS HIGH QUALITY OF MATERIAL AND ARTISAN SKILL IS ONE OF THE REASONS WHY IT IS LIKE SEARCHING "FOR A NEEDLE IN A HAY-STACK" TO FIND A SIMPLEX REPLACEMENT.

And Gordon, too, Chooses Simplex

To the already lengthy list of million-dollar theatre Simplex installations is added the Gordon Amusement Company's Liberty Theatre of Cambridge, Mass., whose owners, after years of observation and earnest investigation decided in favor of Simplex.

Mr. A. J. We had our chief electrician attach the shutter to SIX SIMPLEX MACHINES in the various houses and in each case we were more than satisified. * * * Kindly rush as early as convenient three [3] more of the three blade and one of the two blade to use on alternating current machine. * * * If the latter gives the result the other has, it will do away with the extra expense of a generator I have been considering purchasing for one of the houses, and incidentally, save me considerable money on the purchase of same. * * *

My dear Mr. Laemmle:

The Heart of Humanity is an achievement. It is big. Big in many ways and for many reasons. Too many reasons to state here. However, to Mr. Holubar and Universal I must express my congratulations and gratitude. Gratitude because as a Frenchman I noted with sincere admiration Mr. Holubar's acceptance and introduction of the strong French technique. This is the first indication of the American director's incorporation and blending of this technique with the ingenuity of American production.

The result speaks for itself.

Mr.John H. Kunsky,
Madison Theatre Building,
Detroit, Mich.

My dear Mr. Kunsky:-

Your inquiries of February 28th and March 10th regarding our initial production "VIRTUOUS MEN," starring E. K. Lincoln, have been received.

My delay in answering your letters has been due to the fact that I did not wish to make any statement in regard to the picture until it was finally assembled and titled so that I could see it in its completed form.

Appreciating that you are a leading exhibitor with extensive theatre interests and knowing that your success has been due solely to sound judgment, - I wish to call your attention to the fact that in the making of this picture our first consideration was that it should contain all the basic elements of box office value.

Now that I have seen the picture on the screen, I can say with real conviction that under the masterful hand of Ralph Ince, this exacting standard has been fulfilled.

Combining a powerful story, a notable cast, elaborate sets, perfect photography and last but not least,- a wonderful title, it leaves nothing to be desired to spell success and make it the biggest box office clean-up of the year.

We know that we have a great picture and we would like to have you see it so that you may decide whether you will book it in your Madison Theatre for one week, two weeks or longer.

Very truly yours,

"BOLSHEVISM ON TRIAL"

OF all the specials ever offered to the nation's exhibitors this is the most timely, as it reaches the theatres at a moment when the fate of the entire world seems to hang upon the progress or the downfall of Bolshevism.

In this great photodrama is shown what might happen to an American community if it should be dominated by a Bolshevistic leader. It is a story which enthralls and fascinates from start to finish.

"BOLSHEVISM ON TRIAL"

is not propaganda—is not a preachment—is not "made to order"—is not inspired or projected by any person or group of persons as a moulder of public opinion. It is a photodrama only, but a photodrama whose theme and central interest happen to be the most interesting topic of the civilized world today. It is entertainment of the sort which grips and thrills, which amuses and terrifies, and which never fails at any moment to entertain.

"BOLSHEVISM ON TRIAL"

is ready for immediate presentation. The production will be kept before the public by a consistent campaign of advertising and publicity.

This feature is adapted from Thomas Dixon's great novel, "Comrades," with continuity and titles by Harry Chandlee. The story was produced by Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, Isaac Wolper, President, and is presented in six reels.

By Robert H McLaughlin

One of the most important motion picture productions of the year.

First released April 20 as an Easter-season Special production, "The Eternal Magdalene" is being booked by the leading first run theatres and behind it every exhibitor is devising and carrying out one of the biggest publicity and advertising campaigns that he has ever made on a motion picture.

A panorama-drama of the hunted woman in ten thousand towns; in your town and my town. A story of love and loyalty; of temptation and redemption; a story of human hearts and hypocrites. A plot of the present moment about men and women and boys and girls with whom you rub elbows every hour of your life.

The S. R. O. Sign Is Out an Hour Earlier Than Usual at the Rialto!

This is what the latest remarkable Rex Beach production, made with the customary Goldwyn care and fineness of detail, is doing in New York, as well in all the larger first-run cities of America. All over America exhibitors are giving it extra playing dates and many are raising their prices.

More Verdicts of Important Critics

New York Telegraph: The S. R. O. sign is out an hour earlier than usual at the Rialto. Impressive and engrossing in plot describes "The Brand." Crowds stand in the rain waiting to get in.

New York Globe: A strenuous melodrama is "The Brand" told against a majestic Yukon background of snow and pines.

New York Times: "The Brand" at the Rialto has inherent force and beauty. It is one of Rex Beach's powerful stories of Alaska.

New York Post: Rex Beach's "The Brand" is a big, entertaining picture of the Alaskan country.

New York Tribune: The wonderful scenes in "The Brand" make you hold your breath and be thankful for motion pictures which have made such things possible.

New York Mail: A marvelous picture of Alaska is "The Brand," the week's headliner at the Rialto.

Chicago American: Another blinding glimpse of Rex Beach's Alaska, where man's blood runs hot and red. A great story of a strong man and a weak woman.

Chicago Post: It takes a picture like "The Brand" to show us how vividly the screen can present a story. Rex Beach always appeals to the heart and the eye.

LOUIS BENNISON

"is running the leader a close race... His future is full of promise."

This is the Philadelphia North American's comment on the star of Betzwood's thrilling, dramatic "Speedy Meade." Of this picture it says: "A great advance over his other pictures."

"Here is the real Western picture; every reel crowded with action and Bennison to offer a great deal more than good looks," says the Philadelphia Press.

"Speedy Meade" is Louis Bennison's strongest, fastest, best picture," says the Philadelphia Inquirer. ' This star is a leader, right from the beginning."

"You'll see what a great actor Louis Bennison is the momen you see 'Speedy Meade'," says the Philadelphia Record. "He shows you the meaning of personality."

"Quite at his best—a breezy, ingratiating hero," says the Philadelphia Bulletin.

"Louis Bennison's feats in 'Speedy Meade' will give you all the thrills you will want or ought to have in a picture," says the Philadelphia Ledger.

The most conclusive and convincing proof of the popularity of "Smiling Bill" Parsons in Capitol Comedies is found in the presence of Capitol Comedies in more than 3,000 motion picture theatres.

By the greatest stretch of your imagination you will be unable to name more than six screen comedians appearing in one or two-reel comedies. Of this number three, at the outside, are able to offer twenty-six comedies a year. The others produce and offer less.

Therefore in 14,000 theatres, many of them with daily or thrice-a-week changes, three comedians are the reigning favorites of the American public, making a sustained number of appearances. Goldwyn's distribution and "Smiling Bill" Parsons' clean, laughable comedies have given him the actual leadership, based on the number of accounts served.

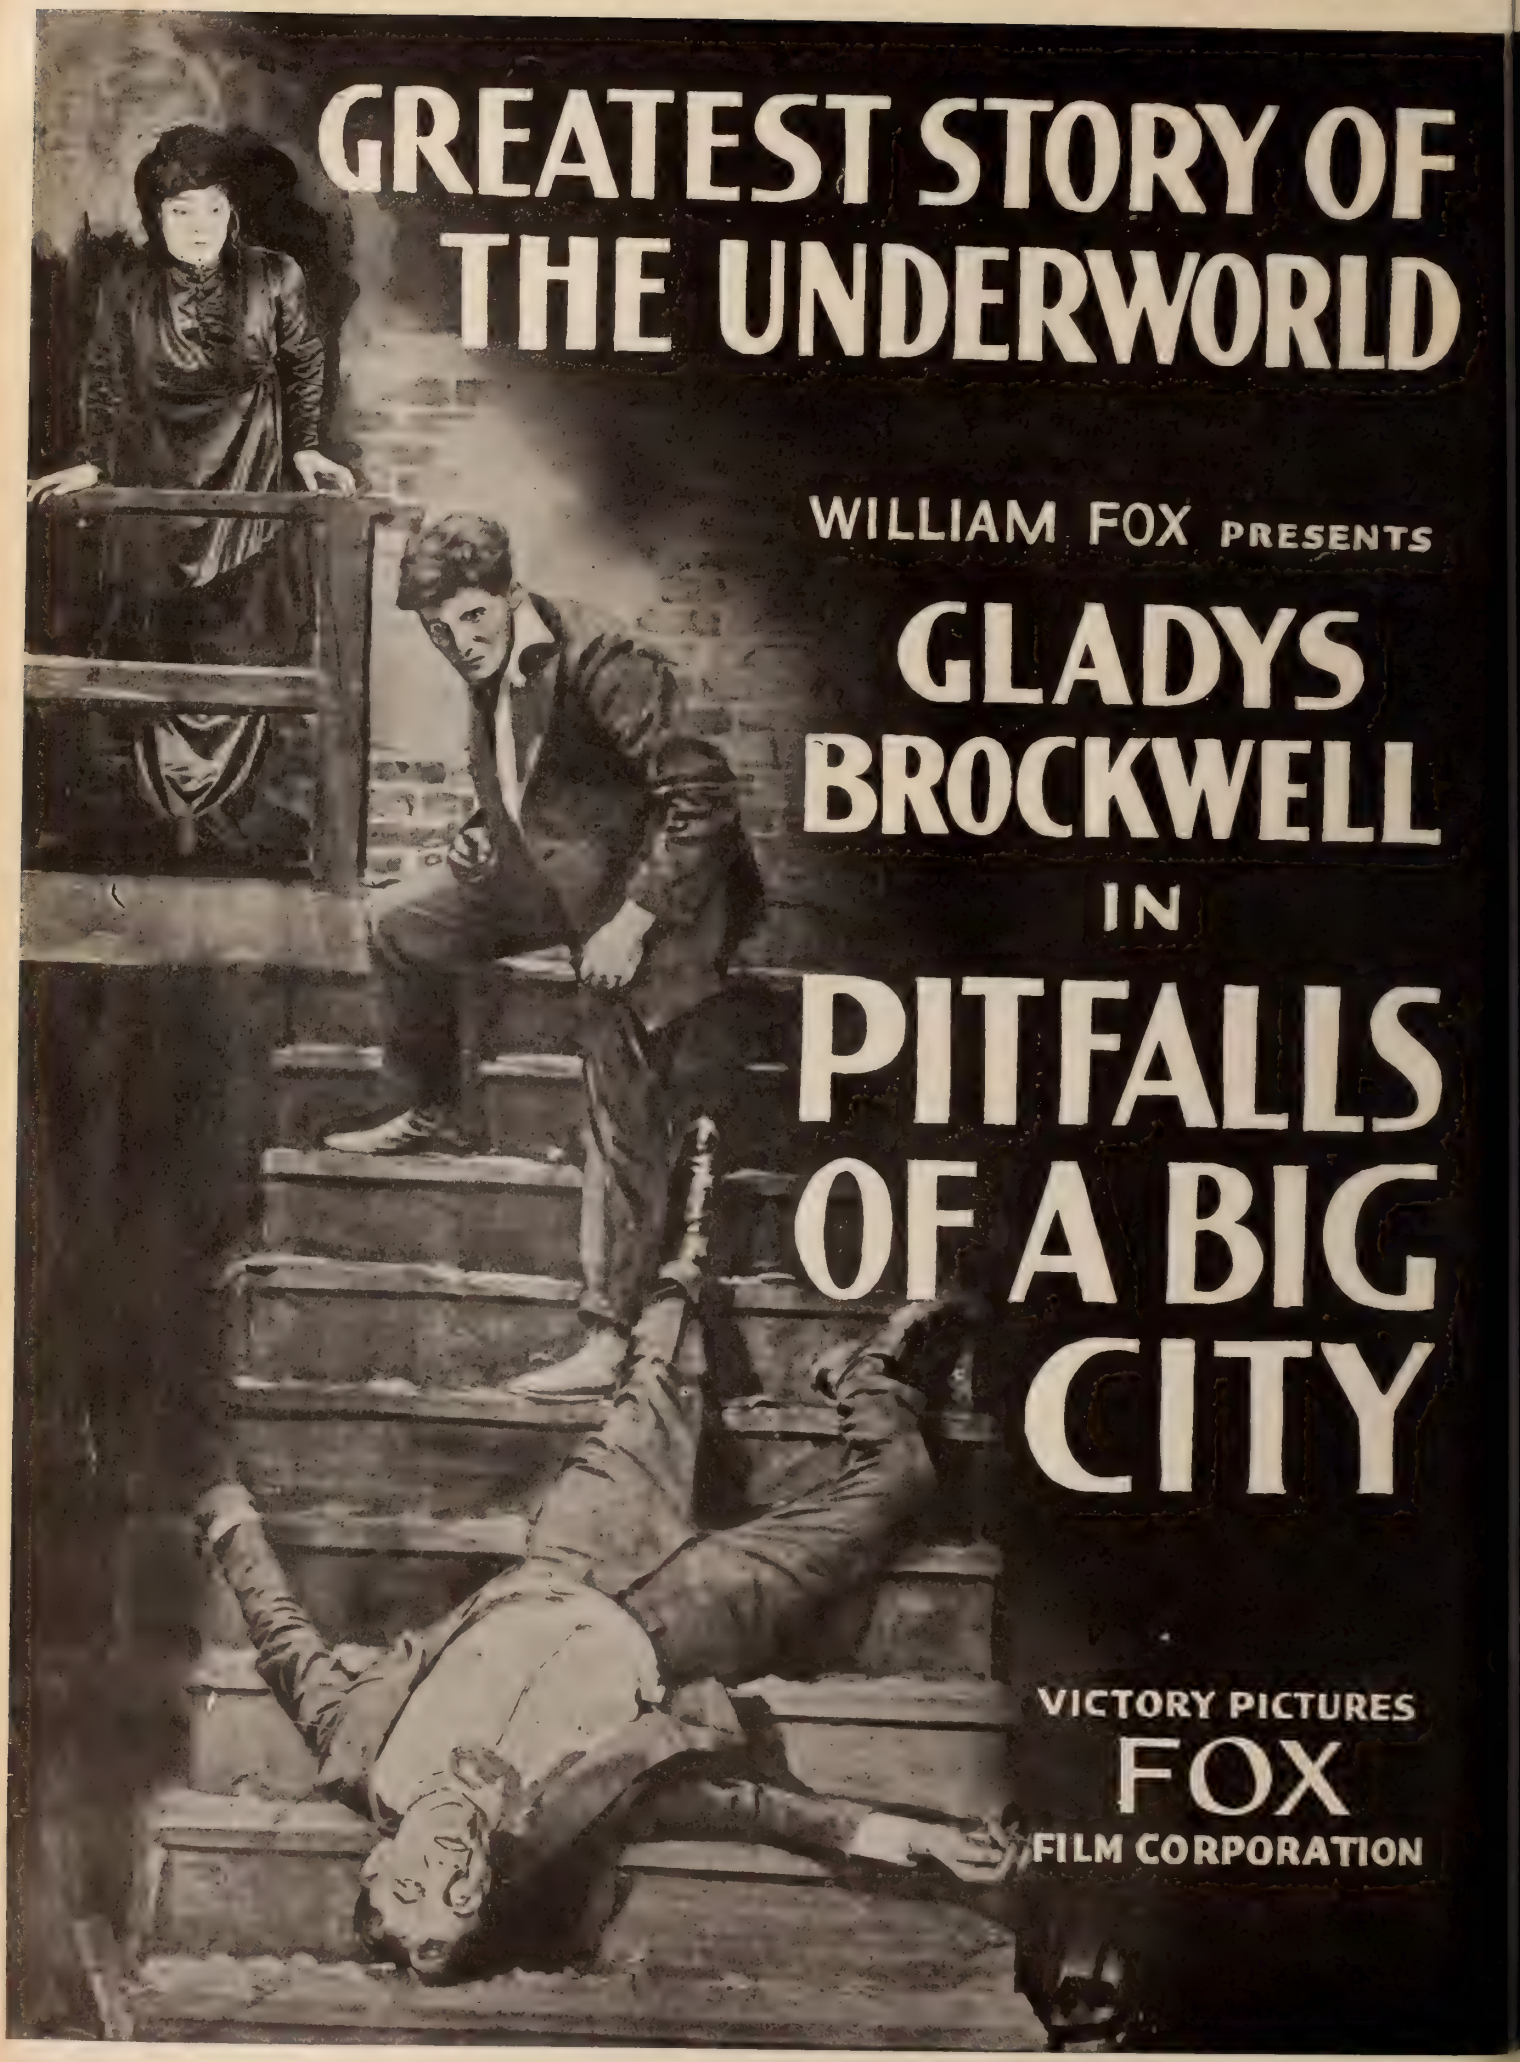
ZANE GREY'S powerful story The BORDER LEGION

Starring Blanche Bates and Hobart Bosworth
Directed by T. Hayes Hunter

A series of bandit battles that make you fairly hold your breath.

A pursuit and running fight on horseback with as daring riding as has ever been pictured on the screen.

A love story of a woman who saved the life of a wounded outlaw—her own and her lover's worst foe.



The story of a coward who became a man. A drama of muscle and might in picturesque California in the gold-mad days of '49.

These are elements that have established the instant success in first-run and subsequent-run theatres of "The Border Legion."

Entertain your audiences with mirth. Steer them away from world cares and war worries. Rock them on the cradle of merriment.

A WOMAN HATER'S ROMANCE

Dalion didn't care for girls,
Until a fair one shook her curls
Right in his face. Then this chap he Smiled knowingly.

He stowed away aboard a ship;
His transportation he had to skip;
For pockets had been picked, you see,
Quite ruthlessly.

Eight bells, and all is well!
Of this tale there's more to tell;
For this chap he just raised the dickens,
Once he developed a taste for chickens!

Firing furnaces, mopping a deck;
Then, from a girl to win respect,
He beats a bully who is yellow.
See Taylor Holmes in "A Regular Fellow."

Suggestions for the Use of Press Cuts

Triangle Special Presentation

Taylor Holmes in "A Regular Fellow"

Herewith we illustrate two single and one double-column press cuts available at your local Triangle exchange on this special production. Thumb-nail and star cuts also are available. These can be used in numerous ways by the progressive exhibitor to sell "A Regular Fellow" to his patrons.

TAYLOR HOLMES IN
"A REGULAR FELLOW"

Poor chap. Men disliked him and he hadn't many friends. You see he despised women.

Not that he was born to hate the fair sex. All his life he had been pursued by a girl whom relatives had selected as a mate for him.

But gallantry overstepped the bounds of propriety when he finally fell for "the beautiful one."

And he found himself behind the bars of romance.

Then beauty reformed him and he became a regular guy.

3 days of wit and humor with this jovial star

It starts tomorrow

YOUR THEATRE

On this sheet two of the cuts have been arranged with copy, suggesting newspaper ads, ready for the press. The two-column cut is featured in an ad 5 inches across two columns, while a single-column cut has also been arranged with copy, as a two-column ad, 2½ inches.

We suggest the use of these cuts with this copy as ads that will pull results. But the wide-awake exhibitor who views this production before his performances can utilize all of the cuts in numerous different ways, perhaps adjusting copy from an angle that will make an original appeal in accordance with his own particular territory.

Remember that, while the copy or type "Taylor Holmes in a Regular Fellow" is a part of the cuts, this can be eliminated by your pressman and the cuts used as illustrations without type, if you so desire.

For instance, the single-column cut of Mr. Holmes in the life preserver might be used for decorative purposes where the line cut of type, announcing his name and the title of the picture, could be better placed elsewhere. Your pressman can remove this line of type.

This illustration, by the way, would be excellent for a throwaway or a circular. Its use is suggested as an illustration for a circular for your mailing list, in connection with the four verses of the little poem exploiting this show. You will find this copy used in connection with this series of ads or on the press sheet of "A Regular Fellow."

Use the press sheet on "A Regular Fellow." It contains suggestions for lobby displays, copy for program readers, long and short synopses, and many little stories for advance press publicity.

EDITORIAL

January 12, 1919

SAMUEL L. ROTHAPFEL'S resignation as Managing Director of the Rialto and Rivoli Theatres came as a surprise, ... Of course Mr. Rothapfel is not the only artistic exhibitor in the world, but he has certainly been a pioneer in placing exhibitions on a higher and ever higher plane. New York has him, more than any other man, to thank for the presentation of motion pictures in a way attractive to persons of taste and intelligence.

Mr. Rothapfel is creative. He not only selects the best photoplays available, and the most important topical and educational films, but instead of just showing what pictures he has, he builds programs out of his material, each of which is as harmonious a whole as he can make it. He was one of the first, if not the first to realize the power of music and setting to enrich a motion picture entertainment, and employing his own unusual abilities, and those of the most talented artists he could engage, he has made his programs richly effective. And in building them he has not been a slave to the idea that a photoplay must always be the cornerstone. He has had a venturesome initiative to build his programs around any film that seemed to him to represent a distinctive accomplishment of the motion picture camera.

The announcement of Mr. Rothapfel's departure from the Rivoli and Rialto Theatres caused a keen sense of regret until—and here is the important, encouraging fact that came with second thought—it was realized first that Mr. Rothapfel had established his theatres so firmly that they could go on without him, and second that he would enter some new field of motion pictures where he would probably be able to release energy and ability that cannot find expression in the management of theatres. This means that the public will gain by his change of work. It will still have the results of Mr. Rothapfel's work in a new field.

WILLIAM RUSSELL IN "BRASS BUTTONS"

By STEPHEN FOX Directed by HENRY KING

P.S. Harrison, in Motion Picture News, March 1st issue, says of the last William Russell release:

"With 'Where the West Begins' Russell adds another good picture to the long list of his successes. The plot is full of action and it has been handled well. It holds the interest undiminished from start to finish."

LADIES will gasp at the way Russell woos and wins the society girl he thought a ladies' maid.

MEN will thoroughly enjoy the scenes in which Russell, as a New York cop, bluffs the gunmen of Sawtooth, Arizona, who had boasted that no sheriff could tame them.

EXHIBITORS will proclaim this picture one of the peppiest they ever screened and make arrangements to repeat it.

"ROSES AND THORNS"

With the brilliant Belasco star, LENORE ULRICH

And each carries a full line of lithographs, photos and other material, and press and display matter designed for first-class houses.

The SECURITY SERIES is being offered as a straight commercial proposition on business lines to the exchange that needs a sure output at a live-and-let-live price. It is offered by a man who is selling these productions in his own New York exchange—by a picture-wise exchange man, Nathan Hirsh.

It's a great life—if you don't weaken

The war is over. We and our allies have won the victory the good of the world demanded. Democracy, honor and justice were proved triumphant.

Some people seem to think we're all through.

We're not. It was, for us, essentially a war of preparation. Our dollars counted heavily and saved thousands of lives. The discovery that America would fight, fight with everything she possessed in men, materials and money, aided greatly in the collapse of Germany

It took a great many dollars, but that is infinitely better than a great many lives.

Some of the war bills have yet to be paid, and we have not finished our job until the account is settled.

Don't weaken now.

The Star and The Story

A PROMINENT magazine editor sends us, in confidence, a heated criticism of present production policies.

There are points in his statement open to argument, and, like many other writers, he is radically intolerant of present picture conditions because he knows so little of the causes of them.

If he knew these causes, and knew also that, excusable or not, they nevertheless exist and that the stage for instance went through a similar development, he would be more patient with the present and much more optimistic of the future motion picture.

At the same time his contention, though well-known undoubtedly to many picture people, is worthy of serious thought.

* * * * * *

First—The Star System

HE attacks the star system—that is to say, the policy of making the star the fundamental if not the only production value and the resultant star contracts which are largely the basis of picture production today.

He relates that he submitted to a leading producer what was freely agreed to be a story of exceptional originality and strength. It was adapted in every way to picturization, "except," said the scenario editor in chief, "it doesn't fit any of our stars and we cannot use it at all."

"If you are making pictures on this basis," charges the editor, "then Heaven help the development of your art, and more practically, Heaven help your hold upon the public.

"If it is your sole ambition to photograph pretty faces and exploit pleasing personalities—then all well and good. You are going about it in the right way.

"But," he concluded, "I had a totally different conception of the motion picture, its field today and its future."

In the present star contract system the editor finds an answer for: "the many inexcusably weak or hopelessly mediocre pictures; the dreadful monotony in themes; the fact that the best writers of the day do not freshly create for pictures; the wild scramble and tremendous prices paid for vehicles which happen to fit the stars."

* * * * * *

Let's Think it Over

ALL of which is partly true, and not wholly fair—but decidedly a basic and serious matter for consideration.

The rise of the star is a very natural one.

In the beginning the motion picture gave to its personalities a quick and widespread circulation unprecedented and unapproached in the entertainment world.

Their continued appearance upon the screen would, within a limited period, make them known to millions of the public. They stood out, also, by contrast with the stories which in the earlier days were of little consequence.

This possibility of sudden and tremendous popularity with the public exists today—in even greater degree; though now the story and other production values have come to the front and we see stars made and unmade by these other values.

Again, in the earlier days and until recently the exhibitor did little advertising; he could not, as many now do, exploit a strong non-star picture and break his house records. He coveted the star picture because all he had to do was to feature the star's name before his theatre or elsewhere and the public knew and came.

* * * * * *

There's a Demand—And a Supply

SO, because the market demanded star pictures, it was perfectly natural for the producer to stock up with stars; and so it is today, for the market still asks for stars, or we had best say, star values along with other values.

And in order to have and hold stars it is perfectly natural that the star contract system should come in being—and should still exist.

It was the more natural a few years ago—when the stars first loomed large in power and salary—because then the power of the story was not appreciated as today, and there were few scenario editors in chief of ability and discrimination. There were few producers, too, experienced enough in the making of photo dramas to create successfully and independently of the star's name and popularity.

* * * * * *

Times are Changing

TODAY the situation has changed. The story has gradually grown important in the eyes of the producer till now the scramble for vehicles is about as intense as the effort to contract for stars.

This does not mean that the star value has lessened. It simply means that the story value has increased, has come into its own; and not merely the story in itself, but very importantly its development for and transmission to the screen—which is where supervision and direction, two mighty big values, too, come in.

Exhibitors know the value of the story today; so do producers and distributors—and also the stars themselves. No star is above story value. That has been proven. But since we know that stories make and unmake stars it would seem that the story, plus its true adaptation, is above the star value.

Editorially Speaking:

Times Are Changing

If this is true, will the story tolerate the star contract system?

Are stories to be created for stars and restricted to just that extent? And is it wise in any entertainment field to restrict creative effort? Or is it best to leave creative effort wide open—and therefore ever fresh, original, experimentive, and so appealing broadly and successfully to all kinds of human minds and emotions.

It would clearly seem that the story must precede all other values—that it must be the genesis of the photo drama, and the star, the cast, the adaptation, all of these selective matters based upon the story.

The stage went through the same star and story development.

* * * * * *

Going Through the Cycle

THIRTY years ago saw the stage star contract system at its height. And then slowly and inevitably the situation changed. Producers grew up who built their business upon plays, not stars, and because of their success and increasing fame the plays came to them.

The selection of the play was the important thing; and then, as today, the successful producer found the personalities to fit the play. And so the star became second and the play was established. The star appeared largely, if not wholly, because of the play's acceptance and the star's adaptability to it.

A complete revisal of the earlier, or star contract stage.

Will the picture go through the same development?

Undoubtedly, not in a hurry on all sides, but slowly as with the economic corrections of the industry.

Today the situation is divided. Star value and story value are tugging for supremacy. The present is a transition period.

But the story will gain in power.

This is not only inevitable, but as it should be. It will be best for the motion picture art, best for the motion picture's permanent and growing hold upon the public and therefore best for the motion picture stars themselves.

Best, in other words, not only artistically but economically, for the entire picture industry.

* * * * *

Showing the Trend

W. W. HODKINSON announces Zane Grey pictures. Less than a year ago a star would have been exploited, not an author. The change is significant.

A previous announcement from the same corporation features the four values in pictures—author, producer, director, star. This, too, is an innovation, and also significant of the new order in production.

And the news and advertising pages of the trade press carry right along abundant evidence from all quarters of the fact that stars big or little, and producers big or little, are basing the strength of the picture upon the strength of the story.

The foreign market is an important factor here. Great Britain, for instance, places the story high and has for some time. The star counts as here, but the value of the story was sooner recognized, in all probability because of the system there of advance trade showings. The star without a story stands little chance of booking.

And now may we point out that the next important step with story value pictures is the supplying to the exhibitor of that advertising service to the public which the story must have, that emotional appeal advertising to which the story lends itself so well.

Lessons from the Field

A NEW booking circuit is reported to us from Northern California. Over thirty exhibitors in this section are said to have signed as members of the "United Theatres Association." The theatres, it is claimed, represent an investment exceeding two and a half millions.

By a coincidence there comes at the same time a report on the healthy status and growth of the Philadelphia Association, now embracing about eighty-five theatres and soon to be extended to one hundred and fifty.

The objects of these circuits are: Cooperative booking; the elimination of exchange evils; the up-building of a community interest among exhibitors to end cut throat competition, raise prices, and stamp out the illegitimate theatre.

"Here," says one letter, "is an answer to your slogan of fewer pictures, better pictures and longer runs. We furnish longer runs so that fewer and therefore better pictures can be made."

There are several lessons in these booking circuit enterprises.

One is to the exchange which doesn't cooperate with the exhibitor when such cooperation costs only the exercise of good business sense and an effort to please.

There's a lesson to the whole distribution system, insofar as these circuits are directly the outgrowth of their bad economics.

And finally there's a lesson to be constantly borne in mind by the members themselves of these circuits that they use their new found power not blindly and selfishly but with a live and let live concern for the other branches of the industry to which they belong.

Sailing Smoothly in New York

THE bills providing for local option in the matter of Sunday motion picture shows in New York have been favorably reported out of the Senate committee.

Similar good fortune is expected with the Assembly committee.

The prospects are bright. Here's hoping that when the bills reach the legislative floor they will not be the victims of bargaining due to the fact that liberal interests are also seeking Sunday baseball and legalized boxing at this session.

Which of the three "evils" would the reformers choose?

Dealing in Personalities

"He Has Acquired Fred Warren"

WE used to laugh every time someone said "So-and-So will soon have important announcements to make."

The Hodkinson organization said it a few weeks ago.

But we are not laughing.

For right after the hint came the news that the Raver-Thomas-Baird-Irving product would be handled by Hodkinson. Then the signing up of the Zane Grey productions. And the word that two more big lines of product are to be announced soon.

On top of it all the acquisition of Fred Warren:

Is anything further needed to warn you to take a good look at this photo of W. W. Hodkinson now—because he is going to get a considerable share of every film man's thoughts during the coming year.

Look him over now—and watch his speed.

HARRY CHARNAS, of the Standard Film Service, Cleveland, Detroit and Cincinnati, is in town. Expects to be here a week or so.

Saw JOE BRANDT at the Astor on Wednesday. Guess the Universal executives will now be trouping in from Los Angeles one by one. BOB COCHRANE won't be so lonesome.

BENNY SCHULBERG dropped into the Astor grill the other day and soon was holding court, surrounded by half the film men in the room. Benny always deserved all the popularity he got—and these days it's coming with a rush.

DWIGHT S. PERRIN, formerly of Goldwyn, is back in our midst after a sojourn on Florida's sands. Was nabbed for jury duty as soon as he got back. Will announce new connections as soon as "His Honor" says "Finis."

JAKE WILK dropped into the office Wednesday to say "Hello" after a trip through the midwest. Dropped some pertinent observations on pictures and picture conditions. We know that Jake is a shrewd film man because his ideas chime with our own.

Incidentally, Jake placed a few boosts for CHARLES BRANHAM, until recently manager of Detroit's Majestic. Says he's one of the greatest showmen in the country.

And we agree with Jake, 'cause Bre'er Branham is a member of MOTION PICTURE NEWS Advisory Board and a frequent contributor to the Service Bureau.

S. HOPKINS HADLEY. We've just printed those words to see how they look. Our private sleuth informs us that a person with that monicker resides out in exclusive Kew Gardens, Long Island. And our sleuth suspects that it is the same old-timer we know in the film game as "Hopp" Hadley.

REG WARDE is looking over the picture business on the Pacific slope.—[Adv.]

FRANK CARROLL is wandering around the country in parts unknown.

PAUL BRUNET dined the Pathe Home Office staff last week at the Beaux Arts, returning the celebrations they have held on his anniversary as vice-president and general manager. Those present were: Paul Brunet, Louis Landry, Fred C. Quimby, Tom North, P. A. Parsons, Jack Kyle, Randolph Lewis, W. E. Raynor, Harry Lewis, Lewis Innerarity, M. Ramirez Torres, Gilson Willets, Emanuel Cohen, F. R. Clarke, John Humm, L. S. Diamond, Frank V. Bruner, H. E. Genet, George B. Seitz, C. W. Allers, A. Werkmeister, Bertram Millhauser, G. L. Chanier, L. E. Franconi, C. A. Brady, Edgar O. Brooks, W. C. Smith, B. P. Egan and C. J. Fischer.

You ought to hear JOE PLUNKITT enthuse over the new Mark house soon to open in Brooklyn. Some house—take it from Joe.

And here's a bit of news. The Strand performances, staged by Bre'er Plunkitt, will be transferred intact—soloists, 'neverything—to the Brooklyn house.

AL LICHTMAN is out of town for five days.

BERNIE FINEMAN, manager of the Accessory Sales Promotion Department of Famous Players-Lasky, is swinging around the exchange circuit.

Other F. P.-Lasky news tells of the fact that HARRY DAY has joined the ranks of the benedicts, the bride being Miss Marquita Harriss, of Memphis, Tenn.

And of a dinner given last week by the office staff to the three who recently stepped to the altar rail—PETE SMITH, HARRY I. DAY and LOUIS E. LOEB.

The MOTION PICTURE BUSINESS MEN'S CLUB is coming along.

A meeting held at Sherry's last week found the following committee members present: C. F. ZITTEL, ADOLPH ZUKOR, JULES E. BRULATOUR, J. STUART BLACKTON, P. L. WATERS, ARTHUR FRIEND and PAUL BRUNET.

A sub-committee is now looking for suitable quarters. Present plans call for a suite of six or seven rooms in one of the big hotels.

A total of $20,470 was collected at the Brady dinner. Since then thousand dollar contributions have come from P. L. WATERS, WILLIAM FOX and PAUL BRUNET.

Membership is to be limited to one hundred.

Thomas D. Goldberg, W. D. Pacy and Milton Caplan, Baltimore exhibitors, are in New York this week arranging for the coming ball of the Maryland Exhibitors at the Lyric theatre, April 25th. Several prominent stars in New York have already promised to attend.

Have you heard about "The Big Five?" Not yet? Wait!

"Starting His Second Pathe Year"

PAUL BRUNET has completed his first year as vice-president and general manager of the Pathe organization.

And starts the second year with Pathe aiming to do bigger things than ever.

"Common Clay" started it.

By breaking records for long runs in theatre after theatre.

And now Pathe is going after the "specials" with a vengeance. With a top-notch organization headed by Mr. Brunet and containing such experts in their lines as Fred Quimby, P. A. Parsons, Tom North and Edgar Brooks.

"The Unknown Love" is the next of the "big ones."

Watch that organization wind up and go to it.

Vetoes Arizona Ripper Bill

PHOENIX, ARIZ. (Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS).—At the eleventh hour Governor Campbell vetoed the Waters Bill placing almost confiscatory regulations on film companies doing business in Arizona. The veto followed on the failure of the exhibitor sponsors of the bill to rally to its support before the Chief Executive. Previously the theatre owners had worked hard in both houses securing the passage of the legislation.

As exclusively told in last week's issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, the bill was a wonder as a collection of stringent regulations that would have effectively halted the industry in Arizona. Film exchanges in Los Angeles had taken the decided stand that they would not rent films to any of the 108 theatres in Arizona had the bill received the Governor's approval.

The Waters Bill consisted of twenty-three sections, every one of which levied red tape upon the motion picture interests in order that it conduct these in Arizona, the most undesirable sections providing the following requirements:

If film company does business in the state, it will be necessary for the corporation or partnership to register there at an annual fee of fifty dollars, which registration gives the corporation commissioner rights to require audit of the books and accounts of the film company made at the company's home office and at the expense of the company.

Every film company doing business in the state must have a registered and resident representative.

Any film company registered in the state can be sued in any county court in the state, and failure to pay any judgment within ninety days is sufficient for forfeiture of registration license.

Film companies requiring an advance payment or deposit, required to deposit with the treasurer of state, amount equivalent to deposits made by the several exhibitors of Arizona. Minimum amount at any time not to be less than $5,000. There is no provision for interest on this deposit, or refund at any time.

Every film company to be required to place on file with the corporation commissioner duplicates of every contract made for the rental of pictures to anyone in Arizona.

Production of any film or portion of film would require that the company register as a corporation in Arizona, pay annual tax and permit audit of books and accounts.

Annual statement must be made June 1st of every year to corporation commissioner by all film companies doing business in the state.

Film company must have capital stock fully paid.

Violation of this act subject to $5,000 maximum fine and license revoked.

When members of the Los Angeles Film Exchange Board of Trade learned of the Waters bill, and that it was before Governor Campbell for his signature, two special meetings were called. At the first, letters and telegrams were drafted and sent to all exhibitors of the 108 theatre owners and managers of Arizona urging that they telegraph or write Governor Campbell asking that the bill be vetoed. By wire arrangement were made for representatives of the Board of Trade to call on the Governor and present their objections to the Waters Bill. Their request was granted by the Governor, and a committee composed of Dave Bershon, Manager Universal Exchange; Charles Marley, Manager Triangle Exchange, and Michael Narlian, general counsel of the Board of Trade, were selected as a committee to see Governor Campbell. When the committee was received on Wednesday morning, March 19th, the Governor requested that they file brief containing their objections which was done later in the day.

Frederick L. Collins Sails for Europe

Frederick L. Collins, president of McClure Productions, Inc., and publisher of McClure's Magazine, sailed last Saturday on the "Adriatic" for Europe. He expects to visit England, France, Belgium, Holland and Italy and will be gone several months.

In addition to important business for his magazine, Mr. Collins will devote a large part of his time to consummating extensive motion picture projects, which are said to be of international importance. Mr. Collins has been busy upon plans for these enterprises for several months.

Mr. Collins has been preceded to Europe by a special representative of McClure Productions, Inc., who will transact the preliminary details for all the McClure motion picture activities abroad.

New Theatres Projected in Michigan

Many new theatres are being projected in Detroit and in Michigan. The Jefferson Theatre Co., of which George Harrison is general manager, plans a house to seat 2,000 on East Jefferson Avenue, one block from the present location. George Nichols, who operates the Superba and Isis theatres in Grand Rapids, is to build a 2,000 seat house at the rear of the Superba. There are quite a number of smaller houses that are being talked about and John H. Kunsky, it is said, will have a new theatre seating 3,000 in downtown Detroit

New Club Lays Plans

C. F. Zittel, Adolph Zukor, J. E. Brulatour, J. Stuart Blackton, Percy L. Waters, Arthur S. Friend and Paul Brunet met at Sherry's last week and decided on plans for the recently formed Motion Picture Business Men's Club.

Mr. Zittel appointed a sub-committee composed of himself and Messrs. Zukor, Brulatour, Blackton and Waters to secure quarters. In the interim a suite of six or rooms in one of the large hotels will be used. The membership will be limited to 100 resident members.

Committee members stated that the club has no connection or affiliation with any other club and should not be confused with the Motion Picture Club of America, recently organized, as noted, by Lee Ochs and others.

Contributions of $1,000 each were announced by Percy L. Waters, William Fox and Paul Brunet.

Reopens Theatre in Chelan, Wash.

R. C. Kelsey, of Omak, Wash., is reopening the Ruby theatre at Chelan, Wash. Chelan is situated on Lake Chelan, in the Wenatchee Valley, and is a noted summer resort.

Mr. Kelsey is new in the picture game, but as he is a shrewd business man he will assuredly have a great success. He will play the newest and best pictures.

Plans are being drawn for a first-class modern theatre, 500 capacity, for Oroville, Wash.

Chester Goes to Ottawa, Canada

C. L. Chester, producer of Outing Chester Pictures, left Friday for Ottawa to confer with a number of prominent motion picture men regarding the extensive use of Outing Chester Pictures throughout Canada. Since Outing Chesters deal entirely with nature studies whose province is international there is no restriction on their scope, and Mr. Chester feels that the Canadian field is so important that it warrants a special trip.

The success of Outing Chester Pictures in Western Canada is evidenced by a recent letter received from the First National Exhibitors Exchange in Vancouver in which their vice-president, Sam J. Coffland, writes that "we are very much pleased with the class of productions that you are turning out," and further states as his opinion that Outing Chesters should prove an excellent part of any program.

Christie in the East to Visit Exchanges

All exchanges releasing Christie Comedies in the east are to shortly receive a call from Charles H. Christie, who is leaving Los Angeles March 25th for a trip that will take him to all exchange cities.

Mr. Christie is particularly anxious to invade the eastern Canadian field, as he has been successful in doing in western Canada, and after a trip east which will take him through Denver, Minneapolis, Chicago, Cleveland, Philadelphia, New York and Boston, he will spend some time at Toronto. After completing his work in the east Mr. Christie will return to the coast by the way of Washington, Atlanta, New Orleans and Dallas. He anticipates the trip will require from four to six weeks.

Ball Game! April 13

The Lambs, Friars, Green Room Club, Motion Picture Club, National Vaudeville Club, Burlesque Club, Authors and Composers of America, Stage Hands Union, and every other prominent organization, will be on hand at the Polo Grounds on April 13 to root for their favorites at the baseball game between the Actors and Songwriters, which will be one of the many features of the Field Day which is being held on that date for the benefit of The Actors' Fund of America, of which Daniel Frohman is president.

Last Minute Coast News

William Desmond, Hampton star, and Mary McIvor were married in Pasadena on March 29th.

Oscar Price has arrived in Los Angeles and is in daily conference with William G. McAdoo and the stars of the United Artists Association. It has been decided that a Fairbanks subject will be the first release.

Albert E. Smith is visiting the Vitagraph coast studio.

Richard A. Rowland is here for conference with Maxwell Karger and an advance view of "The Red Lantern."

Sets Premiere of Sawyer-Lubin Film

The premiere of "Virtuous Men," the inaugural Ralph Ince film attraction, will take place at the Fulton theatre, New York, on Sunday evening, April 6. It stars E. K. Lincoln and was produced under the personal direction of Ralph Ince. It is said to be the biggest melodrama of the screen ever offered the photoplay public.

The presentation of "Virtuous Men" at the Fulton theatre will be surrounded with many distinctive features. A special musical score has been written in which are introduced several innovations. The musical setting is perfectly synchronized with the action, due to the composer spending several days with Ralph Ince during the making of various scenes. An extraordinary lobby display has been prepared under the direction of two experts in matters of this kind. Original paintings by Clarence Underwood, R. G. Morgan, Gustav Michelson and other well-known illustrators will have a prominent place in this display. Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, sponsors for "Virtuous Men," have also taken advantage of the extensive lobby of the Fulton theatre to display many other original pictorial effects and illustrations which have been prepared to accompany the picture.

Two Managers Resign in Ottawa

Two resignations of moving picture theatre managers were recorded in Ottawa, Ontario, during the week of March 17. On that date Manager J. T. Moxley, of Allen's Regent theatre, announced that he had acquired the lease of the Russell theatre, a legitimate house, which he proposed to convert into a moving picture theatre after improvements had been made. His association with the Allen Theatrical Enterprises was due to expire on March 26. The Regent at Ottawa is one of the best paying theatres controlled by the Allen interests.

Manager J. Lavois, of the National theatre, Ottawa, also announced that he was terminating his connection with the National on Saturday, March 22. He stated that he expected to secure the management of an important theatre in Montreal.

War Thriller to Boost Victory Liberty Loan

A war feature entitled "The Price of Peace," compiled from the official film archives of the government, photographed in the thick of battle, is shortly to be released in behalf of the Victory Liberty Loan.

The picture has been assembled and titled under the direction of Frank R. Wilson, director of the bureau of publicity of the Treasury Department, by Betty Shannon and Terry Ramsaye, with Joseph La Rose of the Rialto-Rivoli at the cutting table.

The material for the picture was selected from the film files of the War College, by permission of Colonel Weeks, and from the films of the Navy Department, the Marine Corps and other official sources.

Fred Warren Joins Hodkinson

THE big news surprise of the week was the announcement on Wednesday that Fred B. Warren had been elected a vice-president of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, retiring as vice-president and member of the Board of Directors of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation.

The change takes effect on April 1. In confirming the news Mr. Warren declared: "I have the friendliest and best of feeling for the Goldwyn organization. This is further evidenced by the fact that a few hours before my resignation I purchased additional Goldwyn stock on which I had an option."

Speaking on the acquisition of the new vice-president, W. W. Hodkinson declared:

"I think Mr. Warren shares my own opinions as to the necessity for the integrity of product and the improvement of relations existing between the exhibitor and distributor of motion pictures. I have watched his development in the industry and have felt that his previous experience as an editor and publisher of important newspapers gave him a sound base for straight thinking. After all, both the making and the selling of motion pictures is a publishing function, and the most successful publisher of pictures will be the one who rejects unfit materials in his search for the selective, finer materials upon which he can place his imprint.

"During the past year the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation has proceeded with great deliberation to build an internal organization capable of doing the big things we have in prospect. We have not wished to expand too quickly, for that has been one of the big faults of the industry both in its business and production sides. I am now gathering about me both the men and the product that will make our company's name stand for a definite quality in production and service. And by service I mean our business relations with the exhibitor as well as the aids rendered the exhibitor in conjunction with the pictures he receives from us. I shall next week make a comprehensive announcement of the product that I have assembled for our new season together with some plans for a releasing innovation which I am certain will win exhibitor support immediately."

"My affiliation with Mr. Hodkinson is founded upon business logic," is Mr. Warren's explanation of his unheralded change. "My first reason is founded on the memory that six years ago when W. W. Hodkinson founded the Paramount organization and laid down the fine pattern and fabric on which it was built, the producer-distributor and the exhibitor were not engaged in a blood feud. They were not at each other's throats. They did not feel that there was any necessity for their being enemies. A thousand Strands and Rialtos and their equivalents in all of the large cities of the country are operating to-day because of the initial Hodkinson vision that pioneered in good pictures at decent prices, instead of contributing to the abundance of cheap melodramas that formed the prevailing motion picture diet of that period. The continuation of such product meant the continuation of converted store shows and five-cent houses."

"Mr. Hodkinson has always had a lesson to teach. He has been a pioneer and I like both pioneers and men who use their brains. He has had the patience to re-develop slowly. I believe in the things he is going to do and I want to help do them. I have the friendliest and best of feeling for the Goldwyn organization of which I have been a part since it was organized and that is further evidenced by the fact that a few hours before my resignation I purchased additional Goldwyn stock on which I had an option. I hope to be up to my eyes in work with the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation on April 1."

Samuel Goldwyn is at present in Los Angeles. No announcement has been made as to possible changes in the Goldwyn organization with the retirement of Fred Warren, who has been with the organization since its first days, earning considerable praise for the remarkable advertising and sales campaign that established the Goldwyn name in all parts of the world. Since December Mr. Warren has handled the distribution of the Ford Educational Weekly, making unusual records.

Fabian Plans New Theatre

A motion picture theatre seating four thousand people will be the permanent memorial and tribute which Jacob Fabian, owner of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit franchise for New Jersey, and proprietor of the Regent and Garden theatres of Paterson, N. J., will erect there early this summer as his supreme exhibitor accomplishment and in recognition of the remarkable interest that local theatre-goers have shown for screen entertainment.

The structure will cost half a million dollars. It will have a frontage of two hundred and eighty-seven feet on Church Street and one hundred and twenty-five feet on Ellison Street. The auditorium will be one hundred and seventy-five feet deep by one hundred and twenty-five feet wide. The first floor will have seats for two thousand seven hundred and fifty people, while the balcony will accommodate one thousand two hundred and fifty.

In size and the magnificence of its appointments the Paterson theatre will be the equal of the new theatre which Mr. Fabian is about to build in Newark, N. J.

One Hundred Per Cent

Hamilton, Ontario, boasts of a one hundred per cent membership in the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario. There are seventeen moving picture theatres in Hamilton and the association's active membership in the city is seventeen.

Buck Bill is Favorably Reported

Illinois Censorship by Small Group Comes Nearer Against Protests of Exhibitors—Campaign Is Prepared

ILLINOIS residents who depend upon pictures for their chief amusement, in a few months will pay more for the privilege of watching the film flicker and will have those same films carefully slashed by a small group of men labeled "censors" if the bill of Senator Buck of Monmouth is passed. The measure was favorably reported to the upper house by the Senate Judiciary Committee and started upon the first lap of the process which will make it a law.

The same bill has been introduced in the house by Representative Havill, of Mount Carmel, but has not yet been advanced there.

Springfield motion picture theatre men are prepared to fight the bills and will take the lead in the statewide opposition expected. Harry Loper, manager of the Lyric theatre, characterized the bill as vicious legislation not wanted by the thousands of Illinois people who patronize the picture shows, and intended to place in the hands of a few men the right to decide what kind of films the people of the state shall see.

"The people want to be their own censors," declared Loper, "and such bills are not favored by one in a hundred of the people who enjoy a good motion picture."

The passage of the bill means more expense for the motion picture men and probably added cost as a result to the theatre patrons. The bill provides a tax of three dollars for each original film of 1,000 feet with a dollar tax on each additional thousand feet. The film before permission would be given for display, would be censored by a board under the control of the department of registration and education.

An amendment to the bill provides that Chicago may have separate and local censorship similar to that of the Funkhouser regime which acquired almost national notoriety. The amendment was asked by a small number of Chicago ministers who are behind the bill and two of whom appeared in favor of the measure at the first committee hearing given it.

The Chicago censorship will affect the State, Loper yesterday asserted, because of the majority of films coming to Springfield and other cities through Chicago where they would pass under the scrupulous scrutiny of a Chicago board.

The same bill was up last session and nearly went over.

It is significant, a local theatre man pointed out, that Buck who sponsored the Senate bill, and Havill who is author of the house bill, are from Monmouth and Mount Carmel, towns of about 6,000 and 2,000 where two or three second class picture shows operate and where Sunday shows are forbidden.

Shelved for Two Years

In at least one state where motion picture censorship has been recently advocated, it is safely shelved for another two years. The F. H. Peterson bill in Minnesota, providing for a state board, has been recommended for indefinite postponement by the Senate general committee on legislation.

Upon learning this, the National Board of Review, which is actively opposing censorship legislation in all states where it has been introduced, addressed the following letter to members of the committee voting against the bill (Senators Blomgren, Boylan, Conroy, Denegre, Gjerset and Putnam) and to Chairman Sullivan, who expressed himself as opposed to it.

Canada Protests Reel Tax of Fifteen Cents

Ottawa, the Canadian capital, was wellnigh the center of film interest in the Dominion on Wednesday, March 19, when Mr. Thomas Scott of Toronto invaded the parliamentary preserves as official representative of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario.

Mr. Scott, who is the secretary of the Ontario association, was a delegation of one to seek relief from the Federal tax of 15 cents per reel per day, which, he declared, was forcing a number of small exhibitors throughout the country to the wall. If he could not have the tax abolished entirely, he wanted consideration for the little fellows—but everybody in the film business was being taxed half a dozen different ways by every government that had the right to impose an assessment. He pointed out that the moving picture business was being taxed proportionately and comparatively twenty-five per cent more than its share.

In his statement of claims, Secretary Scott noted that the expenses of operating a moving picture theatre in Canada had increased 300 per cent during the war period. The theatres had been hard hit by the influenza epidemic.

Against Rorke Bill

More than one hundred motion picture men from all parts of Pennsylvania appeared in the House Chamber of the Capitol at Harrisburg to argue in favor of a bill introduced by Representative William Rorke of Philadelphia to exempt musical entertainments and motion picture shows from the provision of the ancient Blue Laws. They came in company with the Philadelphia Orchestra, which is supporting the same bill.

There was a lively opposition from the ministers and churchgoers, who pleaded for the retention of the obsolete laws.

Baker Appears Against Missouri Censorship

S. J. Baker, manager of the St. Louis branch of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit and former motion picture censor of Kansas City, Mo., appeared last week before the Judiciary Committeee of the State Legislature at Jefferson City and "showed cause" why the bill providing for the creation of a State Board of Moving Picture Censors should not be passed. Baker was delegated by St. Louis exhibitors and exchange managers to address the committee.

Exhibitors throughout the state are fearful that the drastic measure will be enacted. The fate of the bill will be known early in April.

Baker in his address said that his experience and his observations convinced him that the censorship of pictures in Missouri is unnecessary.

"While censor in Kansas City I looked at productions day in and day out for six months—often assisted by a committee of obliging ladies who represented the Parent Teachers' Association, the Collegiate Alumnae and others," Baker told the committee members. "During that period I reviewed 3,500 reels of film. Out of those I totally rejected only two pictures—both of which had been rejected four years prior, and the owners of which had tried at least once a year during those four years to exploit them, but without success."

Goldwyn Calls Attention to Censorship

At a luncheon given representatives of the Los Angeles press by Samuel Goldwyn, the producer took occasion to call to the attention of the newspaper fraternity of the west, the injustice of censorship bills introduced in the various legislatures for the so-called improvement of motion pictures, and emphasized a point heretofore overlooked by the film industry with respect to the far-reaching effects of censorship and the throttle it puts upon the public and press.

"Censorship will not prove half as undesirable to the producer ultimately as it will to the public," was one of Mr. Goldwyn's statements, "for in reality censorship takes away from the vast American public what it has shown it wants and likes, and therefore I claim that when politicians pass laws to say what the public shall see and read, they throttle the public. The producers may change their method of production, which may be a hardship for a time, but we can all continue to make pictures but maybe not the kind the public wants, and could have were it not for the satisfying of political greed in the passage of unjust laws of censorship." Mr. Goldwyn quoted statistics showing that fifty million people weekly attend motion picture theatres in this country. "To say that these people cannot attend a picture show and be harmlessly entertained on Sunday is taking us back to the blue law days."

"Every year there are attacks of one kind or another by the legislatures of the several states, and why?" he asked. "We are trying to produce clean stories that will help educate as well as entertain, and by so doing we are trying to foster a great industry that will perhaps make us a few dollars, but we want our rights preserved the same as the press, magazine and the novel. Why don't all three or four work together to educate the public that censorship is wrong in a democracy."

Vital Happenings for Exhibitors and Producers

Brady Heads Delegation at Harrisburg

The activities of the Legislative Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry were centered during the past week in Pennsylvania, where two important hearings were held at Harrisburg on Wednesday and Thursday.

Under the able leadership of President William A. Brady, the representatives of the industry attended a hearing Wednesday on the bill introduced by Representative Rorke, which would permit Sunday concerts, lectures and entertainments of an educational nature. President Brady received a tremendous ovation from an audience estimated at 3,000 which packed the House of Representatives, and his arguments were delivered in a forceful and most effective manner. He related in detail how President Wilson had commanded him to mobilize the motion picture industry for co-operation with the war program, and that motion pictures had rendered the most distinguished service during the war without any profit.

On Thursday President Brady continued his triumphant march through the legislative halls at the Pennsylvania state capitol through his appearance at a conference with Governor Sproul to consider the proposal for moving of offices of the State Board of Censors of motion pictures from Philadelphia to Harrisburg. He related the importance of Philadelphia as a first release territory, of its central location, exceptional transportation facilities offered, and that it would be mose embarrassing and very expensive to the motion picture industry to have the headquarters of the Censorship Board removed to the state capitol. Mr. Brady was complimented by Governor Sproul for having come to Pennsylvania and for the enlightenment.

Judge Defends Rex Beach Production

That the members of the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors had overstepped their authority in refusing to permit the exhibition in Pennsylvania of the Rex Beach-Goldwyn production, "The Brand," was the expression from the bench used by Judges Rogers and Wessel in Common Pleas Court, Philadelphia, where Gabriel L. Hess, general counsel for Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, had caused an appeal to be taken from the findings of the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors. Morris Wolff of the law firm of Stern & Wolff represented the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation.

Judge Rogers himself interrupted the proceedings to put into the record his own statement that during a view of the picture given the two judges, in the Board of Censors' projecting room, just before the trial began, Mrs. Katherine M. Niver told him that no matter what changes were made, either in the picture or subtitles, it would not be accepted.

Buffalo Measure Stirs Picture Men

See in It Endorsement of Sunday Pictures — One Exhibitor Declares Public Against It

BUFFALO, N. Y. (Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS).—Buffalo exhibitors are much stirred up over the introduction in Albany by Assemblyman Slacer of a bill amending the penal law by permitting any municipality to conduct motion picture shows for education and recreation on Sunday from 2 to 6 P. M. in armories, schoolhouses, any state, county, or municipal building, or in any hall or room furnished rent free, provided pictures are censored by a local board of recreation, serving without pay and appointed by the local executive authorities and provided there is no charge for admission.

Some of the leading exhibitors in commenting on this measure voice their sentiments as follows:

HAROLD B. FRANKLIN, manager Shea's Hippodrome: "This measure is simply an indorsement of Sunday motion pictures. If the 'movies' are O. K. for the multitudes in special halls that haven't any of the modern improvements of the big picture house, where the pictures are presented in a delightful and cozy atmosphere, it is a foregone conclusion that they are equally O. K. in regular picture houses. The mere fact that no admission would be charged does not change the situation. If pictures are all right in armories on the Sabbath they are all right in theatres. I do not think the city wants to compete with regularly appointed photoplay theatres, which are now filling every need. If pictures are good for recreation from 2 to 6 P. M. they are also good from 2 to 11 P. M. At least almost 250,000 Buffalonians think so, as this number of citizens have to date signed petitions in favor of Sunday movies."

EARL L. CRABB, manager Strand theatre: "Assemblyman Slacer seems to have taken the side of the exhibitor in this bill, for it states that the city may show motion pictures for EDUCATION AND RECREATION ON SUNDAY. That is just what we have been maintaining all along that the motion picture is the ideal method to educate and amuse the workers of the country who labor six days a week and who demand this form of entertainment on Sunday. It is hard to imagine, however, just where there would be much 'recreation' in looking at pictures in a cold, dreary, military armory with no facilities for the proper presentation of pictures. We are indeed indebted to Mr. Slacer for seeing our side of the proposition."

JULES H. MICHAEL, manager Academy and Regent theatres: "Assemblyman Slacer certainly does not represent the sentiment of the people of Buffalo in trying to force a bill through the legislature providing for the free showing of motion pictures in big 'barns' about the town. Buffalonians want to see motion pictures on Sunday not only from 2 to 6 P. M., but from 2 to 11 P. M., and they want to see them in real theatres built for the purpose of showing artistic film plays in an artistic manner."

Lieut. William K. Howard Arrives from France

After nearly two years in the service, Lieut. William K. Howard is back from France.

He enlisted in Minneapolis, July, 1917, and was at that time manager of the Metro exchange for that territory. Previous to the Metro management Lieut. Howard was manager of Vitagraph's Minneapolis exchange, where he is said to have established a high record.

The transport Matsonia landed him in New York March 26, and he was nonchalantly strolling along Broadway when he was spied by a member of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS staff who had officiated as toastmaster at the farewell banquet tendered Lieut. Howard in Minneapolis, July, 1917.

He entered the signal service and after winning his commission at the training camp he was transferred to the Artillery division with a California contingent. Before locating in Minneapolis Lieutenant Howard was active in film circles in Cincinnati.

He seems to have grown six inches taller and eight inches wider and is as brown as a Southern cotton picker.

Think Governor Will Not Veto Bill

NEW HAVEN, CONN. — That Governor Holcomb will not veto the bill providing for Sunday motion picture shows, if it passes both houses of the Legislature, is the opinion of men here who are greatly interested in the provision. And that both legislative bodies will pass the bill is practically a certainty today. The State Senate went on record as approving the bill, only three members voting against it. Action by the lower house should be taken March 26.

Conditions in Connecticut have undergone a radical change since Governor Holcomb vetoed a liberal Sunday bill two years ago. The Governor has come to recognize the fact, his closest friends say, that every effort must be made to ease the masses of people who have been growing restive under restraint in the big towns. Motion pictures are generally conceded to have the power to partially quell unrest.

Another point that makes the passage of the Sunday bill fairly certain is the change in the leaders who are urging the bill. J. Henry Roraback, State Republican chairman, has charge of the work in person, it is generally known.

Sherwin Goes West for Goldwyn

Louis Sherwin, until recently doing special publicity for the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation from its New York office, left Thursday for the company's studio in California, where he will take up his new duties in the scenario department there. Mr. Sherwin resigned from the company about three weeks ago. Since then the new proposition was made him and he immediately accepted.

Mr. Sherwin was for nearly ten years dramatic critic on the New York Globe, where he earned for himself a reputation of being a keen analyst of play construction and a critic of sound judgment. He has already had some experience in the scenario writing line, preparing one continuity for a Select picture starring Alice Brady and one for a Goldwyn production not yet released.

Screen Club Wins Suit

Judgment was entered on March 24, 1919, in the Supreme Court of New York, by the Screen Club, through its attorney, Arthur Butler Graham, against its former landlords, William H. Cowen and Robert H. Davis.

The action was brought against the club for unpaid rent amounting to $2500. The complaint alleged that the club had been dispossessed for non-payment of rent and that the landlord had been unable to rent the premises to anyone else. The club defended on the ground that the dispossess proceeding had terminated the lease and that the club therefore owed no rent for the period that followed while the premises were vacant. The court sustained this contention and directed judgment for defendant.

Old Chinatown Setting for "Checkers" Scene

At the William Fox studio in Fort Lee, director Richard Stanton is said to have erected a most interesting set for "Checkers," the famous racing picture which Mr. Stanton is producing as a big special attraction. It is one showing the Chinatown of some years ago—the storied district of abducted girls, opium dens, dark alleys, Tong men, and mysterious underground passages.

The set was built under the supervision of Captain Hannon, of the Elizabeth Street police station, which has Chinatown within its jurisdiction.

Exhibitors Against Daylight Saving

Exhibitors of Western Canada are in high glee over the decision of the Canadian Parliament to shelve the daylight saving measure this year. The westerners were among those who had protested against the move. Not long ago the Winnipeg exhibitors placed a letter of protest against the adoption of a daylight saving plan with the Winnipeg City Council with a request that it be passed along to higher authorities. The western exhibitors complained that they did not want more daylight when night's shadows are not seen under ordinary circumstances during the summer before 9.30 P. M.

Charles C. Pyle to Enter Broader Field

After seven years as general sales agent of the Bartola Musical Instrument Co., Charles C. Pyle has sold his interest in the agency and resigned from the company to enter a larger field.

This will come in the nature of a surprise to the many exhibitors of the country with whom Mr. Pyle has dealt for many years and who have come to look upon the names Bartola and Pyle as synonymous.

Mr. Pyle has been in charge of the Sales Department since the inception of the Bartola Co. and has built up its business to a point where it stands second to none in the country.

While Mr. Pyle expresses a great deal of reluctance at leaving the organization, other matters of a far greater scope for his ability have presented themselves proving too alluring to permit of their passing by.

Mr. Pyle has not announced his new connection, but it is understood to be something presenting a vast field for operation. There is no question whatever it is it will be brought by him to success and he carries with him the best wishes of the many men in the business who have always found Mr. Pyle's judgment dependable and figure that he is entitled by his fair and square conscientious work of the past to a big share of prosperity.

Costume Company Leases Buildings

Lease was made last week by the Western Costume Company for the use of a seven-story building, 40 x 85, at 908 South Broadway, Los Angeles. The Western has heretofore been located at 719 West Seventh street, and in the past four years has grown from a masquerade costume company to the most important one of the west coast film industry, due to the very efficient manner of handling motion picture accounts by M. E. Burns, the proprietor. Recently Mr. Burns purchased the "property" business of Lee Powers, and this will be merged with the Western as a nucleus for his motion picture supply establishment which will furnish anything and everything required in the way of props and costumes for film making. Scene docks are to be built, and a furniture factory will be one of the important features of the new establishment.

Rivalry in Canadian Theatre Building

A highly interesting development has occurred in connection with the carrying out of plans to build new theatres in London, Ontario, by the rival Allen and Loew interests. The Loew people paid a deposit on a site for a theatre at Dundas and Wellington streets. The Allens then announced that they would build their theatre in another block along Dundas street. The Loew interests subsequently forfeited the amount which they had paid on their selected site and secured a long term lease on property immediately adjoining the location of the Allen theatre property.

New Theatre for Springfield, Illinois

It is announced that Springfield, Ill., is to have a new photoplay theatre. Rumor has it that a large Chicago corporation—Balaban and Katz—are back of the deal, and that Rapp and Rapp, Chicago architects, are now working on plans for the playhouse. The site selected is at Fifth Street and Capitol Avenue, half a block north of the Majestic theatre, and directly across from the Princess. The ground is now occupied by two dwellings, both landmarks in this city. The land is owned by Harris Hickox and the Miner estate. It is planned to build a large and magnificent theatre, with stores on the ground floor.

The seating capacity will be about 2,500. The location is off the beaten path for the picture business, being a block away from the principal thoroughfare. But as crowds flock to the Majestic and Princess, it is safe to assume that the new theatre will draw its share also. Three of the city's most important street car lines pass this corner, and the others make good connection for there. The manager of one of the theatres in Keokuk, Iowa, is slated to be the manager of the new house.

This is all rumor.

Series of Exhibits

The National Board of Review has been requested by President George A. Strayer, of the National Education Association, to arrange a series of exhibits on visual education for the national conference held by the association in Milwaukee the first week in July. This will include motion pictures and lantern slides now being used by the schools in departments of visual education. The interest expressed by President Strayer in this form of education is full of possibilities for the larger use of motion pictures in school buildings for the instruction of scholars and for the social activities of the schools through community centers, parent-teacher associations and neighborhood meetings.

Defense Society Endorses

The American Defense Society is reported to have endorsed "Made in America" because of its merit in winning the unqualified endorsement of some of the largest and most influential patriotic and educational societies in the United States. The Boy Scouts of America was the first national organization to officially recognize and endorse the series.

Its approval was closely followed by the International Committee of Young Men's Christian Associations.

"Lord Jim," By Bennison

The Betzwoon organization, producing the Louis Bennison pictures for release through Goldwyn, announces that "Lord Jim" will be the next Bennison production to follow "Speedy Meade."

Ira M. Lowry, who wrote the story and directs all of Bennison's pictures, says that the plot and scenes are laid in the United States and England.

Exhibitor Service Bureau

An Art with a Large Capital "A"

THERE isn't the slightest doubt that within the past two years there has been a more wonderful change come over the exhibition end of the motion picture business than it has known before in its history.

It has come because exhibitors have realized that selling each picture is a different proposition and that they have something else to do after they have built a fine house to get steady patronage coming to them.

They have found that the motion picture exhibiting business has become an Art with a very large capital "A." And when we use the word Art it should not be confused with the high brow, because there can be just as much art in presenting and exploiting a slapstick comedy as with a huge symphony orchestra.

And with Art comes Study—a study of your business. There is a tendency everywhere to putting every effort behind every picture to getting the most out of each one.

NOW there can be no text book of motion pictures. The man who tries to sell you a handbook and then tell you that you have the knowledge of the business or a particular branch of it is simply handing you bunk. The only study that you can make that is going to improve you is through the current developments of the business.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS realized this when this department was started. It realized that if there could be some forum established where the best work of the most enterprising exhibitors could be reviewed, intelligent and constructive criticism rendered and where every idea that was published first met the test of worth that a great deal would be established.

There was no plan that this should be set up as a teacher for you from the wisdom of the employes of the department, but that this real learning should come from the successful experiences or the failures of exhibitors everywhere. We have had scores of letters telling us how valuable the department has been, how this or that specific article or criticism brought money into the box office.

WE know that this department has done much and it has been largely on account of the splendid cooperation that has come from the exhibitors. These men, perhaps, have become more and more willing to contribute their experience because they have seen that their worthwhile efforts are not going to be set right against some piece of bunk offered by an armchair showman representing a producer who has something to sell.

Now the point that we want to make is that if this department could print every worthwhile idea that the exhibitors of the country use this would become the weekly text book of the showman's side of the business. At first many exhibitors held back because of lack of confidence, but this quickly disappeared. Then real modesty prevented many of them sending in their matter, and we fear that on the part of others it is simply a case of not being willing to do the little work that is attached to it.

You know how valuable the ideas that appear here are to you. You know that when you are able to use the plan of some other exhibitor that your business is helped. And you know that when your business and the other fellows' and all the rest are helped you are going to get the cumulative benefit.

So why not joint this forum?

This is your department and that of no other.

THERE is not a week that passes that there does not appear here some valuable article by a successful exhibitor telling you of some of the things he has done, how he has done them and what has been the result.

For instance, in this issue there is an article by E. O. Weinberg, manager of one of the most successful neighborhood houses in the country. The question of children's matinees is not a new one, but Mr. Weinberg has some new angles on it. Possibly you have found that such matinees have not been successes in your theatre, but possibly that has come because you did not get the right appeal over. You may find something in this article that will help you.

This reminds us that several months ago there appeared here an article by George E. Carpenter, manager of the Salt Lake City Paramount-Empress theatre, in which he gave some valuable pointers of these matinees. The value of it is shown, in that only a few weeks ago it was reprinted in a producers' house organ. And this is no criticism of that producer for he did the right thing to reproduce this valuable article.

And incidentally the other day another trade paper prints as an original idea a quotation from one of the contributors to this department, word for word the same matter that appeared here five months ago. Dozens of other cases of the sort may be cited.

But we are glad they do this. We know that this is recognized as the DEPARTMENT OF THE EXHIBITOR, because we have proven that it is.

We believe that we have the confidence of all of you. Now all that we ask is that you hesitate no longer in telling us the good things that you are doing.

AND DON'T FORGET THAT ANY SORT OF SERVICE, NO MATTER THE DEGREE, IS ALWAYS AVAILABLE TO YOU WITHOUT COST OR OBLIGATION.

H. C. Young, manager of the Strand theatre, Pittsfield, Mass., believes in collecting material for future use. Here is how he employs some of it in his attractive lobby posters

Young Gathers Material From Every Source For the Proper Exploitation of His Pictures

UP in Pittsfield, Mass., there is an exhibitor who believes in making just as strong an appeal as possible in his exploitation, and though his city belongs in the smaller class there is nothing small about the way that he goes after business. This man is H. C. Young, manager of the Strand theatre.

It was only a few months ago that Mr. Young took charge of the Strand, but he had something definite in view before he assumed he responsibility. He had studied the motion picture situation carefully and had decided exactly what he was going to do. In fact his experiences up to date reminds us a great deal of the accounts given in the Diary of a Successful Exhibitor, which was published in this department.

One of the first things he did was to change the name of the house, because he wanted to start fresh with the policies that he had in view. The place was practically made new and with this start he started out to let the people know about the house. He gave his earnest attention to advertising and it was through numerous letters that this bureau became acquainted with him. Mr. Young set out to get ideas. He found out through these pages who were some of the leading advertisers of the country and proceeded to get newspapers from those cities.

Mr. Young watches carefully the advertising pages of the Motion Picture News and when he sees a striking design there he does not hesitate to adopt it. In several instances he has been able to secure cooperation from the distributors by getting the originals or mats of plates so used where they are adaptable to printing on newspaper stock. And he is getting his accessories well lined up by keeping after the exchanges. He is not satisfied to have one of them fail to send him the material he asks for and offer some excuse, but he takes steps to see that the next time he makes a request some attention is given to it.

However, he may take only an idea out of one of these newspapers or News ad. displays and then prepares the rest of the advertising to suit his own purposes.

But one of the principal things that he has accomplished has been to get his local newspaper interested in motion pictures. The Berkshire Eagle is now cooperating fully and the sheet is a credit to the industry.

Clever exploitation is carried out in the lobby and here Mr. Young has his posters specially prepared for him. These are on colored stock and in colors, the illustrations being either especially designed or taken from photographs. Mr. Young is fortunate in having the services of a clever artist in doing this work, but if most exhibitors will look around their cities they can find someone who can do this sort of posters and get new attention to the theatre. The posters are 18 by 36 and are mounted in special glass frames that he has mounted in the Strand lobby.

Pittsfield is one of the cities that is cursed with the evil of double feature bills, but it will be noted that in all of his advertising Mr. Young picks one of the features to play up and then incidentally mentions the second. In other words, he does not appeal to quantity, but to quality. For instance, he picked "The Accidental Honeymoon" as the one to feature and kept it right up to date with the featuring of Capt. "Bob" Warwick. There was a fanciful illustration in colors for the center of this which was taken from one of the advertise-

In the case of the Nazimova picture, h featured the "Special Holiday Bill" on a count of the season and then every bit c the display on "Eye for Eye" was take from the Metro advertising, including th picture of the star, and then the displa on the May Allison picture was lettered i the whole being mounted on a bluish back ground.

We have seen a number of other spec mens of these posters and in each case the show that Mr. Young gathers his materi together carefully and makes use of all h opportunities. If he sees something in th News or in some of the publicity sent ou by the exchanges, in the regular paper or i heralds—no matter where—he files th away until he has occasion for its use. M Young is not one of the exhibitors who content to simply kick about the sort c material that he gets from his exchange although he naturally seeks to get the be that is available. But he is never caugh in a hole, for he has his material on han and in the comparatively short time that h has been conducting the Strand he ha learned just about what he may expect c each brand of pictures and makes h preparations accordingly.

We have been repeating for the past tw years here that every exhibitor shou have a filing system and that he shou accumulate there all possible material c the exploitation of pictures and not be con tent with simply following the ideas of th makers of the pictures. The number c those who are following such suggestion is increasing rapidly. It is simply a ca of failing to grasp your opportunities you fail to arm yourself for the sale c the pictures to your patrons.

BY PARCEL POST

Exhibitor Finds Picture So Shipped Saves Him Money

A. C. H. CHAMBERLIN, manager of the Opera House, Madera, Cal., and one of the live wires of the Pacific Coast, wants to know why exchanges cannot send pictures to the exhibitors by parcel post instead of using the express. He finds that it saves him a great deal of money. For instance, a ten-pound package from San Francisco costs 44 cents by express and only 14 cents by parcel post. These are small amounts, yet they count in the operation of a theatre in the course of a year. Mr. Chamberlin reports that he cannot induce some of the exchanges to use the parcel post.

Exhibitors should awake to their rights here. They should investigate and if they can get their films in as quick time and at a lower rate they should not hesitate to demand that policy. And if the exhibitor will sit down and write to this department it will at least be published here, so that the exchange will be on record and the home office is likely to want to know what is the matter. We wish as few troubles for the exhibitor as possible—but if you have them let us know about them.

Getting By-Product from Your Theatre

YOUR theatre has a by-product value! Edwin O. Weinberg, manager of the Elmwood Theatre at Buffalo—the house that caters to absolutely the highest class trade in the city with an eminent degree of success—is the author of this declaration.

Weinberg is a living receptacle for quaint ideas that crystallize from drama form into practical money-making pleasure-producing steps.

His theatre is not open afternoons except on Saturday, Sunday and holidays. Naturally the big houses must play to capacity and draw those crowds within a few hours each evening.

This is where he has applied the by-product plan that has been such a boon to great corporations, making it possible for them to clear running expenses through a utilization of that which heretofore had been regarded waste.

Weinberg has infused the by-product idea into the theatre. This is a resume of his views on the subject and which WILL be helpful to any manager who must make his money in a few hours at night:

"Welcome Home" display at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo

Childrens' Matinee

"The childrens' matinee has been considered by hundreds of managers as a waste of energy and money," said Weinberg. "All I can say is that he who passes up the children's matinee opportunity is not alive to the present-day demands—to modern advertising possibilities—to the magnitude of the theatre as a by-product producer.

"When you utilize your theatres during periods when it is not usually in operation—and manage to make those periods a paying proposition—that, I consider a creation of by-product. You are capitalizing waste time.

"For one year I have made Saturday childrens' matinees and often children's midweek matinees—produce a good margin of profit, when the week's total was summed up.

"Many managers will say: 'Bunk!' I can appreciate their feeling in the matter for that was my attitude for a long time.

Sentimental Advertising

"But time has changed. This is an age of sentimental advertising. Nowadays when a corporation advertises fire extinguishers it presents as an argument—a selling-point—a magazine or newspaper ad, showing how a man is saving his wife and little brood from flames with the patent extinguisher. The maker of automobile tire chains offers an ad showing how a father is trying to brush out of his mind an accident narrowly averted by him and which might have killed a small child through his not having tire chains. The ad pictures him dreaming of his own family in the same jeopardy.

"The insurance company pictures a family destitute because father made no insurance provision. The same sentimentalism has crept into motion picture advertising both by producer and exhibitor.

"And so on down along the line. Americans today think more of the comfort, safety and amusement of their wives and children than ever before. And the motion picture exhibitor can capitalize it through the holding of childrens' matinees with an appeal toward the family sentimentalism.

"The Elmwood last week Tuesday after-school played to 1600 children and several hundred grown-ups. That I consider a by-product. The attraction was a Humpty-Dumpty circus played by Marionettes with comedy films topping-off the bill. In other words, it was a modernized Punch and Judy show with films additional. We turned them away. The performance opened at 4:30 o'clock, after school, and ended in time so that the evening meal was not interfered with.

"My advertising appeal was made to fathers and mothers—that they allow their children to enjoy a Punch and Judy show with modern specialities. We pointed out what a bright spot it was in their lives when they saw years ago their first Punch and Judy show.

"Children never have been given such attention by parents as they get in this age. Naturally fathers after reading our ads suggested to mothers that they take the kids around to the Elmwood. And

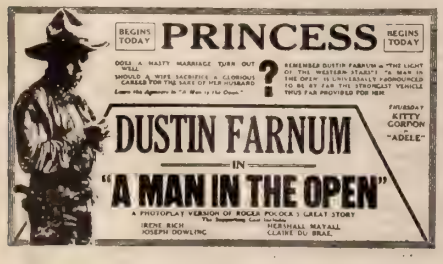
Your Idea and Ours



THIS quarter of a page display is excellent work for a theatre in a city where you can get good cuts made and where you can get good printing in the newspapers. It comes from the Alhambra theatre, Los Angeles. With one exception this is all plate stuff, but there is a welcome and effective relief with the mortise in the upper left hand corner and the type matter which gives the selling argument for the production: "This man in the open knows how it feels to live a brother to the grizzly in the wilds of the Northwest. He falls in love with a beautiful girl—marries her; loses her—and fights for her; loses her again and, at last—but see for yourself."

The remainder of the display is devoted to a couple of scenes from the production, one showing Farnum alone and the other with the girl, the title of the picture, the name of the theatre, the date, the prices and the fact that the story is taken from "Roger Pocock's greatest romance." And we say, it is mighty good as it stands, but bad printing here would result in a terrible mess.

An entirely different angle on the same picture is taken by the Princess theatre, Milwaukee, in a six inch, four column display. Here there is an attractive cut of the star used as the attention-getter and then there are two questions asked: Does a hasty marriage turn out well? and Should a wife sacrifice a glorious career for the sake of her husband? On the opposite side of the question mark there is the statement that this is a stronger picture than "The Light of the Western Stars," the previous Farnum production. This is manifestly the curiosity arousing type of a display, but we do believe that the Alhambra selling argument is the better of the two because it appeals to the woman element with the winning of the woman and losing her, etc., and to the men because it suggests action.

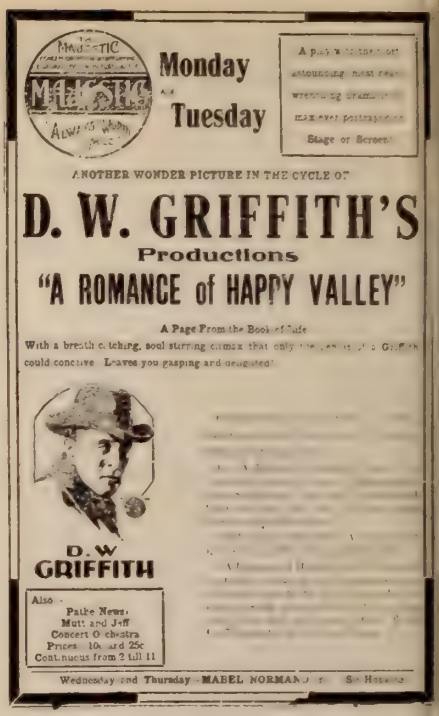
Best jewel for you to wear is consistency.

WE do not like to see the superlative used in motion picture advertising—as you well know, if you have been following this department, and so we will resist the temptation to use it ourselves in this case. But that does not prevent us from saying that we have never seen better advertising, so far as getting the attention, than this full page display from the Modern theatre, Providence, R. I.



This splendid picture of Mme. Nazimova has been used to the very best advantage, and it is so appealing that it is going to cause everyone to stop and read all that is said about her. There is just one improvement that we would suggest and that is the omission of the "cap" line "Is at her best" under the title of the picture. It is slightly jarring in appearance there and is unnecessary because there is a better sales argument in the matter that follows and which tells something of the role in which she is seen. We would have much rather have devoted that much room to space between the name of the star and the title of the picture.

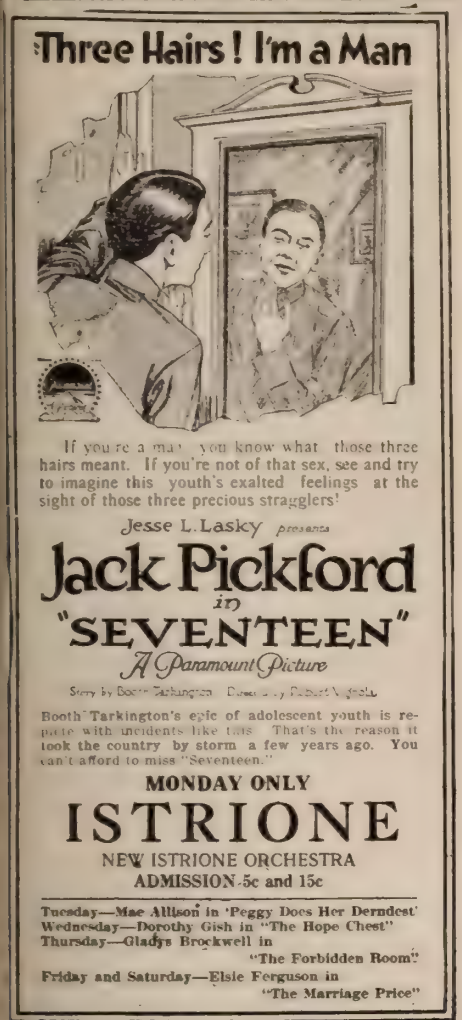
We are glad to see that the Modern is becoming converted to advertising one feature alone predominantly—for Providence is one of the cities where the double bill is still the fashion.

Exaggerated advertising is comparable to the merchant who puts a silk dress on display in the window and then only has calico to offer you inside.

DOWN in Jackson, Miss., there are a couple of theatres under the same management that are following just about our ideals of the correct advertising policy for a small city. These are the Majestic and Istrione theatres, located in a city with a census population of 27,000, half of whom are negroes and not admitted to the motion picture houses.



In the first place with the exception of a few week days displays these houses keep away from the syndicate idea. The displays of the two theatres are separate and generous, and the result is that they both get good positions, especially in the Sunday issues where the larger space is used. Still another commendable thing is that they place the emphasis on the first attraction of the week (there are no Sunday showings). This is true though the Istrione usually runs a picture only for a day and the Majestic for two days.

Evidently the advertising manager of these houses studies carefully the matter that he can get from the producers and this is used liberally, line cuts predominating. The theatres are able to get excellent cooperation from the papers and the half tones are used in the text columns so that the houses have a double appeal. But this press book matter is switched around so as to get the proper local appeal.

Now in the eleven inch three column display on "Happy Valley," the selling argument is largely taken from the press book, but instead of referring merely to Kentucky this is made a "story of the plain people of the Southland," which certainly brings it closer home to the people of Jackson.

Istrione uses ten inches double and here a mat furnished by the producers has been effectively used. We would have brought out a little stronger here that the story was by Booth Tarkington, but the designer has overlooked a bet and has let the name of the author go by in the small script as prepared by the producer. You will note that there is just a line devoted to each of the other pictures for the week. The theatre does liberal daily advertising and will sell these pictures when it gets to them. That's the right idea.

Misery may love company—but not intelligence, enterprise and advertising.

THERE is some mighty good stuff in in this eleven-inch, triple-column advertisement of the Regent theatre, Cedar Falls, Iowa, but the typing could not have been much poorer and the result is that one has to look for the punch. The designer seems to have depended entirely on the picture of Mildred Harris to get the attention and then to have left the rest to the printer. This is certainly a case where a few inches more of space would have brought greater attention.

In the first place, the name, Mrs. Charlie Chaplin, should have been brought out at least four times as strong, and the title of the picture should have been played up better instead of using the open-faced type. There is a good line in "The girl who cornered the laff market," and we would have pushed the cut to one side and have used that line alongside.

There is another clever selling point in the use of Chaplin's feet, but this is so mixed up with the selling argument on the picture that it does not attract attention. While we are generally opposed to boxes, this is a case of matter which should have either been separated by the use of a box or brought right up under the name, Mrs. Charlie Chaplin. It reads: "Think of having the world's highest comedian smile at you across the table for 365 mornings out of the year. That is the lucky fate of Mildred Harris, who led the funniest (then the reproduction of the Chaplin feet) to the altar."

The same theatre has done much better in this display which appeared in The College Eye, which we presume is the publication of some local school, but still the pin is not what it should be.

Keep the latchstring of welcome out and let advertising tell where the door is.

HERE is a mighty clever idea fo rthe exploitation of "The Heart of Humanity" if your local newspaper will let you get away with it. In this case it was put over by the Gaiety theatre, Springfield, Ill., by using a half page advertising display. You will note that through having the two cuts made in the shape of a heart, this gives over the full page effect to the picture and much more strikingly than would have been the case with a page ad. The week before the opening of the picture the Gaiety also used a total of half a page, half of that being devoted to "The Heart of Humanity" and in that issue it had another one of the heart-shaped cuts.

The heart effect is well carried out in the border of the display and in the center. We are generally opposed to the box effects in advertising, but here it has been well done, each referring to some different phase of the entertainment. The advertisement deserves commendation because it gives the big outlines of the picture and it shows the right sense of values on the prices, hours of presentation and the opinions of the New York papers.

Lots of people conduct their business on the principle of the old-time housewife who kept the blinds carefully closed on the front room unless "company" was there.

SPRING IS HERE

Let's Get the Right Sort of "Fever" With It

SPRING is here, and there's likely to come along the well-known Spring Fever with it. But that's a disease that the motion picture wants to avoid this year. From all sections there comes good news, and it is up to the exhibitor to get out and try to do more for himself and his fellows.

It ought to be idea time for most of you. Time to think of things that you can do to improve your theatre and better your advertising and presentations. And for the benefit of others we are mighty anxious to record here the things that you do do.

And if there is anything that we can do to help—well, the Exhibitors' Service Bureau has been inoculated against the Spring Fever.

How New York Stages the Show

ALTHOUGH there is at times plenty of laughs and heart appeal in "The Girl Who Stayed at Home" at the Strand theatre this week, the feature attractions at the New York houses belong rather to the tenser class of offerings.

At the Rialto the feature is Pauline Frederick in "The Woman on the Index," a story with a crook setting and a very strang drama. To offset this there is a Mack Sennett comedy, some more comedy thrown into the magazine and one of the quartet numbers is humorous, with most of the music of the lighter quality.

In addition to the latest D. W. Griffith picture the Strand is also showing the Sennett comedy, "Reilly's Wash Day," in which the various animals of the studio play a considerable part in the fun making. There is also a cartoon comedy included in the Strand Topical and, as has been observed, there are quite a few laughs in the feature, accentuated by the way that it is staged.

William S. Hart is appearing at the Rivoli in "The Poppy Girl's Husband," a very serious drama, and this is lightened by including a "Judge Rumhouser" cartoon in the Pictorial and with a Harold Lloyd comedy, "A Sammy in Siberia," as the final comedy.

Broadway featured the homecomng of the boys of the Twenty-seventh Division all the week. Mr. Kashin has a specially prepared feature which gives the story of the former guardsmen from the time they started to camp up to the present moment. This was started in at the regular Sunday opening and after the parade pictures of that were included. Pictures of the parade were used at all of the Broadway houses immediately after it was over.

Rupert Julian in "The Fire Flingers" is the Broadway feature.

Strand Theatre

MANAGING DIRECTOR JOSEPH L. PLUNKETT is getting some mighty striking effects this week with his presentation of the latest Griffith picture, "The Girl Who Stayed at Home." The battle effects are strikingly reproduced and the phonograph is used in a manner that delights the audience. Of course the use of the phonograph during a presentation is not a novelty, but in this case it has been done with a nicety that the audiences appreciate.

The lighter element dominates the bill at the Strand for though there is plenty of action and lots of tense scenes in the feature the humor stands out all the more by contrast and then there is one of the Mack Sennett comedies, with the lighter and more tuneful offerings running through the musical selections. Because of the length of the feature the usual scenic or educational picture is omitted this week and there is one double vocal number.

"Dance of the Hours" from "La Gioconda" is the tuneful overture and this is played with the lights all in gold. This is a selection that calls for the finer use of the various instruments, with little of it on the brasses, but the reeds and strings dominating. At the performance we heard it played the overture got an unusual hand.

Strand Topical opens with Universal Current Events pictures of London's welcome to the Scots Guards returning from the battlefields of Europe where they have been since the start of the war. The king and queen are shown reviewing the troops and the royal personages and the British soldiers get as much applause as if they were Americans. "London Scottish" is the most appropriat e music which is played here. Then come Pathe pictures of the American battleship fleet at Guantanamo, the pictures this week being devoted to showing airships flying from a platform on the big guns of the battleships and how these machines were used to hunt out the U-boats. "Buffalo News March" accompanies.

There is a dash of humor brought in with Current Events pictures of delivering milk in Key West. Here the cows are driven in front of the residences and the householder buys the amount she wants straight from the course of supply. "In the Meadows" is played with these. Then comes some striking pictures from Pathe, showing scenes in Germany after the armistice. First we see the propagandists at work and making speeches and then actual warfare among the Germans come and we see machine guns commanding the streets and then the kaiser's palace riddled with machine gun fire. "Gethsemane Commadery March" is the music. Following these are Current Events pictures of the wedding of Princess Pat. Again from the volume of applause one would think that American nobles were being greeted and the soldier escort draws forth new enthusiasm. Excerpts from the magnificent "Pomp and Circumstance" add greatly to the effect.

Then there comes a novelty from Paramount Pictograph with "Out of the Ink Bottle." These are pen drawings by Maz Fleischer. First we see the artist seated at his desk and then he draws the head and upper half of the body of a clown and then on another portion the lower half. The two parts of the body do a dance before they unite. The clown gets a black eye but the artist repairs this and then restores his hat, the views on the screen alternating between the antics of the mannikin and the sight of the artist drawing. Toward the end there is a clever effect as the artist tickles the clown with the pen. Finally he throws water over the paper and the mannikin fades away. "Melody Caprice" was used here. As we saw the presentation on Sunday a specially made "Welcome Home" Cartoon for the boys of the Twenty-Seventh Division was used to the music of "DeMlay Trio," but later in the week motion pictures of the parade itself were included.

Malcolm McEachern, a basso with an unusually good voice then sings a double number, "The Floral Dance" and "Mary of Argyle." The stage is in red and the spot on the singer for this number.

Then comes the feature which is screened to the music of "A Little Song" until we have a view of the old Confederate soldier and here "Carry Me Back to Old Virginny" is played, changing with the title "With the passing of a generation" to "Valley of the Poppies." For the first of the love scenes we have "L'Automme" when the Frenchman is claiming the girl and later in the evening with the American's appearance "My Paradise" is played and then with the title "A short time later" there is another switch to "Adieu."

This continues until the departure of the Americans. Then the organ takes up the music for five minutes coming back with "Now comes the day" and we have the calls on mited trumpets and then "French National Defile," played pp until the scene shifts to Germany where "Mother's Blessing" is used for the scene between the old woman and her democratic son. Then we have another change to "Faithfulness" with the title announcing America's entry into the war.

"Cutie Beautiful," the cabaret dancer, is introduced to the tune of "Laughing Eyes," certainly most appropriate fo the action of the picture and then when we see her trying the newest dance record we have the effect on the phonograph with the orchestra tacit. After the maid stops the machine we have "Sieste" and then with the title "The bright lights" there is accentuated humor with the playing of "Rockin' the Boat." This continues until the dance is over and here again the organ takes over the music for ten minutes, or until the scenes where Shipbuilder Grey is trying to get exemption for his younger son and then the orchestra comes back with "Military Tactics." When we see the result that military training has produced on the youth "I Hate to Get Up in the Morning" is played. Then we have the farewell dinner of the soldier and the girl and here the music is "Legend of the Rose" until the boy places the ring on her finger and then Grieg's "A Dream" is played. With the change of scene "Chant Elegigue" is used and then with the view of the marching soldiers we have the drums.

For another interval of ten minutes the orchestra carries the music and then as the auto is seen leaving the chateau we have the stirring "Battle of Ypres" changing to "Yelva" as we see the little American company still resisting. There we have a change back to "Cutie Beautiful" and the phonograph is once more introduced, this time playing McCormack's rendition of "When You Come Back." This scene fades out into battle stuff and we have "Le Roidy" played as Blossom sitting down by the dying German when we have "Heart Wounds" to the battle scenes where we get the effects. This continues until the old Confederate shakes hand with the American and drums are used to action here and then with the scene of his looking on the Confederate flag and saluting the emblem of the united nation we have "Yankee Doodle" played up.

Then with a change of scenes we have "None but the Weary Heart" and then the orchestra is tacit again as the phonograph is used. But the lovers are too busy with their kisses to note when the number is finished and we have the effect of the needle running around, continuing until the scene of the old folks and then the orchestra takes up "When You Come Back" and continues it to the end.

Then comes the screamingly funny Mack Sennett comedy, "Reilly's Wash Day." The famous Sennett cat and dog are introduced, the cat getting many of the laughs. Then the goat and the clever baby have their share of the fun. There is a succession of laughs during the scenes that show the improvised and dog operated merry-go-round. The music for this order is: "You Keep Sending Them Over," "Rastus," "Oh Lady, Lady" and then at the title "Uptown" the organ takes the music for five minutes, the orchestra coming back with "Tres Bien," "Have a Smile" and "Don't Cry, Frenchy."

Rogers' "March in E Flat" is the organ solo.

Stage set and performers at the New Lyric theatre, Minneapolis, used by Manager William M. Vance in presenting "Infatuation," with Gaby Deslys. During the showing of "Infatuation," the projection machine was stopped, the picture screen was raised, footlights flashed on the two principals, and a chorus of ten dancers performed the "Infatuation ballet." Dancing of the ballet occupied less than five minutes at each showing of the picture. Manager Vance reaped a harvest as a result of his enterprise

Rialto Theatre

THERE is a mighty clever musical arrangement of the score for the Robert Bruce scenic, "An Essay of the Hills," at the Rialto this week. Dr. Riesenfeld believes in paying just as much attention, if not a little bit more, to the arrangement of the score for the short subjects, and this makes them all the more effective. And here it is one of those simple "little things" that sends the audience away from the theatre more than ever "solid" on the house.

Now this picture opens with a fine view of a mountain stream with falls in the background, and then we are alternated with view showng "The law of rest" and others showing "The law of motion." For the first rest scene we have the snowclad mountains and a placid lake, and then for the motion we are shown the sea breaking on a rocky coast. Then we are shown a lazy spot with nature at rest, and in contrast a "mental tonic" with rapids and falls. Other scenes show panoramas of the mountains, little rivers cutting their way through the rock, then swelling into torrents, with the noisy falls, the contrast kept up.

Now for the music. "Woodland Echoes" is the first selection, and then "Siegfried" follows through. The orchestra carries the greater part of the music, but with the scene showing the angry sea we have the organ carrying the music and the effects brought in with each one of the turbulent scenes. One sees at a glance the "pep" that this puts into the picture.

With the final movement from "Scheherazade" there is a brilliant overture number. At the start all the lights go into red with the orchestra bathed in that color before the leader appears. It opens with a violin solo and then a touch of the harp, then the horns coming in and then the violins, the lights coming up to gold as the selection is about one-quarter ended. Near the end comes a burst from the organ, then softens down to the violins, with the lights going down gradually into blue and the music back to the violins and harp until we have only the concertmaster playing. Then the other strings come in, with the violin still dominant, and there is a brilliant burst at the end that gets a world of applause.

Then comes the Bruce scenic, and this is followed by the Rialto Male Quartette singing "The Lost Chord." They render this from the steps at the left of the stage, two of them standing and two seated, with a spot on them from the right. Organ and 'cello accompany.

Rialto Magazine opens with Kinogram views of the final review of the Italian marines, for which "Florentine March" is used. Then come pictures from Belfast, Me., showing a big schooner launching itself hours ahead of time, and here "Humoresque No. 2" is employed. Then there follow the Pathe Guantanamo pictures with "Cradle of Liberty" used until the aeroplane is seen in the air and then the orchestra fades out into effects, which are done with all the cleverness of Production Manager Joe LaRose. These continue through Universal Current Events pictures of testing an airship at Rockaway for the trans-Atlantic flight.

Kinograms then shows us pictures of feeding the forests to the paper mills, and there are some interesting views of timber-cutting with "A Dutch Wind Mill." There follow Current Events pictures of the milk delivery at Key West to the tune of "In Holland," the orchestra dimming down into effects with the title, "No bottling expenses." Then there breaks in a strong comedy element with Mutt and Jeff in "A Cow's Husband." There are some mighty funny situations that come through Mutt's acting as a cow and the troubles that he has certainly are a plenty. The orchestra has a good time with the effects here and the selections that follow one another through are "Wyoming Days," "Kinkies" and "Hunkatin."

Now there follows a portion of one of the Photoplay Magazine studios of film stars at

Music Hints For Entire Programs

Aiding the cause of the Salvation Army in the raising of funds for further relief work among the soldiers, and at the same tim adding an attractive feature to his program, was done by Sid Grauman this week when he presented a musical sketch requiring fort people and running twenty minutes. In the center of the sixty-foot Grauman stage was built the interior of a Salvation Army head quarters supposedly in France, and on each side were shown the entrances to this somewhere near the camps now on the western fron The act consisted of the entrance of the Salvation Army workers accompanied by soldiers and the program given included several son numbers by soloists, trios and quartets, some clever jig dancing and choruses. The act was roundly applauded, and it was made de cidedly attractive by pretty lighting effects.

play. We say "a portion" because there is so much of the issue for this week that half of this is used at the Rialto and the other half at the Rivoli, giving the patrons of both houses view of the famed of the screen away from their work. First we have J. Warren Kerrigan calling at the office of Photoplay to see Julian Johnson, the editor, and then William Russell with Yen, his Chinese servant. When Russell asks Yen whether he, the Chinaman, wants to appear in his next picture there is an explosive Chinese title and the orchestra dims down from "Dream Kisses" into Chinese effects. Then come Gaumont pictures of decorations for the marines, followed by Kinogram pictures showing Capt. Herbert Hall being decorated at Fort Totten. "Thunder and Cannons" is used for this with telling effect, and then at the end comes an appeal for the Old Clothes Week with "Rose of No Man's Land" played by the full orchestra.

Practically all of the music for the feature, Pauline Frederick in "The Woman on the Index," consists of the Rialto and Rivoli numbered selections. This is an intensely dramatic picture and therefore the lighter selections are not allowed to enter. The music is also largely carried on the organ because of the demand on the services of the orchestra for the remainder of the program. "Chant Elegique" is played at the screening and then goes into "Hezekiah," and then into the numbered offerings. At the title near the end where one of the Secret Service men tells Sylvia that he has enjoyed being her butler, we have "I Love Thee" used to the end.

There is an introduction on the brasses for "The Musical Trust," which is sung by the Rialto Quartet, their second appearance on the same bills. This is a story of four wandering musicians who meet on the road and form a combination, the songs telling their trouble. This is so acted through that it gets lots of laughs and hearty applause at the end.

Then comes the Mack Sennett comedy, "Reilly's Wash Day." Fourteen different selections are used for this and the effects are kept up by the orchestra almost continually. Selections in the order they are played are: "At the Jazz Band Ball," "Everybody Works But Father" (which is used when Murray is first shown and gets a big laugh), "Keep Moving," "When the Kaiser Does the Goose Step," "Pepper Pot," "Baby Doll," "After the Ball," "A Wild Jazz Knight," "Rainy Day Blues," "I've a Shooting Box in Scotland," "Minnehaha," "Full of Dash," "More Candy," and "The Vixen."

One thing that especially commends itself about the bill is the way that the tenseness has been set against comedy and melody so that the impression is almost left at the end that one has seen an all-comedy bill, though the feature stands out fresh in the recollection.

Rivoli Theatre

THERE is one of the longest Rivoli Pictorials that we have ever known shown at the Rivoli this week; but at the same time it is one of the most interesting that the house has ever had because there is so much variety in it, ranging from scenic pictures to comedy, with the news events filling in.

"First Hungarian Rhapsody" is the overture, and this is played with the lights all gold and then the Pictorial starts, opening with a Prizma picture of trout. These show the manner in which they come up the California rivers to spawn and then how the are captnred by the U. S. fisheries employees, the eggs taken from them and then the various processes of raising th fish. There is a good laugh at the end a a fisherman is shown catching one of ther and then the fish getting away.

Now there is a clever combination use next. First we have Gaumont pictures o Princess Pat at the farewell review of he regiment. These Canadian soldiers get world of applause as the orchestra play "Land of the Maple Leaf" with full effec Linked right up with these are Universa Current Events pictures of the marriage o the Princess, and here we have "Loya Hearts," which is counterpointed wit "God Save the King" played. We hav seen lots of scenes of enthusiasm over new events, but few greater than this demon stration, the British soldiers getting a especially big reception. For the shot o them the air changes to "Tommy Atkins. Unquestionably the music is largely respon sible for this reception of the pictures.

Kinograms shows us pictures of the floo at Des Plaines, Ill., and there is a touch o comedy with the kids in all sorts o "boats" and one riding through the wate on a bicycle. The organ carries the musi for this. Then Gaumont brings pictures c armored craft passing through Paris fc use on the Rhine and here "Celtic Suite No. 1 is played. Then comes one of th "Films of Business" pictures," this bein "The Story of Ink." There is a littl negress for the title and then the pictur goes into the discovery, laboratory proc esses and through the bottling and packin operations. "Funeral March" is used a the start and then "Forest Whispers."

There comes a high-light of comedy wit

New York's Way

one of the "Silk Hat Harry Stock Company" cartoons. This one being "Snappy Cheese." Judge Rumhauser has received a note from the Black Hand that a bomb is on the way, and so he gets a substitute, Silk Hat Harry, to act as the judge. There are laugh-provoking sneezes from the orchestra as the judge takes the snuff to "make him ill." Whistle effects are used for the clothes changing scenes. Then the courtroom and the first prisoner is brought in, who is equipped with some very active Limberger cheese, which does the "Hoochie" and all sorts of dances to the edification of the audience. Finally, as it is thrown out of the courtroom into Rummy's office it proves a bomb and explodes. "Porcupine Patrol," "It's a Pippin," and "Ching Chong" are the musical offerings.

Then come Intimate Studies of Screen Stars, and we are shown Dustin Farnum in his racing boat introducing "the newest thing in motion pictures—the gasoline fade-out," where his boat is enveloped in smoke. Then "in a desolate flat on Riverside Drive Mae Marsh comes home from the factory where she slaves for $2,000 a week," to her family, and there are views of the Marshes, big and little, with Mae playing with her little nephew. "Jeannette" is used for these pictures. "Southern March" is played for Gaumont views of the Mardi Gras celebration at Galveston, and from the same source come views of naval scouts getting their first training at San Francisco, with "Boy Scouts" the music. There is a punchy finale with Gaumont pictures of the "Dixie" leaving Ponta Delgada in the Azores after two years' service and sailing for home. "The Navy Will Bring Them Back" is played once through to the finish.

There is an artistic dance then arranged by Adolph Bohm with a scenic setting by John Wenger and executed to music written by Victor Herbert. Alexander Umansky and three girls in very filmy attire are the performers of this "Silhouette Dance." At the start of the music the lights go up to gold and then fade away before the curtains part until the house is completely dark except for the exit lights and a little light in the orchestra. The background consists of a fanciful vine sort of setting with a statue at the left of the stage. The smallest of the dancers has one of the Pipes of Pan and another carries a wreath which she places on the head of the statue and another brings flowers for the base. Then the statue comes to life and there is a wild dance with finally the figure going back into the statue at the end. A dull gray background for the stage helps to carry out the silhouette idea of the number.

Then comes the feature, William S. Hart in "The Poppy Girl." This is one of the more serious pictures and there is a lot of melodious music used to soften it. The first scenes are in prison and "Massoughiana" is played at the screening and then with the title, "Milestones of memory," the music changes to "Gold and Silver." Then one of the two themes is brought in with the first view of "The poppy girl," but this does not run entirely through the picture, because of the story where Dutton learns that his wife has been faithless, it ends. It is Huerter's "Melody," and is played several times during the first part of the picture. When Dutton tells the girl goodbye it is played as a cello solo, again when he is told that he is to be paroled and the last time when he tells of knowing that she is waiting for him.

With the introduction of the child Wieniawsky's "Romance" is played and this is followed through with Nevin's "Lullaby," which becomes the theme for the child. Friml's "Romance" and "Berceuse" are some of the other numbers that are used effectively.

Selections from "The Pink Lady" are the second orchestral number and then comes the comedy, Harold Lloyd in "Sammy in Siberia." There is a lot of clever stuff here at the expense of the Bolsheviki. We are introduced to "Private Smith from Florida" and others from various sections of the country who are having a terrible time in the cold, but the private from Chicago, Lloyd, is seen asleep in the snow and enjoying himself. There is a funny scene when Lloyd takes a swig of vodka and throws a fit. Music for this is "Glory of Russia," "Russian Rag," "Dough Boy," "Ghost Dance," "Sinbad" and "For Your Boy and My Boy."

Francis Fetis's "March in G" is the final organ solo.

Victory display used at Broadway to exploit pictures showing the career of the Twenty-seventh Division

The Broadway

MANAGING Director Maurice A. Kashin, of the Broadway theatre, was the only one to devote this week to celebrating the homecoming of the boys of the Twenty-seventh Division, the biggest occasion that New York has ever known. Of course all of the theatres included pictures of the parade immediately after it was over, but from the start of his Sunday opening Mr. Kashin featured the homecoming and made this the dominant thing in his newspaper advertising and in his lobby display.

Ambrose Tjomas's "Raymond" is the brilliantly rendered overture. This is played with the amber flood on the orchestra and the red lights upon the cyclorama scene of the city with all of the house lights dark.

Immediately after this comes the "Welcome Home." This picture has been made up of news weekly scenes taken at various times, but they have been so cleverly worked together that they make a real feature, especially New York where the enthusiasm has been at such a high pitch over the accomplishments of their former national guardsmen. At the screening we have Sousa's "Bullets and Bayonets" and then with a title "Here is the Story" we get "Smile." As they start off to Spartanburg, S. C., for training we have "K-K-Katy" and then "Der Vampyr." "A Cheery Smile" is used for the pictures of Gen. Ryan and then when some of the boys are shown on a furlough we have "Oh Frenchy" and then with the title "The big bosses" "Our Starry Flag" is used. The titles are all cleverly arranged here and there is no use of describing them since the pictures would have to be seen to get their effectiveness. But with the next one "They told us" we get O'Hare's "Military Scene" and then with the boys chasing the Germans we have "Goodby Alexander." With the news of the war over came "You're a Grand Old Flag," then "Songs of a Nation," with the title "Home Again" and finally "The Stars and Stripes Forever." Of course after the parade the pictures of it were included in this story so that it makes it complete.

There is an impressive effect used with the scenes depicting the homecoming. A woman singer in one of the boxes begins to sing "Home Sweet Home" and the impression left is that this is a voluntary tribute and it is not until she has gotten well into the selection when the spot is thrown on her. There is a burst of appreciation at the end of the song that is far more spon-

Youngstown Theatre's Anniversary Proved That Best Pays Even Outside of the Very Largest Cities

THAT the manager who is there with the brains and the enterprise can make mighty good both artistically and financially outside of the biggest cities has been shown again. This time it is the case of C. W. Diebel, promoter and manager of the new Liberty theatre, Youngstown, O. For not only is the Liberty one of the handsomest in the country, but it is conducted on the same plane as the biggest houses in the great centers, with the result that the pictures are not only presented with the proper music, but there are special stage settings used and every detail for each show carefully planned.

It is a peculiar thing that this theatre was conceived, financed and built during war time. Youngstown is noted for its great iron and steel plants and this probably resulted in the company being able to get the materials without great delays, but it was the spirit behind the citizens who put up the half million dollars the house cost that made it possible. As a matter of fact the construction of the theatre was to a considerable extent inspired by the war. Mr. Deibel and his associates found that in his section the war had increased the demand for the motion picture, because the natural antidote for the horrors of battle and the columns of news from the front is amusement—and at a price that the people as a whole can afford.

And at the same time this decision was made, it was also determined upon that Youngstown should have the finest house of any city of its size in the country. The men interested in the venture had heard much comment about the way that pictures were presented in other cities which Youngstowners visited and so they decided that the amusement right at home should be as good as they could get elsewhere and that it should be presented in just as fine a theatre. The result was the Liberty, a house that is magnificent from its beautiful terra cotta front to the last detail. It occupies one of the principal corners of the city and seats 1,800, a thousand of them on the lower floor. Every comfort is provided.

Besides the $20,000 pipe organ there is an orchestra of twelve pieces and special attention given to the musical portions of the program and to the interpretation of the pictures. The complete lighting system enables the management to get all of the color effects. Then there is a splendid stage arrangements that permits special settings and tableau and these have been in vogue since the opening week. There is one large central opening where the displays are made and on either side there are other curtained panels where further displays are given:

With the opening bill there was a display representing the spirit of Liberty with the goddess draped in an American flag and holding aloft the torch of freedom, flanked by one youth in the garb of a Revolutionary soldier and on the right by a youth in the khaki of the American army of today.

When "Under Four Flags" was presented there was a special drop used reproducing soldiers of the four allied countries changing. On this occasion a special patriotic musical bill was given.

For the showing of Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas" there was another clever effect obtained with the representation of the harbor of a South Sea island and the palms overhead while two cannibals sat on the beach looking out over the waters at the coming explorer. Local negroes were used in this case and immediately after this setting was revealed the picture was started on the screen.

Such displays as these were new to the people of Youngstown who had not visited leading theatres in the largest cities, but they made a hit from the start and Mr. Deibel soon had the people talking about his house. As a matter of fact within a couple of weeks the Liberty was really one of the institutions of the city.

We believe that we are going to hear a whole lot more from Mr. Deibel and the Liberty, for the manager and the house are both surrounded with the spirit of doing more and more in the presentation of pictures.

The Liberty has just celebrated its birthday and is starting on its second year of big things.

Spotlights on Girl Ushers Help Advertise Theatre

A more than worth-while scheme has been adopted by Sid Grauman, and is now in use at the Grauman theatre, Los Angeles, which is of great benefit to patrons of the theatre. Since the opening of the house Mr. Grauman has used girl ushers, and a feature of their costume has always been white flannel trousers, for Mr. Grauman always thought it best to give them something that would make them distinctive, and at the same time aid the public in seeing them because a portion of the theatre is necessarily dark. Ushers, when not busy, always stand at attention at the Grauman theatre on each side of every entrance to the main auditorium from the foyers.

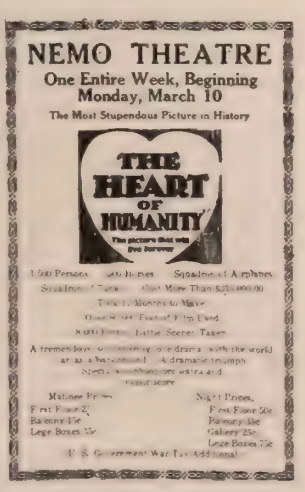
The latest Grauman innovation is a spotlight hidden above each girl which brings them into bold relief and renders it possible for anyone entering the foyer to immediately see the girls who are on duty, and therefore know just where to go to enter the theatre. Furthermore, the spotlight effects add attractiveness to the theatre foyer by the attractive girls whose presence is emphasized by the lighting.

The spotlights are changed frequently so that different hues of light are thrown upon the girls. This is a marked improvement over the general conditions which prevail in most theatres where it is necessary for the patron to grope about to find an entrance, and inasmuch as the device for the spotlights are very inexpensive

This eight-foot heart mounted on a touring car covered the streets of Johnstown every day

Johnstown Theatre Uses Every Vehicle in Its Exploitation of "The Heart of Humanity"

GRAND AMUSEMENT COMPANY, Johnstown, Pa., which operates the Nemo and three other theatres there, has just put over what is about the model exploitation of a picture with the show of "The Heart of Humanity" for an entire week. This campaign was the work of L. W. Barclay, advertising manager for the Grand.



Such campaigns as this proves that it pays to go the limit in the exploitation when you have a big picture and when you are willing to run it long enough to get the full benefit from the money that you spend. Johnstown has a census population of about 65,000, but the appeal made by the Nemo was not limited to the local public, but carried through the district.

The reports from the Grand are that the picture went over to immense crowds, though an admission of fifty cents in the evening and twenty-five cents in the afternoon was a most unusual thing for Johnstown. As a matter of fact, the thorough way in which this picture was advertised is an object lesson to other managers of what they can do if they will really get out and hustle. But it cannot be done by sitting around the theatre and theorizing.

As a basis for the campaign the theatre had printed 20,000 eight-page heralds, and these were distributed at the three motion picture houses the company operates and through the stores in the suburban districts. In addition there were 10,000 heralds announcing a special children's matinee for the opening day. Incidentally, the newsboys of the city were the guests of the theatre that day. They marched to the Nemo headed by an automobile which bore a huge heart. This is reproduced on this page.

At left, one of the advertisements in an Italian paper; in the center, the Hungarian appeal and at right, how the picture was offered to readers of the country press

There was variety every day in the heavy newspaper advertising

The city was literally covered with paper. There were fifteen 24-sheets used, forty 6-sheets, sixty 3-sheets, 200 one-sheets and 200 half sheets, and then 6,000 window cards. Special street car cards were used in every car in the Johnstown district. These carried a big red heart, the title of the picture, the name of the theatre and the date of the beginning of engagement. This advertising reached the eyes of practically everyone who could conveniently make their way to the theatre.

Newspaper advertising started three weeks in advance of the showing of the picture and continued through the engagement. Liberal space was used, up to four full columns, and the best part about the advertising was the little reading matter that it contained. Yet none of this matter, which was carried in all three of the Johnstown papers, was allowed to remain the same day after day. For instance, in the one that is reproduced here the theatre referred to the verdict of the city after the first showing and to the fact that 900 children enjoyed it at the special matinee. Considerable of the advance campaign was devoted to what critics of the larger cities said about the picture, New York, Chicago and St. Louis papers being among those quoted. This was followed up with local opinions after the showing in Johnstown.

In addition to the three dailies printed in English, four foreign papers, published in Italian and Hungarian, were also used and advertising was also carried in country weeklies.

All during the engagement an auto was kept running through the principal streets of the city bearing an eight-foot heart that attracted the attention of everyone.

there were many fathers in the audience too.

"The parent also is partial to those old nursery stories told to them in their childhood, such as Babes in the Woods, the Three Bears, Cinderella and the Magic Slipper, etc. Naturally they tell these stories to their children, and in addition to that the schools now are aiming to develop imaginations through the use of the fairy story.

"Therefore I knew I would be successful when with proper human appeal advertising I put on filmizations of such stories on Saturday afternoon. The films of this nature were shown only at the kids' matinee, the regular evening features going on at night.

"I have not had one failure in the last year on childrens' matinees. However, I do not over-work them; one, say every two or three weeks. But for every Saturday afternoon I buy an inexpensive film, even if not a feature, but which embodies an appeal to the child mind.

"I have also enlisted the benefit plan on these matinees, some of them which have been held on Friday afternoons or midweek afternoons.

"These are also by-products inasmuch as your theatre is standing idle.

"Recently I put on a benefit matinee on a Friday afternoon with a college alumni association of women. They were trying to raise money to provide free scholarships for girls. Together we put on a matinee of childrens films, The stars were child stars with a rousing Arbuckle comedy. The women went out and sold tickets. These women fired with enthusiasm worked hard. The result was that the street was blocked when the doors opened. In the summing-up the theatre got as its share a tidy sum while the women were more than satisfied.

"All in all we made friends of those women, of those who enjoyed the performance and made some money out of the theatre at a time when it would have been idle.

"Of course discretion must be used. Any old thing won't go. They must be worked out to a nicety—with advertising, the right kind—as the predominant factor.

"Your theatre has a by-product value, and from thees by-products—utilized waste time—you will be able to pay for repairs and over-head which would ordinarily have to come out of the regular evening performances."

Great Campaign in Putting Over a Week's Run

Sill another novel stunt came through the co-operation of the two Vendome restaurants, the most prominent in the city, which offered special "Heart of Humanity" menus for the week before the showing of the picture and during the showing. The name of the picture was printed prominently on the menu and of course the theatre got a lot of unusual advertising.

For three days in advance of the showing the theatre employed a woman singer to render the song, "The Heart of Humanity," and window displays on it were secured in the Grand and Woolworth stores. Since the record was not ready, Mr. Barclay prepared special displays for the Victor and Columbia dealers and in addition there were displays in the windows of all the leading stores of the city that handle musical goods. These displays were made largely by use of cut-outs from the one, three and six-sheets.

taneous than if this had been staged as a regular number.

Then comes the comedy, Lee and Moran in "Lay Off." Musical Director James C. Bradford has arranged a most attractive musical score for this, including a lot of the latest hits and some of the old favorites, all of it light and catchy so that the audience is kept humming most of the way through. In the order that they are rendered the numbers are: "The Canary," "Dixie Melody," "I'm So Happy," "Cold Turkey," "Oh, Helen," "Texas Fox Trot," "Walking the Dog," "Come On, Papa," "Do, Re, Mi," "I'll Say She Does," "A Wee Bit of Lace," "High Yaller," "Pahjamah," "Mama's Blues," "Tackin' 'Em Down," "Aces High," and Herbert's "American Serenade."

Then with an amber spot on the singer, Miss Edwards rendered delightfully "Your Boy and My Boy," and after this comes an organ solo, followed by the feature, Rupert Julian in "The Fire Flingers." Here we have a mystery story that is inclined to be melodramatic at times and with lots of action to it, but the score that is played at the Broadway stays away from the conventional and Mr. Bradford's originality certainly makes it all the more enjoyable. There is an entire absence of the hurry and scuffle music so usually found in a picture of this sort. As a matter of fact the score elevates this strong picture.

At the screening there is Langey's "Canzonetta" used, and then when we get a flash of the stenographer at her desk there is "Have a Smile," turning into "March Jouesse" with the flash of the back end of the office. When we see Olwell at the safe, "The Perfect Melody" is used, turning into "Serenata" with the title, "At the noon hour," and then when the auto appears with Olwell to Borch's "Turbulence." As he enters the room the music becomes "Rienzi" and then "The Erl King" when he attacks Hatton. With the title, "You could look like him," we have Tschaikowsky's "Final Symphony" until the policeman is seen entering the kitchen, when we get an appreciated touch with "Wearing of the Green."

When Hatton is seen to lock the door there is a shift to "Prelude from Eva" and "Hymn to the Sun" as the stenographer enters, with "Perpetual Motion" coming in for the police chase. "The Asra" comes with the title, "The next morning," and then with the appearance of Winnie, the theme, "Evensong," is introduced. Then follow "Nocturne" and "Bocturne" and the theme again with the reappearance of the girl. As the accomplice enters, "Cicely" is played and then with the title, "Bring my finger prints," comes "Un Sonnett d'Amour," and with the final title, "They are identical," we have the theme to the end.

Four All-Star Series in This Month

Metro Offers May Allison, Bert Lytell, Viola Dana and Emmy Wehlen in Screen Versions of Popular Novels

May Allison, Metro Star

FOR the month of April, Metro's program of releases is comprised of four All-Star Series productions, and they declare that as far as story and plot are concerned, their success is already assured.

Each of these four features has for its foundation a novel or short story, which has met with the approval of publishers, editors and the thousands of readers of well known authors.

In presenting these offerings to the lovers of the silent drama, Metro has selected them with a view to variety of theme and fitness for the respective stars, and in accordance with the policy of this firm of producers the settings, interior and exterior, are said to be of the highest standard of the screen.

The first of these is "The Island of Intrigue" which will be released on April 7, with May Allison in the stellar role. The play is taken from the popular novel of the same name by Isabel Ostrander, and enhances the thrillng story of advnture, love and intrigue.

The cast supporting Miss Allison in this tale includes Frederick Vroom, Jack Mower, Mrs. Lucille Ward, Gordon Marr, Lillian West, Hector V. Sarno, Tom Kennedy, Chance Ward and Edward Alexander.

The novel was adapted to the screen by A. S. Le Vino and June Mathis, and was directed by Henry Otto, with William E. Fildew at the camera. Maxwell Karger gave the piece his personal supervision.

Number two of the quartet of features will be released April 14, and is called "Blackie's Redemption," a title which is descriptive of the part essayed by popular Bert Lytell.

The famous "Boston Blackie" stories by Jack Boyle, as published in the Red Book Magazine, are the basis of this drama. In the cast surrounding Lytell, besides Miss Lake and Mr. Kolker, are Bernard Durning, Jack Duffy, William Musgrave, Gertrude Short, Don Bailey, Wilton Taylor and a real Chinese actor, Ah Tov.

Under the supervision of Maxwell Karger, John Ince has directed this drama. Finis Fox adapted the play from Jack Boyle's stories, and Robert B. Kurrle cranked the camera beside Mr. Ince.

On April 21, "Madelon of the Redwoods" will be released, which marks the picturization of the first of the many books from the pen of Mary E. Wilkins (Freeman). "Madelon" was the name of the novel.

Viola Dana has a refreshing role as the star. The screen adaptation is the work of Finis Fox. Edwin Carewe, directed, and in the cast are Wheeler Oakman, Edward J. Connelly, Pat O'Malley, Peggy Pearce and Virginia Ross.

The last of the Metro's four April offerings released April 28, is the return of Emmy Whelen in her new romantic-comedy, "An Amateur Adventuress," adapted to the silent drama from the novelette by Thomas Edgelow published in Young's Magazine.

Russell in "Some Liar"

May 11 is the release date set by the American Film Company for the next "swift and snappy romance" of William Russell Productions.

"Some Liar" is the title, picturized from a story which James Oliver Curwood contibuted to The Green Book last October. Stephen Fox made the screen adaptation.

Eileen Percy enacts the role of the maid for whose admiration the "liar" spins his tallest yarns of wholesale murder. Henry King did the directing.

A forthcoming Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoon, "Sir Sidney," available at all Fox exchanges, shows the Peace Conference at Paris as the basis for a comedy.

Mutt and Jeff arrive with credentials. Sir Sidney is pictured as an important diplomat. Bud Fisher's famous comedy team in films are described as big winners.

Will Boom the Salvation Army Special

In Addition to the Salvation Army Co-operation Throughout the Country a Book and a Song Is Expected to Provide Exhibitors with Exceptional Exploitation Aids

WHAT the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation declares will be one of the greatest exploitation campaigns ever accorded a motion picture will be centered on "Fires of Faith," the big Salvation Army special feature.

Many out-of-the-ordinary channels are opened for progressive exhibitors in helping to place this production before as many millions of the people as possible.

The regular advertising campaigns generally conducted through the trade journals, newspapers, magazines and billboards will be in keeping with the calibre of the production. But other exploitation aids will augment this national publicity drive.

A book has already been written and published direct from the screen version, thus reversing the usual method of procedure.

"Fires of Youth" is also the title of a song which the publishers claim will receive unusually wide circulation, and which they declare is catchy and tuneful enough to surely attain a wide vogue.

Doughnut Remembered

And the lowly doughnut has not been forgotten in the many aids given the exhibitor by Famous Players'Lasky in a special twenty-four page press book.

Millions of persons throughout the entire country are said to be anxious to see Commander Booth, and she has an active part in the film and a splendid cast is heralded in her support.

"The Advertising and Publicity Department has arranged a campaign for 'Fires of Faith' that makes it possible for every exhibitor who runs this film to score a ten strike," said Al. Lichtman, General Manager of Distribution for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in outlining the proposition.

"Aside from the advertising and publicity campaigns on the film in newspapers, magazines and trade papers, there will be open to the progressive manager, various different channels which he can use to put over the picture.

"In the first place there is a 40,000 word novelization written from the film, by Charles Kenmore Ulrich and published by Grosset & Dunlap. This is perhaps the first time that a book version of a story has been published from the film.

"The volume is nicely bound, has fifteen half-tone illustrations of scenes from the photoplay, and an all-round jacket or paper wrapper in four colors, also embellished with scenes from the picture. This book, as well as the photoplay, has been officially endorsed and recommended by Commander Booth. The volume will sell at the popular retail price of fifty cents a copy.

"The publication of this volume at the time of the release of the picture gives the exhibitor a fine opportunity to work up some unusual and extra publicity in co-operation with the booksellers of his town. One of the best methods of procedure is that the exhibitor call upon the bookseller just as soon as the picture is booked, have him order a large stock of the novel and then arrange for a window and interior display using the advertising material from the publishers and the supplementary paper which will be furnished the exhibitor through the Famous Players-Lasky exchanges.

"Furthermore, the book dealer can be prevailed upon to mention the announcement of the picture in his advertising copy in reciprocation for advertising the book in the lobby displays of the theatre and in the exhibitor's newspaper announcements.

Attractive Posters

"Then there is an attractive one-sheet poster being prepared, a reproduction in colors of the popular 'Doughnut Girl' cover of a recent issue of the Saturday Evening Post. This poster, it is pointed out, opens up numerous channels of exploitation to the exhibitor. Owing to the high esteem in which the Salvation Army is held in every American community, it will not be difficult to place them in office and store windows not ordinarily given over to general advertising.

"In fact, it will be found that merchants and citizens generally will be not only willing but anxious to co-operate in every way possible if the exhibitor will donate a percentage of the receipts of the opening day to the local corps of the Salvation Army. Moreover, if this is done it is more than likely that returned soldiers will be eager to assist in an advance sale of tickets," continued Mr. Lichtman.

"The erstwhile lowly but now exalted doughnut even may be turned to good advertising use, either distributed free to patrons or, better still, sold to them for the benefit of the Salvation Army. In this connection, during the recent engagement of 'Ladies' First,' at the Nora Bayes theatre, New York, a number of Salvation Army girls gave away doughnuts and Miss Bayes's solicitation was responsible for the collection of nearly a hundred dollars for the Army at each performance.

"All these suggestions and others are incorporated in a special twenty-four page press book on 'Fires of Faith' which is now being prepared. The edition of this press book, which will be twice the dimensions of the usual press books issued by the company on its productions, will run to nearly twenty thousand copies and will be distributed to every exhibitor in the United States, serving as a sales medium as well as an exploitation aid. The press book will be most attractive typographically, including a complete list of all the Salvation Army headquarters in the United States with the name and address of the officers in charge.

For the Singers

"Another tie-up possibility for the picture is a song published by Waterson, Berlin and Snyder, especially written and dedicated to the film, entitled 'Fires of Faith.' The music offers an exceptional ballad by well known writers, the words being by Lewis and Young and the music by M. K. Jerome. The song also presents the musical theme of the photoplay and is part of the music score prepared by George W. Beynon.

"Local music dealers will be glad to co-operate with exhibitors along the same lines as the book dealers and the progressive exhibitor will be in a position to tie up the respective exploitations of the film, the book and the song to his advantage. Besides this, exhibitors will be furnished with slides containing the chorus of the song by Waterson, Berlin and Snyder, free of charge.

"With the individual advertising campaigns given by the distributors of the film, the song and the book plus the co-operation of the Salvation Army, the exhibitor who books 'Fires of Faith' has at his command a wonderful opportunity to put over a big showing. This publicity is backed by the unusual quality in the film itself. With its dynamic title and the inspiring theme, its splendid cast, admirably directed by Edward Jose and the fact that Commander Booth herself takes active part, it is quite evident that this film will be one of the biggest box-office possibilities this season."

Olive Thomas Gives a Piece of Her Mind

"It is not the Tired, but the Re-tired business man who makes the theatrical business boom," says Olive Thomas. She used to be in the Ziegfeld Follies constellation. Olive says the average New York business man, when he reaches the state of affluence which permits his associating with the stage beauties, only has to work about two or three hours a day, and most of the time he never goes near his office. The young fellows who do all the work and are compelled to be at the desk from nine to five are the real tired business men and can't afford the Follies. Their recreation is the moving pictures, and that is why Olive now feels that she is doing a real service in helping these boys forget for the time the drudgery of the office. Olive is now the idol of the Tired business man and not the Retired business man as she was when in the Follies. She is in the movies now, starring in Selznick Pictures.

Wm. S. Hart Story Selected

William S. Hart's next picture will be from a magazine serial called "Square Deal Sanderson," it is reported, though little is as yet being announced concerning the picture or the cast.

It is understood, however, that Mr. Hart has arranged to secure a particularly strong company of players to enact the roles in the production.

The Artcraft star began work last week on the production at his Hollywood studio and several important sets are being constructed.

"From Headquarters" Scores

Vitagraph declares that to recount the big runs now being scored by Vitagraph's Anita Stewart feature, "From Headquarters," would mean the listing of a goodly percentage of the important picture theatres whose booking dates have so far made available a run of the pitcure.

The New Theatre in Baltimore began a run on March 24, and, scattered all over the country, other big houses are putting the picture in as their dates permit.

Says Five Powerful Productions Are on Current Schedule, Including a Rex Beach Offering

PICTURES that are certain to add tremendously to the popularity of Mabel Normand, Geraldine Farrar, Tom Moore and Madge Kennedy, including a virile Rex Beach production, is what Goldwyn promises in spring offerings.

Leading off is the latest Mabel Normand broad comedy, "The Pest," which Samuel Goldwyn confidently predicts will surpass in popularity her "Sis Hopkins."

W. Christy Cabanne, supervised the production of "The Pest," his first Goldwyn assignment, released April 20.

A week following "The Pest" comes what is heralded as Geraldine Farrar's most powerful screen offering, "The Stronger Vow," a vehicle which reveals the international celebrity as an incomparable artiste because of the extraordinary demands her new role makes on her ability.

Again the diva is supported by Milton Sills and Tom Santschi, who contributed not a little to the success of her previous Goldwyn productions, "The Hell Cat" and "Shadows," as well as by Hassard Short, who distinguished himself in Miss Farrar's support in "The Turn of the Wheel."

Third in the list of Goldwyn's spring releases is Tom Moore's newest comedy-drama, "One of the Finest," in which he is said to duplicate his brilliant performances in "Thirty a Week" and "A Man and His Money."

Aside from the comedy element in "One of the Finest," it is declared to be replete with tense situations that bring out the young star's splendid dramatic talents. Again Tom Moore has vivacious Seena Owen as his vis-a-vis, and once more the Goldwyn star has Harry Beaumont as his director.

"Leave It to Susan," Madge Kennedy's newest Goldwyn production, will be released May 11. Though the light comedy element is the main theme of the new Madge Kennedy release, the star is once more given opportunity to display her versatility—to evoke heart throbs as well as laughter from her audiences. Wallace MacDonald is Miss Kennedy's leading man in "Leave It to Susan." Clarence G. Badger, who showed his directorial skill, in six other Madge Kennedy-Goldwyn productions, is directing "Leave It to Susan."

Rex Beach's "The Crimson Gardenia" is described as a powerful picturization of one of the famous author's best sellers, is his newest contribution to the screen. It is expected to equal the tremendous impression made by Mr. Beach's recent success, "The Brand."

New Orleans, at the height of the carnival season, is the locale of "The Crimson Gardenia," released May 18.

Miss Condon East to Sell Picture

The six-reel film made by the New Art Film Compay at Long Beach under the direction of Frederick Sullivan and with a cast that included Jack Mulhall, Helene Chadwick, Pauline Curley, Leo Pearson, Charles Spere, Wharton Jones, Emmett King, Ann Shaffer, Gordon Griffith and others, is shortly to be offered New York buyers by Mabel Condon, who is in the east with the film. As yet the subject is unnamed. Miss Condon will be aided in the sale of the film by George B. Watters, general manager of the New Art Company.

Rowland Goes to the West Coast

Metro Head Aims to See "The Red Lantern," New Nazimova Subject—Will Exploit Production Largely

RICHARD A. ROWLAND, who, together with Maxwell Karger, presents the Nazimova de luxe screen dramas, left on a hurried trip for Hollywood, Cal., this week to see a projection of the star's latest feature, "The Red Lantern," the cutting and assembling of which has been finished under the personal supervision of Mr. Karger.

Immediately upon Mr. Rowland's arrival in California a conference of executives of Metro Pictures Corporation, who are the exclusive distributors of the Nozimova Productions, will be held to perfect the details of special plans for the exploitation and distribution of this sensational production.

Both Mr. Rowland and Mr. Karger consider "The Red Lantern" the artist's greatest achievement on the screen or stage, and they propose to leave no stone unturned in exploiting it on a scale and in a manner never before attempted with a picture.

Already a nation-wide advertising and publicity campaign has been inaugurated to aid the exhibitor in getting the very best results from this feature. Definite announcement of the details of other promotion plans, recently evolved, will be forthcoming after Mr. Rowland sees the picture and consults with Mr. Karger and their business associates.

The release for this spectacular photoplay, Mr. Rowland stated on the eve of his departure, has been set for April.

It will be the first of the new series of big Nazimova productions of big stories produced in a big way. All of the picture, Mr. Rowland said, will be made in California. They will be the most elaborate series ever undertaken in the annals of the screen. They will even excell Nazimova's first series, he says, and will be produced without refernce to speed and with attention given to the minutest detail.

"The Red Lantern," he pointed out, will be a good example of what the famous actress will do in this new series. In strength of story, elaborateness of production, wealth of costume, lighting, setting, direction and photography, it will establish new standards in the industry and advance the art of the screen twenty-five years.

It is a tale of great sweep and power, painted in bold colors, and not only gives Nazimova the finest opportunity she has yet had for a display of her great versatility, but provides her with a background even more atmospheric and picturesque than "Revelation" or "Eye for Eye."

It was produced at a cost of a quarter of a million dollars. Among the massive and striking sets is a faithful reproduction of a famous Pekin street, with its dwellings, shops, temples and bazaars and the historic throne room of the Emperor.

Three New Christie Comedies Are Described

CHRISTIE FILM COMPANY announces that the titles of its three latest single-reel Christie comedies are "Brides For Two," "Oh What a Night" and "Hard Luck," directed respectively by Wm. Beaudine, Al E. Christie and Scott Sidney.

In "Brides for Two," Ethel Lynne, Earl Rodney, Roscoe Karns and Dorothy Dane are the prominent players. It is described as a diverting story of a bachelors' card club, and the reticence of the members to admit that each—being alleged women haters—was backsliding and contemplating marriage, leads to an amusing situation in which the bachelors become benedicts and their efforts to cover up their matrimonial adventures leads them into difficulties with their wives and hotel detectives. The story is by John D. Newton.

"Oh What a Night," with Bobby Vernon and Dorothy De Vore, is said to hit a popular chord in seeing the funny side of a "spook meeting." Bobby's entertaining adventures during the night which he had to spend with the Human Ouija Board, because he was engaged to a girl who believed in "spooks," should be a warning to young men who contemplate marrying into families who are addicted to spirits of this nature. The story is by Walter Graham.

In "Hard Luck," Ethel Lynne and Jay Belasco are presented as fond sweethearts. Jay and Ethel have their troubles in a rather amusing way, it is said. Robert Hall wrote the story.

"Marrying Molly" and "Apartment 23" are the Christie Comedies which will follow these three.

Rialto of Minneapolis Invades the East

George E. Luxton, associated with Sid Lewis of the Rialto Theatre Supply Company, Minneapolis, is making a trade tour of the Eastern and Central states in the interest of his concern.

And from all reports the tour is described as a most successful one. Mr. Luxton states that he has already placed several of the articles manufactured by the Rialto with many of the leading producers, laboratories, theatres and distributors.

Sid Lewis, President of the Rialto of Minneapolis, was at one time travelling general auditor of General Film Company, and later manager of their Minneapolis exchange. He afterwards organized a poster mounting company with shops in both Minneapolis and Chicago. This is still an adjunct of The Rialto Theatre Supply Company which was organized about three years ago.

The offices and display rooms alone occupy 12,000 square feet and the clerical staff in the office is composed of eleven persons. The exclusive agency for Motiographs throughout the entire Northwest is held by the Rialto.

A four story concrete building is planned to house all Rialto activities and it is said that an excellent location has been secured in the heart of the film district in Minneapolis.

The chief articles manufactured by Rialto that Mr. Luxton is introducing nationally at this time are: a shipping case which has met all requirements of the U. S. Government; a film patcher and rewind; a novel film band and about fifteen other articles calculated to be useful to the trade.

A handsome 200 page catalogue, profusely illustrated on heavy cream enameline paper, is issued by the Rialto. Mr. Luxton goes from New York to Philadelphia, Washington, Pittsburgh, Cleveland and Chicago before returning to Minneapolis.

Percy Uses Bruce Scenics Regularly

H. L. Percy, of the Rialto theatre, Medford, Ore., writes to Vice-President E. W. Hammons, of the Educational Films Corporation of America, that he is a regular user of Robert C. Bruce scenic pictures, and that he finds them far superior to any other material of the kind available in his territory. Mr. Percy has just acquired two other theatres in addition to the Rialto, and says that the 'Educational" single-reel attractions are to be featured in all his houses.

Big Eastern Plant for Famous-Lasky

With the expectation that the cameramen will be "shooting" before next Summer, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will start work soon on a gigantic producing plant to be located in Long Island City.

Two entire city blocks have been secured for the new plant, one block housing the studio and the other the laboratories. A glass covered stage and one large open air stage will be included in the studio equipment in addition to offices, dressing rooms, etc. The laboratory plans have been laid out under the supervision of Frank Meyer.

The new plant, which will be fifteen minutes' ride from the heart of the city, is being built with the intention of giving those stars of the company who cannot go to California producing facilities equal to those provided on the West Coast.

Ralph Kohn, assistant secretary of the corporation, has been in charge of the search for a location for the new plant.

Great Record Claimed for Frank E. Woods

A LOS ANGELES film man declares a record that has not been paralleled in annals of motion picture industry history, has been made by Frank E. Woods, the supervising director of Paramount Productions made at Hollywood studios, in that Mr. Woods has supervised the making of no less than 570 motion pictures since 1914.

A great number of the most successful film plays released to date came to the screen after supervision by Mr. Woods.

Supervising means all the word implies, and Mr. Woods has had his advisory say in every picture he has been connected with from the selection of a story down to the cutting, assembling and editing.

This surprising number of pictures supervised dates back to 1914 and to the Reliance and Majestic companies, which flourished under the guiding hands of David W. Griffith and Frank E. Woods. With these pictures were those known as Masterpictures, distributed by the Mutual. Now for more than a year and a half the big majority of the Paramount productions have been made under his supervision.

Five hundred and seventy pictures is cited as furnishing a fine record, and appearing in them are some of the following artists: Mae Marsh, Robert Harron, Dorothy Gish, Norma Talmadge, Douglas Fairbanks, Wallace Reid, Bryant Washburn, Henry B. Walthall, Ethel Clayton, Constance Talmadge, Lloyd Ingraham, De Wolf Hopper, Sir Beerbohm Tree, Vivian Martin, Jack Pickford, Sessue Hayakawa, Fred Stone, Lila Lee, Fay Tincher, Rozika Dolly, Bessie Love, John Emerson and a host of others.

From present indications, it is claimed that Mr. Woods is likely to double his five hundred and seventy productions within a like period—it is five hundred and seventy "odd" already.

Kin Hubbard, creator of "Abe Martin" in Universal Screen Magazine

Joe Brandt Cites Prosperity of the Serials

THREE months of studying conditions in various parts of the country, visiting with hundreds of exhibitors, exchangemen, editos and critics has convinced Joe Brandt, head of Universal's serial department, that the serial market is better today than at any time during the past four years.

Mr. Brandt returned to New York Monday from Universal City after supervising the starting of "The Red Glove," featuring Marie Walcamp, and "The Midnight Man," which will introduce James J. Corbett to the screen. Mr. Brandt spent over six weeks at the studios and the remainder of his time visiting exhibitors in various cities and in studying conditions and in creating ideas for better exploitation of Universal serial productions.

Just prior to returning to New York Mr. Brandt selected the type of story he has found most suitable for Eddie Polo's next serial production, deferring his selection until he had visited many cities to learn what sort of a serial exhibitors and public desired to see Mr. Polo featured in. The title for the new serial Mr. Brandt refused to divulge but stated that he was confident it would prove the best vehicle the star has ever had and that in all probability it would be eighteen episodes in length.

In practically every territory visited, Mr. Brandt states, he found serial conditions proving and a demand for the continued films increasing steadily as the warmer months drew near. Mr. Brandt has predicted that this spring and summer will see serials given a wider distribution than at any time since the idea of showing continued films was first conceived. In the West and Middle West, exchanges have recorded a record number of bookings on "The Lure of the Circus" and "The Red Glove" according to Mr. Brandt and adds that exchangemen have already received numerous requests for bookings on the Corbett serial, which is not scheduled for release until May.

Hodkinson Has Zane Grey Films

Announces Distribution of Famous Author's Pictures as Second of Four Big Lines of Product

THE new Zane Grey pictures, made by the author's own company and with his cooperation, are this week announced as the second of the big new lines of product to be handled by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation in forthcoming months.

This announcement follows closely on the heels of the recent news concerning the alignment with the Hodkison Corporation of the Augustus Thomas-Harry Raver-George Irving-Leah Baird series of features. It is hinted that it will be followed in the near future with other announcements of equal interest in keeping with the Hodkinson policy of confining its energies to four big lines of product of the "special" type.

News of the plans and activities of the Zane Grey Pictures, Inc., have already been published, but the identity of the organization chosen to distribute these new pictures has been withheld until the present time. The Zane Grey Pictures Company is the author's own company; the books of Zane Grey will be used as the basic material for the productions, and the author himself will cooperate in the making of the pictures. To a greater extent than has ever before been attempted, this company will produce the books of this famous author, not as some director thinks the books ought to have been written, but exactly as the novels were conceived and put in literary form.

The Zane Grey Company is now working on the first production of the series, a picturization of the author's novel, "Desert Gold." The part of Dick Gale is being played by E. K. Lincoln. Casting for this production has been carried on both in the West and the East. One of the latest additions, for instance, is William Bainbridge, seen in "Hands Down," "God's Country and the Woman," and many other pictures, who in "Desert Gold" takes the part of the rancher, Belding. The rest of the cast has been just as carefully chosen.

Benjamin B. Hampton is president of Zane Grey Pictures, Inc.; Van Campen Heilner, one of the editors of Field and Stream, is associated with him. The man mainly responsible for the organization of the Zane Grey Company is Eltinge F. Warner, owner of Field and Stream and Smart Set, who "discovered" Zane Grey when he was a struggling writer nearly a dozen years ago.

T. Hays Hunter is in charge of the direction of "Desert Gold." Mr. Hunter has directed many successful screen dramas, his latest being "The Border Legion," another Zane Grey story. The New York offices of the corporation are at 3 East 44th street, and are in charge of Charles A. Weeks, treasurer of the company.

E. K. Lincoln, star of the S-L Production, "Virtuous Men"

S-L Installs Special Service Bureau

Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, sponsors of "Virtuous Men," the first Ralph Ince Film Attraction, starring E. K. Lincoln, will put into effect with the release of this production the theory that "no picture—no matter how good it is, sells itself." A special service bureau has been installed at the S-L offices to give direct aid to exhibitors presenting "Virtuous Men."

Publicity material tied up direct with the important points of the production, the director, the star, etc., has been prepared. A new idea in the matter of lobby display has been worked out for the benefit of exhibitors. Several of the illustrations making up this display are from original paintings by Clarence Underwood, Gustav Michelson, R. G. Morgan and other famous artists. A new service of color combinations has also been used for the lobby photographs. A diversified number of cuts suitable for newspapers, magazines, programs, etc., embracing the star, the biggest moments in the drama and reproductions of the paintings by the artists mentioned above, will be available. A comprehensive press sheet has been designed containing only matter essential to the exhibitor in selling his entertainment. Every line in this press sheet has been carefully weighed from the standpoint of the showman's actual requirements.

The executives of S-L Pictures have to their credit several years' experience in the production, exhibition and exploitation of films, and are thoroughly conversant with the requirements of the exhibitor.

All Foreign Rights Sold on Garson Feature

"THE UNPARDONABLE SIN," starring Blanche Sweet and personally directed by Marshall Neilan, has been sold for the entire world outside the United States and Canada, by Harry Garson.

This is the big ten reel special that adopted the very unusual method of having its premiere in Detroit instead of New York or Los Angeles.

Of the many territorial buyers that made a quick trip to Detroit when the enthusiastic reports began coming in was Bobby North. Mr. North and Lawrence Weber own the Apollo Trading Company in the Long Acre building, New York City.

According to all reports Bobby North saw the picture exhibited at the Broadway-Strand in Detroit and ten minutes afterwards managed to secure a short option for all the foreign rights. He declared that the picture was not only a positive knockout for this country but that it possessed that other peculiar and very essential International angle.

To show how determined Mr. North was in closing the deal at once the producers cite his quick trip to the telegraph office and then to the long distance telephone and then finally to the fastest train direct to New York from Detroit.

He stated that the deal was so stupendous that he felt he should see his partner Lawrence Weber before finally closing it. But Mr. Weber was on a fishing trip in Florida, and apparently was out in the only available boat when finally located, but he could not be reached in time to close the deal before the option expired, according to report.

Bobby North then boarded a train back to Detroit and closed the deal on his own personal responsibility for his concern and secured all foreign rights for the Garson production.

Mr. Garson then went to Los Angeles where he will personally supervise the Los Angeles opening of "The Unpardonable Sin," at the Majestic Theatre starting March 31 at $1.50 top admission price.

Cites Interest in Timely Film

The Lenten season is witnessing extraordinary activity in the Vitagraph branch offices in connection with bookings on the five-reel feature, "From the Manger to the Cross."

This pictorial presentation of the life of Christ from his birth in Bethlehem to the final tragedy on Calvary, has received the endorsement of the Christian clergy of all denominations. The fact that this is the only picture ever taken in Palestine and Egypt stamps it as the one film portrayal of the life of Christ worthy of the highest recognition of the public.

"Better 'Ole" Scores

The following wire was received by Ricord Gradwell, President and General Manager of World Film Corp., from a representative of World Pictures in Chicago:

"With a steady rain all day, 'The Better 'Ole' opened at the Rose theatre Monday to the best Monday business the house has done in months. The combined receipts of two other houses in the same block owned by the same people and playing pictures of best known stars failed to equal 'Better 'Ole' business by one hundred dollars. One of our best known newspaper critics after looking at the picture summed it up by saying it is such great fun of strange fashion that it has a distinct appeal that is of lasting quality."

Priscilla Dean in "Amazing Wife"

IF you are going to show "The Amazing Wife" you want to take the fullest advantage of the title, but at the same time avoid adding any comment of your own that is suggestive of the wronged girl stuff, for there is nothing of the sort in the picture. Here is the case of a girl who does commit a fraud, but the sympathy of the audience will be with her from the start because the circumstances are such as to more or less justify her.

Here the appeal should be mainly in telling the people that this is a startling story, or at least indicating that, and the sex appeal, as such, should be entirely omitted. Tenseness, the romance and the unexpected turnings of the story are the things to which you should call your patrons' attention. Once you turn from this and get into an appeal to what is usually recognized as the sensational, you are going to weaken the power of the advertising to those who want to see unusual pictures.

Of course you will use striking illustrations in your advertising and here is a case where there should be a scene from the production, but be sure that it is one in which the figure of the star is brought out prominently and one that is suggestive of the dramatic qualities.

THESE are the main points of the story: Cicely Osborne consents to marry John Ashton, a laborer, who has made money by his brawn, but who hasn't risen above the lower level, simply because her mother is dying for lack of food and medicine. But this husband is repulsive to the girl, and even when he tries to kiss her at the marriage bureau she shows how she loathes him. Then after the ceremony they go to a cabaret for their wedding dinner and immediately the husband starts to flirting with a be-painted woman. The result is to arouse the jealousy of her male companion and a fight follows in which Ashton is killed and a waiter tips off Cicely to make her escape before the police arrive so that she will not be dragged into the affair.

She goes home to find her mother dead. We are told these things in flashbacks for the picture opens with the girl seated by a lake in the park, determined to end it all. But at the moment she picks up a paper and sees the announcement that Lieut. John Ashton, the only son of a millionaire, has been killed with the American army in France. She sees the opportunity of ending all her troubles by posing as the widow of this John Ashton. Taking with her the newspaper and her marriage license she goes to the splendid home of the Ashtons and there she is readily received by the young officer's parents as his widow. To make things all the easier Claire Winston, who had been young Ashton's fiancee, becomes her friend and companion.

But there is one who fathoms the girl's secrets, Philip Ashton, a cousin who attempts to use her secret to gain his own ends.

THEN there comes the startling development when Lieut. Ashton turns up at his home. Though he has been badly wounded and is still suffering from his hurts there had been an error in reporting his death. His greeting with Claire shows the audience that she is the girl that he loves, so it can be imagined how he receives the statement of his mother that his wife is upstairs.

But in the time that she has posed as the son's widow Cicely has established herself as really a daughter in the affections of the mother and has nursed her through the shock that came with the news of the young officer's death. This is apparent to John and rather than destroy this feeling by denouncing her at the moment, he takes the girl in his arms. And then they proceed to have to carry out the play so as not to undeceive the mother and at the same time not to be husband and wife.

Their actions convince Philip that the girl is paying the price to John so that he will not expose her. The first clash between the two cousins comes with a sneer of Philip when John refers to the girl as his wife and there is almost an encounter but she begs John not to strike because Philip knows the secret.

FULLY determined to go away at the first moment, Cicely agrees to meet Philip at a road house in order to beg him not to reveal her secret, but there he grows offensive and demands that he pay him for his silence the same way that he believes she is paying John. In anger she leaves him, but later he repeats his threats until the jealousy of John (who is now coming to love the girl) is aroused and he goes to his cousin's apartments with the demand that his attentions cease.

But still Philip persists and he and Cicely chance to meet in the woods and there when she again spurns him he seeks to attack her. But the suspicions of John are now aroused and he follows the girl and comes upon them just in time and then the cousins fight, with the result that the soldier's wounds are reopened. He is carried home and believing that he is about to die demands that the ceremony of the church be performed to seal the civil ceremony, and there they are married. Of course, John recovers and they are very happy—the true story of the alleged first marriage is never known.

WHEN you start to lay out your advertising on this make up your mind to devote at least half of the space to the cut. If you are able to design your own displays, so much the better. You need then the name of the star and the title in the biggest type that your space will allow. You can afford to come along with the selling arguments in smaller type for it is pretty certain that there will be enough curiosity aroused to cause them to be read.

Here are a couple of them:

"She had a husband that she didn't want. But he was killed on the very night of her wedding. Then she was alone and there was nothing left for her but the lake. She had determined to leap in and end it all when she picked up a paper and found that a rich man of the same name as her mate had been killed in France. What would be easier than to pose as his secret bride? How was she to know that the news was all a mistake and that the young officer was going to show up at home in a few weeks? What do you suppose she did then?"

"Cecile married a man that she loathed that her mother might live. His kisses were repulsive to her, and there was only one of them. She fled from the brawl in which the bridegroom was killed to find her mother dead. She was alone, penniless and hungry and the deep waters appealed to her. Then there came a chance—to claim that she had married the son of a millionaire who had been killed in France. What a wonderful girl she must have been to so win the mother that when the man she claimed to be her husband came home alive that he was willing to accept her to save his mother pain. That was just the start of Cecile's problems. There was another man who sought to profit by her secret. He didn't—and no one ever knew that she had stolen a name. The reason why is the call for you to see 'The Amazing Wife.'"

WE would omit the "You" stuff with this picture. There is no occasion for asking what "you" would do under these conditions. It is sufficient to state the facts in an impersonal manner. The problem, if well outlined, brings itself sufficiently close to the person to make the answer something sought after. Now let's get a little stronger punch at the public:

"She was married three hours and her husband lay dead because he had tried to flirt with another woman. She loathed him, but vengeance was in another's hands. But she was alone and penniless. There was one thing—she thought to do—and the lake lay before her.

"Then she picked up a paper. Dead in France was a young officer of the same name as her husband. His parents were rich and they had a wonderful home. She had a marriage license bearing his name. Why shouldn't she go tell them that she was his secret bride and claim sanctuary there.

"She did and she proved a wonderful daughter to the old lady who thanked the saints that her dead boy had at least left behind such a solace. And when, as one out of the shadows, there came back to her from France the son, alive, but terribly wounded, with what delight she called for his bride.

"And he claimed her—why? He didn't know whether she was an adventuress. He even loved another. And his cousin was heaping infamy on this girl who claimed to be his bride. But he knew that there must be something in the heart of a girl who could win the love of that wonderful mother of his——. And——

"Like mother, like son."

NOW at first blush these lines will be considered too long by the average exhibitor. They know that they have the name of the star and the title for their appeal and they devote only a few lines to the sales talk. But here is a case where you want to get the full appeal over. Of course there is a strong element that wants to solve the mystery of an absorbing sory There is another element that will be pulled in by the love element, but don't forget that there is a stronger appeal with every one of us when the mother element enters in It is worth taking additional space to get matter like this before the public.

But if you insist on getting the punch into a few lines, here are some of them:

"She had a marriage license bearing the name of a young millionaire reported killed in France. And she was a young widow of a few hours herself—married to a man of the same name. What was the use o troubles when she could claim a fortune."

"Lieut. John Ashton, millionaire's son was reported killed in France. She was Mrs. John Ashton—a bride three hours be fore her husband had been killed—in a brawl. It was easy for her to claim to be the secret bride of the millionaire. But hi death proved to be quite an exaggeration Then the story really starts."

"John Ashton came back from France severely wounded. He had been reported dead and his parents were in mourning fo him. But there was the light of victory in his eyes and he expected to claim his affianced for his bride. What was he to do when 'his wife' was presented to him. H didn't denounce her as an impostor. O course there was a reason, but it would b unfair for us to tell you the reason why.

Three-sheet at left; six-sheet in center, and one-sheet at right will all furnish cut-outs

Special Appeal Should Be Made to the Women Here

YOU should take the fullest advantage of everything that Mary MacLaren means to the people of your section when you play this production. You can tell your people that the producers say that this is the best picture in which she had ever been seen and then call their attention to some of the best of the others that you have shown at your theatre.

Mary MacLaren was practically an unknown when she had a small part in "Where Are My Children?" but since then she has been discovered and some of her most recent successes have been "Shoes," "Bread," "Vanity Pool" and "Creaking Stairs." It is a peculiar thing that she owes a great part of her success to members of her own sex and if you print a house organ or use circular letters we would call particular attention to this, directing the letters to the woman of the household.

Try a form letter along these lines:

"Mary MacLaren is a favorite with everyone, but she is distinctly a woman's star—not particularly in her appeal, but because of her career. When she was playing a small part in "Where Are My Children?" she was discovered by Lois Weber, the first woman to score a hit as director of motion pictures. It was Miss Weber who developed her talents and brought her prominently before the motion picture world.

"Another great woman director—Ida May Park—then took charge and she has been responsible for the most recent success of Miss MacLaren. Miss Park shows her talents at the very best in her arrangement of "The Amazing Wife." It will thrill every man, but it really takes a woman to understand why Cecile posed as the wife of a man she believed killed on the battlefields of France, why she won the love of her mother-in-law and how she was able to make her dreams come true.

YOUR OWN IDEAS

THESE Special Service Section are written with the purpose of suggesting to exhibitors how to get the most out of pictures that he has booked. They are prepared after studying the pictures and the best way of exploiting them. Wont you let us know any use that you made here and the original ideas that you have used in putting over this picture of any others.

"We want your opinion—that of a woman—on this picture. Bring the men along, and if they don't enjoy every bit of it—well, they have no use for a woman."

Instead of an elaborate lobby display we would use very largely pictures of Miss MacLaren together with scenes from the production and then on the sides of the lobby and on the street we would have huge exclamation marks in black on white, with a circular face of the star forming the period at the bottom and then the title of picture appearing down the length of the exclamation. There should be no further explanation offered in the lobby.

Cut outs of Miss MacLaren can be made from the 24-sheet and others from one of the one sheets. These should be prominently displayed, preferably hanging from the ceiling, and there should be flower effects through the lobby, real ones if you can afford to use them. This suggests romance, and marriage. If they are not available, palms and other potted plants will add a dainty flavor. It is because that these indicate that there is something out of the ordinary in the picture and that they give class to the lobby that we would suggest their use, for with such a background anything of the cheapness of the exclamation point idea is taken away.

We would omit anything of the stunt order here because it will tend more to cheapen the appeal than to bring the sort of business that the attraction warrants going after.

"THE AMAZING WIFE" is a tense drama and therefore there should be a comedy balance to this bill if you run more than one picture. If you have a full bill there should be a soothing scenic with plenty of clever titles in it to follow the overture.

It struck us when we saw this picture for the first time that there was something about it that suggested the old time music. Miss MacLaren here has the role of a girl who is pure and clean in thought and action—for she plays a part so far removed from any of the frivolous of her sex that one is impressed by it, even though she does start the plot off by pretending to be the widow of a man she had never even seen to escape the hardships of life.

If you are going strong on the music we would suggest that you use the best of the old music. For instance, "Gems From Stephen Foster," consisting of Southern melodies or "Old Time Waltzes" would supply a splendid overture.

As a musical prelude to the picture itself we would use the rose garden effect with a girl seated singing "Then You'll Remember Me" or "Bonnie Sweet Bessie" or any of the old favorite love songs. A more modern note can be brought in with "Kiss Me" from "Mlle. Modiste."

In the musical score prepared for this picture "The Song of Songs" is suggested as the theme, and it is a good one, and therefore it is all the more appropriate to use the higher class of love music for solo and orchestral numbers.

Chicago Gets a Double "Scandal"

Stage Version of "Scandal" Gives Big Impetus to Select Re-issue of Screen Production

REPORTS from Chicago state that with the Messrs Shubert advertising Constance Talmadge in one of her old Select Pictures, "Scandal," in which she is presented by Lewis J. Selznick, in order to put over their own stage production at the Garrick, and Select's Chicago exchange working double time to take care of the re-issue bookings at the first-run houses, "Scandal" has literally taken that city by the ears.

"Scandal" was Constance Talmadge's first Select picture. It was written by Cosmo Hamilton. Several weeks ago the producing firm of Lee and J. J. Shubert placed "Scandal" in rehearsal for a stage production. The piece was taken to Chicago and opened at the Shuberts' Garrick theatre.

Immediately Select's Chicago Exchange got busy booking re-issues of the original screen version.

Lubliner & Trinz re-booked "Scandal" over their entire circuit, the Lakeside, Ellentee, Pantheon, Pershing, Oak Park, Vitagraph, Biograph, Paramount, Knickerbocker, Covent Garden, Michigan and West End. As soon as the Lubliner & Trinz management took account of the interest the combined advertising of the picture and stage play had awakened, they booked "Scandal" at the Lakeside for seven days, instead of the original three days.

This seven-day booking at the Lakeside established two records. It is the first time in the history of the Lakeside that any production has played for a solid week, and it is said to be the first time in the history of any Chicago theatre where a re-issue has been booked for an entire week.

In addition to the Lubliner & Trinz houses, Select's Exchange then booked the attraction for seven days at the Star theatre in the down-town district, thereby establishing another record in that it was the first time the Star had booked a re-issue for a seven days' run, and the second time that a re-issue had been booked for a solid week in that city.

Marion Davies, Select Star, Is Presented in "Getting Mary Married"

Close onto the Star contract and the Lubliner & Trinz bookings, came an order for play dates at each of the fourteen Ascher Brothers' theaters, including the Chateau, Terminal, Lane Court, Milford, Metropolitan, Kenwood, Oakland Square, Peerless, Cosmopolitan, Columbus, Adelphi, Calo, Frolic and Midway.

Each day public interest in "Scandal" is said to have grown greater. The Shuberts were using big space in the Chicago dailies to advertise their stage production at the Garrick, and all of the picture houses were going in for big advertising to get the benefit of the Shubert space.

It soon developed into a battle for space between the big New York producers of the spoken stage version, and the Chicago exhibitors of Select's original screen attraction.

Both sides were reported as doing a big business. People were said to be attending the stage version at the Garrick and the following night were going to one of the picture houses to see how Constance Talmadge played "Scandal" on the screen.

W. E. Atkinson Enjoys Luncheon by Proxy

ALL that W. E. Atkinson needs now is a finger-bowl, a serviette and a toothpick—the toothpick being, of course, distinctly American. The luncheon he has already enjoyed a la Christian Science.

Mr. Atkinson, who is the business manager of the Metro Pictures Corporation, received the other day in his regular stack of mail a copy of the menu distributed at a luncheon given at the Cafe Francais the 9th of January, in Melbourne, by the directors of Co-Operative Films of Australia.

The menu is a novelty in itself, minus the many tempting dishes set down within its cover, and Mr. Atkinson promises to preserve the folder carefully with his most treasured souvenirs. In the first place, it is uniquely patterned with an ornamental cover design headed "Complimentary Metro Luncheon," and in the neat little slots cut for the purpose of inserting the name of the individual guest is the name card of "W. E. Atkinson."

The directors of Co-Operative have certainly arranged a most pleasing program, including the toasts and music, and in glancing over the responsible officers' names we find Mr. O. R. Flecker, chairman; Alec Hellmrich, general manager; W. W. Gudgeon and G. F. Garden. Mr. Atkinson naturally feels that these gentlemen are to be congratulated on their taste in the selection of dishes fit for a King—or a President.

Opening the folder the guest beholds an array of mysterious concoctions of the cuisiniere, each named after a Metro star of one of their many triumphs of the screen. The whole is a worthy tribute to the merit of Metro and its productions.

Shows That Americans Look to Mexico

E. V. Richards, of the Saenger Amusement Company of New Orleans, has forwarded to New York an interesting document that proves that a great curiosity on the part of the American public concerning the real appearance and character of Mexico and its people remains to be satisfied. The Board of Directors of the New Orleans Association of Commerce has drawn up resolutions requesting motion picture producers of America to encourage the exploitation of the favorable side of Mexico, rather than the constant exploitation of Mexican bandid life and other unfavorable phases that are detrimental to the best interests of the two countries.

George D. Wright has supplied two more of his series of single-reel productions describing "Mexico To-day," which have been completed for distribution by the Educational Films Corporation of America. "A Day with Carranza" and "What Is a Mexican?" are the titles of these newest subjects.

In the last five years there have been very few American photographers in Mexico. With the exception of Mr. Wright's negatives, practically all the film descriptive of Mexican life that is now in this country was exposed before the military disturbance that called the boys to the border in 1913.

Says "Our Teddy" Draws Strong in South

"Our Teddy" is drawing heavily in the South, according to reports emanating from McClure Productions, which is distributing the Roosevelt picture through First National.

From Texas and Kentucky came reports that Colonel Roosevelt's exploits on the screen are attracting large audiences and intense enthusiasm.

At the Hippodrome, Dallas, Texas, and at the Princess, Bowling Green, Ky., it is declared that the picture broke all attendance records, drawing audiences from all classes of people, including the non-movie goers and the anti-Sunday opening crowd.

Pearl White is acknowledged adept in the art of character make-up. She appears thus in the Pathe serial, "The Lightning Raider"

World Announces Film from Riley Poem

World Pictures announces for early distribution a picturization of James Whitcomb Riley's famous poem, "Little Orphant Annie," in which Thomas Santchi and Coline Moore are the stars. This photoplay was made by Selig and the negative purchased by the Pioneer Film Corporation. The World, appreciating the merits of the picture and the widespread publicity attached to it through Riley's immortal poem, purchased it from the Pioneer Film Corporation, who intended to put it out as a state right feature. The price paid for it by the World was such that it influenced the Pioneer Film Corporation to withdraw it from the state right market, but not until after they had sold the rights to the city and state of New York and northern New Jersey. If James Whitcomb Riley had written nothing else but "Little Orphant Annie" he would have gone down to posterity as one of America's greatest poets. There is hardly a school child in this country who is unacquainted with the story of the little orphan girl immortalized by the "Hoosier" poet, and this fact alone should give the picture an appeal that shows big results at the box-office.

Priest to Handle Blackton's "House Divided"

J. Stuart Blackton has appointed Robert W. Priest sales agent for his latest feature "A House Divided" from the book by Ruth Bouccicault. Sylvia Breamer, Herbert Rawlinson and Lawrence Grossmith are the principal players in the production.

The method of distribution has not been decided.

Foreign rights have already been disposed of, Bech Van Sichlen & Co. taking over the production for the entire world. L. C. Wheeler, until recently London representative for W. N. Selig, will be in charge of the sales end for the export house.

"Bill" Duncan Keeps Up Series of Thrills

WILLIAM DUNCAN in the prize Vitagraph serial thriller, "The Man of Might," in which he is supported by an all star cast including Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan, has been responsible in the past number of weeks for considerable goose-flesh on the backs of motion picture theatre audiences, but it seems that Duncan is never satisfied or is it that Albert E. Smith, the Vitagraph president, and Cyrus Townsend Brady, who write the Vitagraph serials, are the men to blame?

At any rate, word comes from the West Coast studios that despite the unending risk of life that Duncan has already registered, the later episodes of "The Man of Might," go beyond anything that he has so far attempted.

In the tenth episode, for example, Duncan puts in a double thriller by way of good measure. As he and the heroine are driving an automobile through a deep ravine, the villains, at the top of one of the cliffs, blow off a giant boulder which plunges down into the ravine, barely missing the automobile, and blocking Duncan's exit.

And then, when this thrill has been delivered, the spectators will be treated to a second feat of daring, when Duncan stands by and blows up the obstruction in order to free himself and his companions from the trap.

Duncan has had his entire company out on the Pacific Ocean, somewhere off the harbor of San Pedro, getting marine scenes for the final episodes of "The Man of Might," and while heavy seas have been running all week, wireless reports state that splendid progress has been made.

Universal Productions Big in South America

THAT Universal productions are enjoying wide distribution in South America, Europe and the Orient is clearly brought out in the announcement of the Universal's export department. Relating the success of Universal productions in foreign lands the export department reports that despite the signing of the armistice "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin" is proving one of the greatest drawing cards ever provided exhibitors. In South America, Europe, in China, India, Straits Settlements, Philippine Islands and in Australia the Julian production is not only being rapidly booked by theatremen but is establishing new box office records with regularity. "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin" began a third week's showing at the Gaumont Palace, Paris, March 16 and throughout France has booked like wildfire according to reports from the Paris agency. In Buenos Ayres, Argentina, and in Valparaiso, Chile, the Julian production recently played several weeks to extraordinary business. In Valparaiso when the film was shown a band of pro-Germans stormed the theatre and created such a disturbance that the police reserves were called to prevent a clash between the pro-Germans and pro-Allied civilians who were in attendance at the showing. The incident was given wide publicity and as a result exhibitors all over Chile were quick to book the film. In Australia and India the film has been enthusiastically received.

"The Heart of Humanity" has not been shown outside of North America as yet but it is expected that the Campoamor theatre at Havana, Cuba, considered the largest and most beautiful theatre in the West Indies, Central or South America, will open early in April with the big Jewel production as its initial attraction.

Allison Completes Metro Production

May Allison has completed "Orchestra D-2," her newest picture, following "The Island of Intrigue" and "Peggy Does Her Darndest," at the Metro studios in Hollywood.

Considered Ince's Best Production

S-L Productions Declares "Virtuous Men" Is Great—Tells of Director's Achievement in Film Industry

RALPH INCE, who personally directed "Virtuous Men," has to his credit many of the most successful film attractions of the past few years. Ince is one of the real pioneers of the motion picture industry. He began his career with the original Vitagraph organization more than ten years ago. Prior to his entrance in the world of pictures, Ince was a well known actor of the legitimate drama. He will be remembered by millions of photoplay fans for his many characterizations during the early Vitagraph days. He is accredited with portraying the immortal character of Abraham Lincoln more realistically than any other artist of contemporanious times. Ince rapidly developed into a director of prominence while with the Vitagraph organization. During his long stay with that company he produced a long line of successful feature productions. Under his personal direction such successes as "The Wreck," "The Combat," "The Juggernaut," "From Headquarters" and other tremendous photoplay spectacles were made. He is responsible for the introduction in films of the present-day star, Anita Stewart, and personally produced many of her successes. He is one of the few motion picture directors whose achievements have been great enough to warrant the organization of a special company to present a series of productions bearing his name. Seeking the opportunity to enlarge the scope of his activities and put into effect many advanced ideas, Ince will produce a series of Ralph Ince Film Attractions. The first big screen entertainment bearing his name is "Virtuous Men." It stars E. K. Lincoln, contains a cast of celebrated stage and screen players, and is said to be the biggest film melodrama ever made. Speaking of the inaugural Ralph Ince Film Attraction, "Virtuous Men," Mr. Ince recently had the following to say relative to the picture which will have its initial presentation at the Fulton theatre on Sunday evening, April 6th:

"I consider 'Virtuous Men,' every scene

of which was made under my personal direction, the supreme achievement of my career. For many years I have had certain ideas relative to production of a real screen melodrama. Due to certain circumstances, I have been unable to put them into effect up to now. Surrounded with a perfectly equipped organization, I believe the first Ralph Ince Film Attraction to be the biggest thing I have ever done. It is a melodrama of the fast moving type with society atmosphere, wonderful settings and a series of spectacular effects which out-do anything of the kind I have ever attempted. I gave seven months of undivided attention to the personal direction of this production. I wish to stamp it with my personal assurance as being the biggest photoplay melodrama ever offered to the motion picture public.

"I believe in the production of 'Virtuous Men' I have incorporated every element necessary to photoplay melodrama of the most realistic type. The swiftness of the action, the tensity of the many dramatic situations and the spectacular scenes with which I have embellished the story throughout, form what is to my mind perfect screen entertainment."

"Virtuous Men" will be shown at the Fulton theatre on Sunday evening, April 6th. This date will mark the first of a series of special productions which Ralph Ince will personally direct for the S-L organization.

Producer Applies Suggestions From Patrons

AN announcement from the Brentwood Film Corporation states that the company had a very definite purpose in offering prizes for public opinions regarding the particular note of appeal in "The Turn in the Road" during the eight weeks' run of that picture in Los Angeles.

That purpose was to determine whether or not the very film-sophisticated public of Los Angeles wanted pictures that offered more than mere artistic entertainment, pictures in short which presented food for serious thought and which in their very humanness and the truth-to-life of their stories also presented common-sense suggestions of an uplifting character, applicable in the daily lives of every one of those who viewed them.

"The Brentwood people believed that the picture public did want such pictures," the statement continued, "and if the public wanted them, they as producers proposed to shape their future production policy accordingly. Some five hundred people who saw 'The Turn in the Road' sent in to the company their offerings for the contest.

"The opinions were of an unusually high quality and they found one great outstanding note of appreciation for a picture which, as many of them expressed it in so many words, 'touched our hearts and made us Think.'

"Firmly believing that the photoplay will develop to be the biggest power toward the improvement of the intellectual and moral standard of the human race, and realizing that its messages, teachings or suggestions toward that improvement will be effective exactly in proportion to the heart-touching and life-like art with which they are presented, the Brentwood corporation now feels itself to be publicly supported in its policy of concentrating production upon that type of story which has 'something to it.'"

American Film Buys "Six-Feet-Four"

Jackson Gregory has sold the screen rights to "Six-Feet-Four" to the American Film Company, Inc. This story has been published serially in the All Story Weekly and had just appeared in book form.

Mr. Gregory has a long and brilliant record as newspaper man and story writer. He is the author of "Under Handicap," "The Outlaw," "The Short Cut," "Wolf Breed," "The Man from Painted Post" and numerous other well-known novels and photoplays.

William Russell, alias "Big Bill," will star in the production, which is said to be peculiarly well fitted to his splendid physique and animated screen style. Stephen Fox is preparing the scenario, and Henry King, Russell's special director, will boss the production.

Fred Bolls Entertains Minnesota Prisoners

Through the courtesy of Fred Bolls, an exhibitor-member of United Picture Theatres operating the Majestic theatre, Stillwater, Minn., the inmates of the Minnesota State Penal Institution at Stillwater were entertained recently by a screening of "Adele" in which Kitty Gordon is starring for United.

The Mirror, the Institution's inmate edited newspaper, devotes an editorial to the attraction and dwells on the beneficial enjoyment accruing to the audience from the presentation of "this wonderful picture," paying a tribute to its plots as being "different, unlike anything that has been presented in just the same light before," and eulogizing the direction, and the attractiveness of Miss Gordon.

Buys "Unpardonable Sin" for New York State

After securing all foreign rights to Harry Garson's ten reel production starring Blanche Sweet and under the personal direction of Marshall Neilan, Bobby Nort met his partner in New York after he had just returned from Florida.

His enthusiasm is said to have impressed Mr .Weber so much that they saw a few prominent theatre men around New York and organized another company to buy the rights to "The Unpardonable Sin" for New York state.

A New York opening at a principal theatre with $2.00 top admission price prevailing is now declared to be an almost immediate possibility.

Eugene Mullin Engaged by Universal

After recently resigning as scenario editor of the Vitagraph Company, Eugene Mullin signed a contract with Universal and left for the Pacific Coast Wednesday, March 26, to assume charge of the scenario department at the big producing center.

Mr. Mullin has been connected with Vitagraph for over eight years and is one of the best known men in the film industry. As Mr. Mullin has studied conditions within the industry from all angles, is said to be well acquainted with leading authors and a recognized authority on cinema values, Universal believes that in engaging him to supervise the preparation of future stories for its screen productions that it has obtained a man who will do much to assist in the carrying out of a recently adopted policy of giving Universal stars more suitable stories, and better vehicles.

Three Episodes of Serial Assembled

The three first episodes of the new serial which is being made by the Western Photoplays, Inc., for release on the Pathe program, have been assembled and titled and are now ready for release, announces A. Alperstein, treasurer and general manager of the organization.

The present title of the serial is "The Great Gamble," co-starring Anne Luther and Charles Hutchison. It is being produced under the personal direction of Joseph A. Golden, widely known in the serial world.

"The Great Gamble" is said to be entirely different to the regular type of serial. The story is an original one by Mr. Golden, who is said to have made big strides from the beaten track.

Feminine Appeal Promised in Gordon Picture

United announces that Kitty Gordon's next feature, "Playthings of Passions," possesses a strong feminine appeal.

Among the items said to be worn by Miss Gordon in this production appear an ermine coat valued at $15,000, a fan of ostrich plumes valued at $5,000, a rope of pearls valued at $100,000, earrings valued at $20,000, and bird of paradise feathers valued at $1,000.

Miss Gordon's gowns and hats are said to be of her own design.

Hart Breaks Record in Los Angeles

William S. Hart in "Branding Broadway" broke the week's attendance record at the new California Theatre, Los Angeles, according to Harry Leonhardt, one of the owners, in just six days. This feat is considered the most remarkable box-office record in Los Angeles motion picture annals in view of the fact that "Bill" had to compete with the strongest drawing cards possible to book during the last three months.

Alma Rubens Completes Picture

Star Returns to Screen in "Diane of the Green Van" for Exhibitors Mutual

ROBERTSON-COLE announces the return to the screen of Alma Rubens in a new photoplay produced by her own company, Winsome Stars Corporation.

Her first starring vehicle under her own management. "Diane of the Green Van" is about ready to be put on the market by Exhibitors Mutual. This is the picture produced from the story by Leona Dalrymple, which met with such popular appeal that a Chicago publishing house awarded the author a $10,000 prize.

Every opportunity the photoplay art offers for high class productions was taken advantage of by Miss Rubens' company in producing "Diane of the Green Van." From a technical viewpoint, the picture is declared to be of the highest calibre.

When the print of the Rubens drama was received at the headquarters of the Robertson-Cole Company, it was shown for Miss Dalrymple, author of the story, who lives in New Jersey. She was immensely pleased with the faithfulness with which her story had been taken from the printed novel and reproduced on the screen.

In Miss Rubens, Miss Dalrymple asserted that the very character she had penned as her heroine appeared in real life. No other actress she could recall on the screen today would have filled the role of Diane Westfall as did Miss Rubens, in the opinion of the young author.

It is the policy of the Robertson-Cole Company to show each production before the executive forces of the Robertson-Cole and Exhibitors Mutual. Following each showing a frank discussion is held, and any meritorious changes suggested are adopted.

After seeing "Diane of the Green Van," Assistant General Manager Kirkpatrick of Exhibitors Mutual, in judging the production from a sales angle, declared it one of the best he had seen in months.

"This picture contains everything to recommend it as a splendid feature," declared Mr. Kirkpatrick. "There is more romance in it than is usually crowded into two pictures. The public likes romance. It likes the actress who loves romance, and in 'Diane of the Green Van' Miss Rubens is offered a role which could hardly be more romantic.

"Then there is conspiracy aplenty to lend drama to the production, and on top of that there is some of the most remarkable photography I have ever seen on the screen. The direction of Wallace Worsley is all that could be desired, and a little more."

Albert Ray and Elinor Fair Picture Released

IT has been reported that exhibitors everywhere have manifested a great interest in the announcement made some time ago that William Fox was going to star Albert Ray, with Elinor Fair as his leading woman, in a series of the sweetest stories ever told.

"Married in Haste" is the title of the first one recently completed and now released at all Fox exchanges.

According to an announcement by the Exhibitors Service-Bureau of the Fox Film Corporation, "Married in Haste" fully lives up to the plans William Fox has made for this group of pictures. It is described as a clean, lively, wholesome comedy, breathing the joyousness and love of life of youthful America, and fitting in admirably with the season of spring, romance and general happiness.

Mr. Ray plays the role of Sam Morgan, a youthful millionaire, whose spendthrift habits and happy-go-lucky outlook on life have been a constant source of worry to the aged trustee who has charge of his fortune. Miss Fair is seen as Constance Winwood, and the comedy opens with the marriage of Morgan and Miss Winwood.

Indignant because the careless bridegroom has forgotten the wedding ring, the young bride persuades the old trustee to shut off her husband's income, and the couple start their honeymoon with $10.30.

The events that occur on their trip and money, form excruciatingly funny comedy, the announcement states.

Special Service Section on

"Diane of the Green Van"

THIS is a story that depends largely on the intricacies of the plot and if you are booking this you should arrange your exploitation along the mystery lines and at the same time give prominence to the star, Alma Rubens.

This story involves princes and an imaginary kingdom, but we would be mighty careful the way we phrased the exploitation touching that because you are liable to leave the impression that this is a costume picture, when as a matter of fact, every scene of it is laid in America and the time is today.

Romance and adventure are both strong elements of this picture while the title itself gives a suggestion of the mystery idea. Therefore the title should be prominently played, second only to the name of the star and then you should tell just enough about the story to arouse the curiosity. Give a considerable share of your newspaper display over to a picture of Miss Rubens, preferably one of those showing her in riding habit or seated in the door of the green van.

DIANE WESTFALL is the heiress to the Westfall millions, yet she has a young girl's craving for adventure. She tired of her home and the unwelcome attentions of Carl, a drunken cousin, and decides to go out into the world for herself, a green van elegently fitted up being her vehicle and her own companion a man servant. She ignores the pleadings of her aunt and makes the start into adventure and romance with keen anticipation.

But the one idea of Carl in his attentions to the girl is to get possession of the money and scarcely has she left when he discovers a paper hidden in a candlestick that he accidentally breaks, that appears to show that she is the heiress to the throne of Houdania and not to the Westfall fortune. And at the moment that he makes this discovery there are in this country the Prince and a Baron of Houdania, each on different missions, but both of them on the trail of Diane whom they, too, feel sure, is the heiress to the throne. The Prince is carrying out his own plans but the Baron enlists the services of his friend, Philip, a young American, to follow Diane and get all the information possible about her.

With these three different sets of men on her trail there is a series of mysterious situations that keep the spectator guessing, for the Baron and the Prince are not clearly disassociated until the end of the picture and the part that Philip is playing is not clear. It is for that reason that we would hesitate to publish the full story of the picture in the news columns, for it will spoil some of the patrons' interest.

SHORTLY after Diane has made her first stop for the night in her green van she is startled by a shot, which is fired by the Prince and she is being followed by Carl. It is then that Philip comes into the story and instead of working against her he promptly falls in love with her and assumes the role of her guardian angel, though the girl herself is unaware of the fact.

Foiled in his efforts to kill the girl so that he himself may take the throne of Houdania the Prince determines that the only way to achieve his ends is to marry her. These adventures continue, Philip becoming all the more smitten and finally telling her of the true character of the Houdanian Prince. But the mystery of the whole thing is that Diane herself doesn't know whether it is true that she is really heiress to the Houdanian throne—though she much prefers to remain in America as the heiress to the Westfall millions.

Her wanderings in the green van take her to Florida, where she meets in the Everglades, the daughter of Mic-co a mysterious character who has spent thirty years of his life with the Seminoles and who is regarded as a seer of things. There are further complications when at a ball at the winter resort the Indian girl and Diane change costumes so as to confuse the Houdanians. But in the end the mysterious old man reveals himself as the real heir to the throne of the little country, that the girl is his daughter and that he has come away to escape the position.

Then it is revealed that the Prince has come here to kill the heiress, that the Baron is seeking her in good faith, to give her the position that belongs to her—and, of course, that Carl is after the money. The only thing that Philip seeks is Diane herself and he wins her in the end after a charming love scene.

Diane is certainly pursued by the men in this picture. At the left there is the Emissary from Houdania, and in the center the green van, the girl and the man who has fallen in love with her, and at the right she is shown in a scene with the cousin, who seeks her fortune

At left Diane goes for advice to the strange man who has lived for years among the Seminoles of Florida; in the center there is a scene at the dance at one of the big Florida hotels, and at the right, Diane and the "Indian girl"—who is the real princess

How to Get the Most Business From Star Appeal

THERE is the spirit of adventure in everyone and even the most timid of us like to imagine what we would do if we started out all alone in the world to experience the thrills that come along. And when you get away from the spirit of violence, you are interesting the women as well as the men. It is for that reason that we would build the selling talks on "Diane of the Green Van" along these lines.

If you are making your own cuts let us use in the big Sunday announcement the picture that shows Diane seated on the steps of the green van and then a selling argument along these lines:

"Diane has oodles of money and she could have bought most anything that her heart desired. But she was weary of society and its people and she wanted real adventure. So she turned lone gypsy and in her green van started out in the world to seek new thrills. And she found them. for there was a mysterious foreigner who wanted her life, there was another who wanted her as a queen for her country, a third man who sought her fortune, and a fourth who—but that would be telling. The best part of it is that you are just as mystified as Diane until the whole story is solved for you."

Or this one:

"Most girls who have millions would hire a private car or buy a yacht and take their friends along with them to enjoy their travels. But Diane was eighteen and she was tired of society. She wanted to see what the world looked like and to get its thrills. So she fitted herself up a green van and with no one to accompany her but a servant she started off toward Florida. But adventure was on her trail, and romance, too, and you'll have many a thrill with her and delight in the perfect ending."

HERE is another one that suggests even more of action and mystery:

"This girl with the beautiful eyes sought only happiness alone in the world, and she bought herself a green van and started out on the trail of adventure. But she didn't know that she was followed by four men:

"One sought her fortune.

"Another her life.

"The third would claim her as the heiress to a throne.

"And the fourth wanted—and wait until you see what he got.

"If you have dreamed of romance you'll find your dreams come true here."

This reproduction of part of the twenty-four-sheet suggests cut-outs for the lobby to feature the star's personality

And another:

"'I am tired of the city and the lights, I want to hear the voice of the open country.' And so Diane Westfall forgot all about her own millions, hired herself a green van and a couple of horses and started out. She found that there were a lot of things happening in the 'open country' that she has never even dreamed of. Mystery stood before her on every hand; danger waited to trap her, peril was all about—but there reached out of the wilderness something that drove them all away. It's good to thrill when you can be happy at the end."

THEN here are some shorter ones that still keep the story in suspense:

"If you were a beautiful girl of eighteen which would you rather be: The queen of an honest to goodness country or the possessor of several millions of good American money? These two things were in the balance with Diane Westfall and the adventures that she has before a still bigger decision confronted her will keep you on the edge of your seat."

"A beautiful girl traveling all alone in a green van—that suggests adventure, doesn't it. Then there was a man on her trail that wanted her money and another who insisted that she was a real queen. How in the world could she be saved? Well, there are some men in the world who wanted nothing but—and you'll be just as pleased as Diane was at the end of this photoplay."

"Heiress to millions she turned a lone gypsy and all sorts of adventures came to her in her green van. If you like to be mystified and delighted at the same time and to find everything 'just lovely' at the end, you cannot afford to miss this one."

BE sure to make it plain in all your selling talks that everything comes out all right in the end—that it is a happy picture. You can give the public just as much mystery as you like provided the right things happen, and we wouldn't hesitate to indicate in every advertisement that this is one of that sort.

If you are using considerable space in your newspaper advertising, it would be well to mention the names of some of the supporting cast. Nigel Barrie is the leading man while Lamar Johnston, Wedgewood Nowell and Harry Van Meter have prominent roles.

Suggestions are made elsewhere in these pages for devoting the greater part of the lobby display to pictures of the star. Here and attractive picture of the girl in Indian costume can be obtained from the three-sheet at the left, a picture of her in riding costume in the six-sheet in the center and the one-sheet at the right furnishes another different figure

Adventure Spirit Should Be Always Kept Dominant

STAR appeal is to a considerable extent what you make it. It does not consist in merely putting the name in big letters in front of your theatre and in your advertising, but in bringing out the appeal of the personality of the player. Where you have a woman of beauty this is made all the easier for you.

This is the first feature in which Miss Rubens has been starred since making her new connections, and if you intend to show this series of features we would advise you to start in right now to connect her name right up with your theatre. This is made all the easier and all the more effective because you have a beautiful woman with whom to deal. Don't figure simply on this one attraction, but on the others that you expect to play.

While she is a comparatively new star she is well known to photoplay followers because of her appearance with Douglas Fairbanks and many of the former Triangle male stars. Later she was starred by that company, but now she has an organization of her own and is to be seen in a series of offerings that, we are told, will bring out all of her talents. In booking pictures, you have to more or less get over the appeal of the player for your own patrons, and here is a chance to start.

MISS RUBENS is a California girl and she started in with pictures with the Triangle company. At first she played smaller parts and then she was seen as leading woman with Fairbanks in "Reggie Mixes In" and "The Half Breed." She also played with Wm. S. Hart and other of the prominent stars, and there her work attracted so much attention from the critics that she was herself featured in a number of offerings by Triangle, including "The Passion Flower" and "The Gown of Destiny." Success of these offerings led to the formation of her present producing company.

Well in advance of the showing of this first of her special releases we would advise printing a picture of her on the cover of your program, with the line:

"The girl with the wonderful eyes."

Then follow this up by telling something about her. There is a story in the press sheet that will be suitable for this use or for the newspapers.

Then come along with a letter something like this:

"We get a lot of letters from girls wondering how they can get a start in motion pictures. Alma Rubens got hers by going around to the Triangle studios out in Los Angeles and looking for small parts. She got them and soon she was in demand of the stars who wanted mighty good looking leading women. Douglas Fairbanks and William S. Hart are two of them who drafted her to add beauty to their productions.

"Shortly after that she began to be featured and now she is starring in real productions. We have heard a lot of you talk about how wonderful she is on the screen and how much better you have thought her than this or that star. Now you have a chance to see her and decide whether your judgment has been right. At least we have had so much confidence in Miss Rubens and have been so charmed by her beauty that we have signed for her pictures.

"Won't you tell us how you like her? We feel confident of your answer."

ESPECIALLY if your ticket booth is in the center of your lobby convert this into a green van such as is shown in the stills and have the tickets sold through a window in the side. Get a quantity of real Florida moss and hang it in masses from the ceiling, and if you cannot get this use imitation stuff together with palm trees and other Florida suggestions.

With this as the background we would distinctly make it an Alma Rubens lobby. On the first page we have reproduced the right hand third of the 24-sheet. This gives you a splendid cut out of the head of the star. One of the three sheets will give you a cut out of the girl and her sweetheart, and in the six sheet you can get another of her as she appears in riding costume. One of the one sheets gives an almost full length figure of her. We would advise that these be mounted on heavy cardboard and that they be used with the background of the Florida moss. If you are not able to convert your ticket booth into the van as we have suggested there is another three sheet that will give you a picture of the girl seated on the rear of this van.

In addition to this the stills from the picture should be featured. These are attractive and the eight 11 by 14 pictures and the two 22 by 28 will attract attention. If you have a collection of Alma Rubens' photographs there should be a special display on these. If you haven't, start saving the stills from this picture and all the others that come to hand so that you will be able to get the fullest amount of attention to the other attractions in which she appears.

There isn't the slightest doubt that the pulling power of a star rests to a considerable extent in the confidence that you show in her by your exploitation. We believe that a straight Alma Rubens appeal will get a lot of people into your house.

William Desmond Starts "Whitewashed Walls"

The Jesse D. Hampton production starring William Desmond, and to follow "The Prodigal Liar," is entitled "Whitewashed Walls."

It is a photoplay adaptation by George Elwood Jenks of a magazine story by James and Ethel Dorrance and is really a burlesque on life in a Latin-American country.

It has to do with an American globe trotting sculptor who obtains work in this funny little republic and who because of an overzealous Fourth of July celebration, gets in wrong with the powers that be.

"Tempest and Sunshine," Print by Rothacker

In view of the unusual campaign carried on to establish the quality trade-mark of Rothacker, J. Frank Hatch considers it of interest to state rights men and exhibitors to know that the laboratory work on his feature, "Tempest and Sunshine," is a product of the Chicago laboratories. Watterson Rothacker has definite quality standards for the acceptance of work, as evidenced by his handling only of such subjects as the First National releases, and the assurance is thus carried of clear prints on "Tempest and Sunshine."

L-Ko Manager Coming to New York City

Universal announces that Louis Jacobs, general manager of the L-Ko Komedy Ko at Hollywood, Cal., will arrive in New York shortly following a visit to various large cities of the West and Middle West for the purpose of learning what the public likes best in motion picture comedies.

Mr. Jacobs will spend some time in the East before returning to California, Julius Stern, president of the L-Ko Company, who has been in California since the first of the year will remain at the studios until Mr. Jacobs' return.

Johnsons Bound for South Seas

Representatives of Trade Gather at Luncheon to Bid Exploring Filmsters Farewell

CLOSE to a hundred representatives of the picture industry were gathered at a luncheon in the College Room of the Hotel Astor last Monday to bid farewell and "good luck" to Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson as they started on their second trip to the South Sea Isles in search of out of the ordinary screen material.

Harry Handcuff Houdini presided as toastmaster at the festivities, while the speakers included Chic Sales, Alex Beyfuss, John W. Blackwood, and Treasurer Clark of the Exhibitors-Mutual. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson responded gracefully to the bouquets that just showered at them.

A representative of the Smithsonian Institute, Washington, cheered up the affair with the news that warfare on the cannibal isle that is the Johnsons' destination had just made necessary the intervention of a gunboat and the killing off of some hundreds of the dusky skinned inhabitants. The cheer was found in the fact that with a few hundred in the happy hunting ground the chances of the Johnsons to return alive were increased proportionately.

In outlining his plans for the next subjects to follow the present successful releases, Mr. Johnson declared that one of his chief desires was to secure a picture of Chief Nagapate looking at himself in motion pictures. He promised not to let the chief return to this country in the hopes of securing a regular job in Hollywood.

In view of the unusual success of the Johnson subjects a bit of ironical humor was injected into the affair by the film man description of the rejections his ideas had first been given by motion picture men. "The fans don't want that sort of stuff," they had told him.

In closing Mr. Johnson paid a sincere tribute to the encouragements and aid he had received from Alex Beyfuss, of the Robertson-Cole organization.

Several Appointments Announced by United

WILLIAM T. BUTLER has been added to the staff of special representatives of United by J. A. Berst. Mr. Butler's initial work will be in the New England territory with which he is especially familiar since his entry into the film business some years ago as salesman for the Vitagraph Boston office.

In this capacity and also as a Vitagraph representative in southern Illinois, Mr. Butler is said to have made an enviable record. The new appointee will not be permanently assigned to any territory, but will be sent from time to time to points in the United Circuit as special need may arise.

Ben Abrahams has been engaged as a United salesman in the St. Louis territory. Mr. Abrahams who has a large exhibitor acquaintance in that country, spent a week in the New York office before leaving for his new post.

M. E. Maxwell, of the United Minneapolis office, has been called to New York as assistant to Charles Johnson, United New York manager. Mr. Maxwells promotion to headquarters is a recognition of able work in the Minneapolis territory.

E. J. O'Donnell, Central Division manager, is now operating in the Dallas Exchange territory, and will devote special attention to the Texas, Southern Arkansas and Oklahoma territory, in connection with the membership drive now in full swing by United.

Lester D. Wolfe has been appointed by President Berst as manager of the United Buffalo office. Mr. Wolfe was for several years Buffalo manager of General Film Company Exchange. Homer Howard, formerly United manager in that city, has been appointed to special work in the Buffalo territory for the United drive.

Conrad Nagel Male Lead With Alice Brady

SELECT Pictures announces that in Alice Brady's forthcoming production of "Redhead," the star will be supported by Conrad Nagel. He is now the leading man in her stage production, "Forever After," now in its twenty-seventh week on Broadway.

Miss Brady and Mr. Nagel, owing to their close association in Miss Brady's stage production, are thoroughly familiar with each other's style of acting, and it is for this reason that Miss Brady selected Mr. Nagel to support her in her forthcoming screen attraction. Mr. Nagel is said to be one of America's most accomplished young leading men, and according to reports from the studio, he is equally capable as a screen actor.

"Redhead" is a story by Albert Payson Dowst, which appeared in a recent number of one of the popular magazines. It was adapted for the screen by Charles Maigne, who is also directing the production, thus making the fifth Alice Brady production for which Mr. Maigne has written the scenario as well as directed.

The story of "Redhead" is about a dance hall entertainer who succeeds in getting one of the wealthy patrons to marry her at a time when he is under the influence of liquor. On the "morning after" both realize what a mistake they have made. Matt, the husband, threatens to divorce his wife, but Dazie proceeds to get him "illuminated" again, and then takes him to her apartment to sober up. Matt's uncle hears of his escapade and stops his allowance, so with nothing to gain by leaving his wife, Matt decides to go to work, something he has never done before in his life.

There are said to be a number of thrilling moments in the picture, and an unusually new and different conclusion. Charles Stevenson also has an important part in the picture, and the other members of the cast are Robert Schable, Charles Eldridge and May Brettone.

Arrow Sells Some More Territorial Rights

Arrow Film Corporation, besides selling to the Variety Pictures Corporation, two pictures, have sold to Silee Film Exchange of Chicago the 6-act picture "The Hearts of Men" starring Mlle. Valkyrien, and have also sold the serial "The Demon's Shadow" to Montreal buyers for all Canada.

The Arrow has taken on 6 pictures in the past five weeks and are enlarging their sales force and to take care of the added business have engaged new offices with projection suite which they will occupy after May 1st. The company also contemplate the opening of exchanges at three points in the U. S. where there is a need for Independent exchanges.

The Fords for April

Goldwyn announces that the four subjects of the Ford Educational Weekly for April entertainingly mix the lighter phases of life with the more serious picturizations.

The-one-reel-a-week releases are as follows: April 6, "Cut It Out," a story of plate glass-making; April 13, "Northern Sports Under Southern Skies," polo, hydroplaning at the Florida resorts; April 20, "Good Roads," a camera drama of roadmaking; April 27, "A Visit to New Orleans."

Market Street, Philadelphia, a Simplex Street

Lewis Swaab, Simplex distributer in Philadelphia, announces the installation of Simplex machines in the Princess theatre on Market Street.

With this installation completed, Market Street has now become Simplex-ized, since up to this time the Princess was the only house still using other than Simplex machines.

"Crimson Gardenia" Follows "The Brand"

"The Crimson Gardenia" will be the next Rex Beach drama following that author's "The Brand." "The Crimson Gardenia" holds every promise of equalling the impression made by the drama of the Yukon, and at the same time revealing another phase of the author's story-telling genius. As a novel it has steadily increased in popularity since its publication three years ago, and to-day still holds its place among the best sellers.

Work on the production is progressing at the Goldwyn Studios in Culver City under the direction of Mr. Beach and Reginald Barker, who contributed his directorial skill in adding to the box-office magnetism of "The Brand."

Guinan Story Starts

Production work of the two-reel western dramas for the Frohman Amusement Company and starring Texas Guinan, was started last week at a studio in Hollywood where activities will continue until work of remodeling the old Metro studio, recently leased by William L. Sherrill, is completed. The first story to be filmed is titled "South of the Santa Fe," and Cliff Smith, the director, and Jack Sherrill, who is to manage the business affairs of the company, have selected George Chesebro and Jack Richardson as principal supporting players together with a troop of twenty-five cowboys and girls.

Realism in "Checkers"

Director Richard Stanton, who is producing "Checkers," the famous racing play, for William Fox as a big special attraction, is said to be a stickler for realism to be injected in his pictures.

It is reported that Ellen Cassity, who plays one of the leading roles in the production, was painfully injured by a broken goblet in the ballroom scene last week.

Nazimova Wears Expensive Costumes in Picture

In her production of "The Red Lantern," to be distributed by Metro. Nazimova is said to wear robes of regal splendor.

Richard A. Rowland and Maxwell Karge, who present the Russian star in the production now being cut and assembled at the Metro studio in Hollywood, declare that more than $50,000 have been spent in costumes for this production which they state is highly elaborate.

For Mahlee, the half-chinese, half-English girl played by Nazimova, bears a not remote resemblance to France's Joan of Arc. True, she leads a hopeless cause, that of the Boxers against the Europeans in China.

And her heart is torn between the love she bears for an Englishman and the ancient traditions of the yellow race.

Territorial Sales Corp. Gets Under Way

The Territorial Sales Corporation, with offices at 1600 Broadway, got under way last week with the shipment of prints on the first three Jester comedies to eighteen film centers where they will be shown to prospective buyers before allotting franchises.

"In the Wild West," "Peace and Riot" and "The Tenderfoot" are the initial trio.

It is also stated that Territorial Sales has completed a deal for the handling on the state rights basis of one of the biggest feature productions produced in recent months. Other subjects will follow.

Current Nesbit Picture, "Thou Shalt Not"

Evelyn Nesbit's current picture under the William Fox Standard group, is "Thou Shalt Not," and the star portrays a country girl, who is led astray by an unscrupulous lover.

The picture was directed by Charles J. Brabin, and in it Miss Nesbit is declared to have one of the strongest roles which she has enacted, and ably supported by a cast which includes Ned Burton, Florida Kingsley, Gladden James, Crawford Kent and Eddie Lawrence.

Many of the scenes of "Thou Shalt Not" are laid in a small New England village.

"Ginger" Coming in May

A five-reel feature entitled "Ginger" is announced by World Pictures as due for release in the month of May.

Gareth Hughes, Violet Palmer and Paul Everton are the stars, and it is described as a story of love and adventure. Raymond Hackett appears in support, and it is announced that a very capable cast interprets all the roles. Burton George directed the picture, as well as being responsible for the story. Raymond Schrock prepared the continuity.

The three stars are all said to have enjoyed a very successful stage career.

Making Memphis a "Week" Picture Town

First National Exhibitors Circuit has called attention to an accomplishment credited to one of its releases, "Virtuous Wives," starring Anita Stewart.

This motion picture, it is cited, has been the cause of longer runs in the Tennessee city, which formerly considered four days a long time to exhibit a film on consecutive days.

No doubt this is the first instance on record where an exhibitor has been forced to re-book a picture as a hold-over on threat of having his lobby wrecked by angry fans who had stood in line outside the theatre waiting to get in.

THEATRE patrons in Memphis, Tenn., recently took the management of the Majestic theatre there away from C. A. McElravy, and gave other local managers a severe jolt in a public demonstration of their attitude toward motion pictures.

Until this happened Memphis was known as a four day town. Now it has given evidence that when it is offered something it wants seven days is not sufficient to exhaust its possibilities for profit.

It was no prearranged demonstration of mob anger that was tendered McElravy by a struggling, pushing crowd of several thousand men and women who literally stormed the lobby and street in front of the Majestic. The trouble started after they had waited impatiently for a full two hours for admission to the house the last night of a five day run on a special. Those at the front of the long lines quickly filled the house to capacity for what had been advertised as the last show. The doors were closed and, so far as the management was concerned at that moment, the next activity was to complete plans for the new program to start the following day.

But the crowds had gone beyond the ordinary limits of patience in the displeasure they felt over their inability to get into the theatre. Several men in the lobby began to make excited speeches. The vein of their remarks was decidedly bitter toward McElravy.

"Why didn't he make an announcement, two hours ago, that he couldn't get us all in? Why has he let us stand here like a lot of boobs?"

Some one else shouted:

"What does he think we are? It's a damned shame the way we've been treated. Why don't they build theatres big enough to take care of people. We've stood in line nearly two hours. Now we can go home and thank the Majestic for a rotten evening."

"Open those doors, we'll get in," yelled someone out on the sidewalk. "Break them down if you can't open them."

"Get the manager out here or we'll wreck the lobby," roared the man who had just reached the box office window, money in hand to buy tickets, when the curtain was pulled down. The crowd caught his spirit and in an instant half a dozen lobby frames had been overturned and trampled. "Smash the lights," he cried, suiting the action to the word by waving his cane overhead. At this moment McElravy appeared.

"We want to see this show," called a dozen voices. "You've kept us standing here all evening. There are enough of us here to make trouble and we're ready to do it. You can't get away with this."

McElravy is a showman with lots of experience in judging the public mind. He didn't need but a moment to see that the crowd was in a temper. The damage, if any was attempted beyond what had been done, would be completed before police aid could arrive. There was no mistaking the sincerity of the crowds. They were remaining for a purpose. Either they would see the show or they would vent their anger in violence.

"Just a moment, please," McElravy shouted at the top of his voice. "Keep quiet just a moment. I can't let any more of you in tonight, but I am going to hold the show over for two days. That'll give you all a chance to see it. Get back in line and buy your tickets for tomorrow or the next day. I promise every one of you that you'll get in, and have seats. I'll mark every ticket that is sold here now and give it preference over any that are sold tomorrow or the next day.

"Get back in line, take it easy and don't crowd. You'll all see the show. I'm holding it for two days more. I"——. He got no further. The crowd was busy buying tickets. But despite this promise of McElravy's many of them went away grumbling, tickets in hand.

"My God," gasped McElravy, once more back in his office. "Get the Big Feature Rights Corporation of Louisville on the phone for me, quick. Quick! Do you hear me? I want to talk to Lee Goldberg, the manager. If he isn't there find out where he is. Oh boy, I'm a cooked goose now unless Goldberg comes through. Wowee, hurry that call. Tell Long Distance to charge it double, BUT GET HIM QUICK."

"What's the trouble?" asked his assistant.

"Oh, nothing. I've just promised about twenty thousand yelling mad men and women that I'd hold this picture for two days more to give them a chance to see it. They're still buying tickets outside for tomorrow and the next day. AND I DON'T KNOW THAT I CAN HOLD THE PRINT. IT'S PROBABLY BOOKED SOMEWHERE ELSE. If I don't hold it I am going to be mobbed when they come back tomorrow to see the show. If I hold it despite another booking for it, I'll lose my franchise. Oh, boy, hurry that call."

The telephone bell rang. McElravy had the receiver to his ear in a flash.

"Hello, hello, Goldberg? Thank the Lord. This is McElravy, Majestic, Memphis. Yes. Say, I've got to hold this print another two days.

"What? Yes, yes, I know I told you that 'Virtuous Wives' wouldn't stand more than four days here. Yes, dammit, I know you convinced me that it would go
